The Suffering Poor.—Miss Annie Perram, secretary of the Mission of Help to the Suffering Poor, writes that among the distressing cases with which the Society is in touch is that of a young man threatened with consumption, under medical orders to go away for rest and treatment if his life is to be spared. His small weekly wage will entirely cease during his absence from home. For the sake of his delicate wife and two children, he has struggled bravely against failing strength. The winter claims upon the Mission have been specially heavy, leaving but little margin to meet special cases.

Tramore Y.W.C.A.—For four years the Y.W.C.A. has carried on with much acceptance a holiday home at Tramore, Ireland. Owing to the increasing numbers applying for accommodation, it is desirable that a larger house should be secured. One that will meet the extra demand has now been obtained, and the council are satisfied that "The Cliff" is particularly suitable for the purpose. Considerable alterations of course are necessary, and these, with extra furniture, repairs, &c., will involve an outlay of some £300. The home has been in the past a spiritual and physical blessing to numbers of Ireland's young women, and the council are hopeful that the response to their appeal will enable them to place the work on a self-supporting basis.

Scottish National Evangelistic Convention.—A preliminary conference was held in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, on Saturday afternoon last, when short addresses were delivered by Revs. Sholto D. C. Douglas, John M'Cracken, Messrs. Robert Logan, D. J. Findlay, and others. There was a large attendance of delegates from many of the surrounding towns and villages, and a general expression of interest was given regarding the coming convention in the opening days of April. It is already quite evident that the proposed convention, which is to be addressed by Dr. A. T. Pierson, Rev. J. M'Neill, and other leading soul-winners, will meet a felt want in the direction of stimulating the zeal and efforts of many who have been toiling on amidst much to discourage.

The Churches.

Church of England.

Dr. Ryle, Bishop of Exeter, has been transferred to the bishopric of Winchester, in succession to Dr. Randall Davidson, and is himself succeeded by Dr. Archibald Robertson, Principal of King's College, London. The Bishop of Newcastle (Dr. Jacob) goes to St. Albans, and is followed at Newcastle by the Bishop of Thetford (Dr. Lloyd).

The C.E. movement continues to make steady progress in the Church of England. At the last meeting of the Council of the Church of England Union of C.E. it was reported that four fresh Societies have been affiliated, and that others had been formed but had not yet joined the Union. The official organ of the Union, the Church of England Endeavourer, has again been enlarged. The last issue contains an excellent photograph of Rev. W. R. Mowll, with a biographical sketch and a picture of his new church, in addition to a number of interesting articles on missionary and other subjects. The editor (Rev. F. J. Horsefield, of Bristol) continues the series of "Side Lights on Holy Writ," and also articles on "The Endeavourer's Responsibility to his Church."

Congregational.

Rev. A. E. Garvie, M.A., B.D., of Montrose, has accepted the professorship of Ethics, the Philosophy of Theism and Comparative Religion, in New and Hackney Colleges, and will begin his work next session.

On Thursday evening a large and representative congregation assembled at Latimer Chapel, E. (Rev. J. W. Atkinson, pastor) to witness the public ordination of Rev. F. Parker, who is designated for work in the Ladysmith district of South Africa, under the auspices of the Colonial Missionary Society. Rev. J. Knaggs, presided, and Rev. H. Elvet Lewis and Professor Armstrong took part.

At a recent meeting of the officers of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, S.E. (Rev. F. B. Meyer's), it was unanimously resolved that a suitable memorial to the late Dr. Newman Hall be placed in the church, and that members of the congregation and others who valued his friendship and loved his work be invited to subscribe. It is suggested, with the approval of Mrs. Newman Hall, that an alabaster tablet should be erected, with a suitable inscription and a medallion bearing a profile.

The members of the Whitefield Memorial Church, Tottenham Court Road, N.W., have passed a resolution placing the church entirely in the hands of the London Congregational Union, and transferring the trust premises to the Union. It was also resolved "to request the Council of the London Congregational Union to use every endeavour to obtain the Rev. C. Silvester Horne to take up and carry on the work." These resolutions are now under consideration by the Special Missions Committee and also by Mr. Horne.

The manual of New Court Church, Tollington Park, N., for the present year has been issued, and the record of work done shows a satisfactory state of affairs. The mission-work at Lennox Road is particularly active, and the results have been most encouraging to those who labour in that sphere of usefulness. The numerous organizations of the church and Sunday-school are in active and useful progress, while the growth of the fellowship, despite the pastoral interregnum, is evidence of the vitality of the work to a degree which has cheered the officers and all who are interested. The membership now numbers 887, and during the past year the sum of £3,381 has been raised for various objects.

Baptist.

At Cavendish Church, Ramsgate, after a Bible Reading on "Salvation" on Sunday night last, to a crowded congregation, seven believers were baptized by the pastor (Rev. T. Hancocks).

Carey Hall Church, Leicester (Rev. A. H. Tolhurst), reports a growing membership, 250 having been added in five years. The Sunday-school has 645 scholars, and the Endeavour Society a weekly attendance of seventy. Mr. Tolhurst has been invited to take charge of a central mission, which has been started at Bradford, under the Bradford District of the Yorkshire Baptist Association.

On Monday and Tuesday last week Rev. Alexander Rogers, of the National Protestant Federation, delivered two limelight Protestant lectures in the Lecture Hall of St. John's Free Church, Tunbridge Wells, the pastor, Rev. J. Mountain, presiding. The hall was crowded on both occasions, and so deep was the impression made that Mr. Mountain has arranged for three more lectures by Mr. Rogers during next week.

At the church at West Vale, Halifax, Rev. A. Allan, of Manchester, has conducted a week's convention. The saints have been wakened and edified, and the whole district greatly stirred. Mr. Allan has proved himself mighty among the men, and his straightforward answers to their many questions has increased their confidence in the people of God. There are striking evidences that the church has received a powerful impetus.

The recent mission conducted at the Putney Baptist Church (Rev. F. J. Feltham) by Messrs. William Olney and F. Spencer Johnson with such signal blessing, was supplemented by a visit from the Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., on Wednesday, February 18, who preached to a large congregation on the text "He that is joined unto the Lord is one Spirit." Dr. Pierson's exposition of the two Epistles to the Corinthians produced a very deep impression upon his hearers. The awakening in the church continues to spread.

Methodist.

Though the tenancy of St. James's Hall by the West London Mission only ends in November, arrangements may be made to vacate in August, as the purchasers of the site want the hall in their hands as early as possible. It has been settled that the Mission will hold the Sunday services in Exeter Hall till the Wesleyan Church Centre at Westminster, with its great hall, is ready.

A remarkable "late" meeting was recently held at Newtown Row Chapel, of Birmingham Wesleyan Mission. The floor of the chapel was filled with a company of men and women, who awoke feelings of pity and amazement in the heart of the onlookers. Out of over 400 present only about fifty were women. The utmost reverence pervaded the whole proceedings, and the service showed the possibility of gathering into places of worship drunkards, harlots, gaolbirds, and every kind of moral wreckage. A publican himself had marched thirty-six men down from his public-house to the House of God, and at one point in the service he was heard to ejaculate, "Praise the Lord." After the service he made for Mr. Fletcher and said, "Come, shake hands with my squad," adding, "I marched them all through the streets and brought them here; it is not the last time we shall come."

In the annual report of the Leeds Wesleyan Mission, Rev. S. Chadwick relates the following:—"One of our workers was going along a street when, near a public-house, she saw a woman she had known some years before. She enquired after her daughter, with whom she used to be a work-mate. The woman told a sad story of waywardness and sin on the part of her child. She said, 'I'm waiting for her now; she's in there.' The désire sprang up within her to save the young woman. She had never been inside a public-house, and was very nervous, but with an earnest prayer she went in and pleaded with the young woman to come out. For reply, the girl struck her a violent blow with her fist, and knocked out her front teeth. But she held on, and at last succeeded in getting her out. She talked earnestly with her, and prayed for her salvation. The mother and daughter lived outside Leeds, and nothing more was heard of them till last Christmas, when there came a message from the girl's mother telling of her daughter's death. She had been different from that night, and during a severe illness spoke clearly and gladly of her confidence in Christ."

Presbyterian.

Dr. Norman Macleod conducted the quarterly Gaelic service in the Scottish Church, Crown Court, Covent Garden, W.C. It is proposed to raise a fund of £1,500 to place these services on a more permanent basis.

The fifteenth annual report of the church at Highgate, N.W., has just been issued. The roll of members includes 553 names. The total income of the church was £1,902. The congregation carries on a large amount of varied and useful work in connection with the Thrift Hall Mission.

The annual meeting of the Plymouth congregation was held recently. Rev. John Grierson, B.D., presided. There was a large attendance of members and adherents. The session report showed that fifty-two members had been added to the communion roll, and the total membership now stands at 204, an increase of thirty-one for the year.

The annual meeting of St. John's Wood, N.W., congregation (Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson) has been held. The report shows membership of 783 in the church and 156 at the Kilburn Mission. The total income for the year amounted to £8,550 1s. 6d. Dr. Gibson, in his opening remarks, called special attention to the great amount of work being done at Kilburn Mission, and to the inadequacy of the premises to the present requirements. He mentioned that the reconstruction of the premises is at present engaging the attention of the Session. Mr. W. R. Galbraith, in submitting the report of the work at Kilburn, stated that there were no fewer than 147 members of the congregation at work there in one way or another, besides those in the congregational school and at the Mission at Portland Town.

A correspondent writes regarding the Baptist Soldiers and Sailors' Society: "The two Bible classes at the Surrey depôt and in the London barracks continue to be blessed and owned of God. They are led by Rev. W. E. Wells, who is being now much encouraged. Scarcely a week goes by without some decision for Christ or earnest desires expressed by these bright young men to know God. For instance, a trained soldier came out splendidly; and immediately, to mark his allegiance to Christ, threw away both pipe and tobacco, and himself and wife rejoice together in God. Last week a fine young fellow asked if Mr. Wells would remain behind to pray with him. He has since written home to tell of his decision for Christ. Others are on the way to meet these young converts at Pirbright Camp. An iron room is to be erected (on land granted by the authorities) at a cost of £200.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. JOHN SMITH, who was officially connected with Chester Cathedral for nearly half a century, retiring from the position of chief verger last year. He served under three deans and five bishops of Chester, and had a lengthy association with Canon Kingsley.—On Lord's Day last, Rev. Dr. ROBERT M'CHEYNE EDGAR, minister of Adelaide Road Presbyterian Church, Dublin. Dr. Edgar, who was an ex-Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, had been in failing health for some time.—At Carryduff, Mr. ALLAN M'ILVEEN, treasurer of Carryduff Presbyterian Church and the last survivor of those who signed the call presented to Rev. S. D. Burnside, forty-nine years ago, aged eighty-six years.—At Belfast, Rev. S. D. BURNSIDE, Presbyterian minister, whose last public act was to preach the funeral sermon for Mr. Allan M'Ilveen just referred to, aged seventy-two years.

The Heel of Oppression.—A petition is being laid before the King from the high chiefs and natives of Fiji, telling of the oppression and cruelty they are called upon to endure, and comes as an unpleasant revelation. They have, it seems, no personal liberty, and are kept in a condition of abject slavery. In the course of the petition they assert that the administrative officials require them to cultivate their gardens, give them property, build their houses, supply them with food, make roads, &c. For all these duties, which are imposed on penalty of imprisonment, they are paid nothing, either in money or food. In the royal sanction to the federation of Fiji with New Zealand the natives see the only hope of being delivered from their condition of slavery. Mr. Humphrey Berkeley and Dr. Fox, representing the Federal League of Fiji, are at present in London, and are hopeful of securing the intervention of his Majesty, and the promise of justice for a community of his subjects who are rapidly decreasing in numbers owing to the intolerable wrongs which are being enforced.

Romanist Persecution.—Dr. Long's medical mission work at Limerick is still maintained despite opposition and persecution by Roman Catholics. One recent instance was in connection with an urgent request to attend a Protestant woman who was ill. A car was ready to carry him to the house, but the driver, when he saw the doctor, refused to take him, and he had to proceed on foot, finding the patient in a critical condition. Another case was that of a Protestant who sent for Dr. Long, but the patient occupied a room in a house belonging to Roman Catholics, and the doctor was refused admission and assailed with abuse. Since the refusal by the magistrate in 1901 to bind over a priest, who had led a mob to prevent Dr. Long visiting a Protestant man, also lodging in a Roman Catholic house, numerous cases of similar tyranny and persecution have occurred, and the car-boycott has been strictly enforced against the doctor and members of his family.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C. Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

* Messrs. Morgan & Scott receive, acknowledge in THE CHRISTIAN, and transmit, donations sent to them in aid of any accredited Societies and Missions. To avoid misapprehension, it is added that no charge of any kind is ever made on such donations.

Dr. Barnardo's New Undertaking. The story of Dr. Barnardo's Girls' Village at Barkingside, Essex, is not only an important chapter in modern philanthropy, but a powerful appeal to Christian sentiment. And when expressed in sacrifice, in the interests of the weak and defenceless, Christian sentiment is in fullest harmony with the Divine benediction—"It is more blessed to give than to receive." In the course of his article on page 21, Dr. Barnardo not only tells us something of the great usefulness of the Village Homes, but he intimates his intention to add some more cottages to the happy group. We trust none of our readers will neglect to make the story their own; and it will give us great joy to hear that, as a result of this appeal, Dr. Barnardo will soon be able to erect as many cottages as the development of his noble work requires. An interest in this undertaking, for the moral and spiritual good of little ones who have come into the world in conditions of misfortune and disadvantage, may well engage the minds and hearts of parents whose children have come to honour in the fear of God, of children who are grateful for Christian influence and training, and also of such as would raise memorials to friends who have entered into the rest of God.

The Voice of Spring. The first awakening of new spring life is unusually early this year. Already many trees are well developed in bud, and some in blossom, whilst the birds are preparing for building. God never fails us in this annual resurrection. If we were not so accustomed to its regularity, we should appreciate its marvel the more. Naturalists say poetically that "nature is singing." Where we think we encounter silence, there is really a glorious, never-ceasing concert. Nature is full of sound; but we miss most of it because we have not the ears to hear. Our organ of hearing, perfect as it is for its own work, is not sufficiently delicate to catch all the wonderful melodies that fill the world. Yet science assures us those melodies exist. And God hears them, for all things created sing to Him.

The Art of Hearing. There is an analogy here between the natural and the spiritual worlds. There are melodies of truth which millions of men never hear. The fault is not in the truth, but in men's sense of hearing. It is only the ear "wakened morning by morning" that can hear these things. So our Lord again and again reiterated His solemn word, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." "Take heed how ye hear." To comprehend the power and the beauty of spiritual truth, we must surrender our hearing to the touch of Christ.

The Length of Missions. From time to time we have remarked upon the desirability of missions in populous districts being extended beyond the customary eight or fifteen days. We are glad to observe, by Mr. W. R. Lane's list of engagements, that he is bringing this suggestion to the test of practical experience. His forthcoming Cardiff mission begins on March 28 and lasts till May 4, and is to include three ordinary periods of work following one another, with days of prayer intervening. This arrangement will allow of different districts being visited; and though, as the work moves from the circumference to the centre, the strain on the missioner will be very great, it is firmly believed that the results will be correspondingly encouraging and permanent. Mr. Lane will be glad of special prayer for blessing on this large undertaking, which will be watched with keen interest by those whose hearts are alive to the spiritual needs of the people.

What Unity can Accomplish. In looking over the programme of the forthcoming meetings of the Free Church Council at Brighton, we have been struck with the remarkable manner in which Free Churchmen of every shade have been welded together in one compact Evangelical body. A few years have sufficed to accomplish what is little less than a miracle. The scattered forces of a decade ago are now joined, and the impact of such a body is simply tremendous. Our only regret is that the Evangelical forces of the Church of England cannot in some way share in this common unity. For, after all, the Evangelical element is much more pronounced than the Free Church element, and there is common ground for all there. With Romanism on the one hand, and increasing indifference on the other, there is greater need than ever for a real, practical union of all Evangelical forces. Verbally there is union, but it lacks the chief thing—expression.

The White Slave Traffic. If anything will awaken the Government to prompt action on behalf of the young women who are systematically decoyed into what is half-politely called "white slavery," surely it will be such evidence as that given by Mr. W. A. Coote before the Royal Commission on Alien Immigration. On several occasions the horrible tale has been unfolded in these pages; but it must still be rehearsed. It is terrible to contemplate that at the very heart of the civilized world an organized, wholesale trade in woman's shame is being carried on, and that by foreigners. This is known, and yet the law is easily defied. Whatever be the ultimate finding of the Commission upon the Alien question in general, one thing is clear—this awful traffic must cease. When English people realize the truth, surely they will make their voices heard, so that this country shall no longer be the recognised exchange-ground in villainy. God forbid that we should ever become inhospitable to foreigners, but it is not inhospitable to resist the advances of vampires who come to suck the life-blood of our people.

Daily Bread. How comparatively few there are who ever think seriously of the possible conditions under which the necessaries of life, and the luxuries to which we have become so accustomed as to consider them necessaries, are produced! When our larders are full, and when at morn and night we repeat the petition framed by our Divine Master: "Give us this day our daily bread," how little thought do we give to the lot of those who have helped to bring the food to our tables! Surely the Lord never could have intended that we should selfishly pray for our needs to be supplied, if that had to be done at the cost of the well-being and health of our fellows. What matter for thought there is, therefore, in the evidence recently given before the Alien Immigration Commission, that, in London, bakers are working from 95 to 108 hours per week for maximum wages of 15s., or at the rate of seven farthings per hour, and that an official factory inspector does not hesitate to testify that such a condition of things is not "sweating!"

The Publican's Claim. Four thousand holders of licences in the Metropolitan area, and other persons immediately interested in the drink traffic, have gathered together to protest against any reduction in the number of licences "unless accompanied by full compensation to all interests involved." Naturally, the old fallacious arguments were urged, simply because there are no others available; and the opportunity was taken to hint to the taxpayer that the burden of providing the means of compensating these enemies of the social well-being could easily be borne by him. "Compensation should come by indirect taxation," suggested the chairman of the Central Board of "the Trade," or, in other words, the poor man's food must be taxed to maintain in idleness the retired publican and brewer.

"The Trade" and Government. In face of the decisions of the Courts as to the limitations of the licence, all this talk might be disregarded, were it not for the unpleasant fact that the brewer and the publican openly claim to have power to compel a Compensation Act from the Administration (described by one loudly-applauded speaker as "a Government which owed its existence largely to them")! And the danger in this matter lies in the fact that the question will be dealt with, not by great Christian statesmen, but by temporizing politicians who hitherto have bolstered up the drink traffic. Here is a subject for prayer and work, that God will "frustrate the knavish tricks" of men who can neither love their neighbours nor guard the honour of their country.

"Society" without God. The numerous revelations given in the Law Courts as to the state of morals prevailing in "smart society" indicate that the law of God holds as little place in the hearts and the lives of moneyed parvenus as it does in the hearts and lives of pagans. Mr. George W. E. Russell evidently did not err when he described this "smart" life as being even less moral than the life of certain savages. The degradation of slumdom, in striking our senses, repels us; but equal degradation at the other end, being perfumed and embellished, does not shock people so much. The class described is extremely difficult to reach. They are encased within their own set, and very rarely hear a faithful Gospel proclaimed. Social punishment, such as that just meted out by the King to a debauchée, does not touch the heart of the evil which seems to be rampant. It is evident that there is open to all Christian ladies and gentlemen moving in Society a field of service for Christ in the way of individual dealing with souls. We repeat the conviction expressed last week, that much may be done in this direction. It would be well for Christians to examine themselves whether they have used personal influence in the name of Christ among the members of that society in which they move.

Forces of Unbelief. The intellectual forces of unbelief seem to have been excited to vigorous action by the discussion following upon Professor Delitzsch's "Babel and Bible" lecture. Such a favourable start might well attract aggressive infidels, whether found in the church or the world. The Kaiser, who is well known to take keen interest in theological discussions, has intervened with a protest against the inferences of hasty antiquarians; he asks specialists to beware of confounding their discoveries with the essentials of true religion. Though the Kaiser laid himself open to easy attack on some points in his remarkable letter, the discussion has taken a somewhat unexpected turn. It has come to deal with the citadel of the faith. By naturalizing religion, you naturalize Christ. That is the logic of the situation, and now it is the avowed end of argument, not only in German but English newspapers!

What think ye of Christ? Hence the person and office of Christ have been discussed in the columns of The Times. In one communication "the Messianic idea" is traced to inscriptions on Babylonian tablets; in another, the Virgin-birth is treated as a question which clergymen may regard as "open." However expert these correspondents may be, in the one case in archæology, and in the other in theology, certain it is that there seems a hopeless lack of nous at the back of their opinions, and an utter ignorance of the condition of the race in relation to righteousness and God, to sin and eternal salvation. Somehow, God has sent redemption to our world. The Gospels unfold a story that commands our awe and satisfies our minds. In every century of our era that wonderful record has been called in question; in every age, moreover, it has been the source of untold joy to such as have received it—men and women "which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (John i. 13).

History Repeating Itself. Many of our older readers must have anticipated this outcome of recent discussions. There was a like development a little over a hundred years ago, about which some biographies now getting "out of date" furnish interesting reading. At that time the poet Cowper addressed his Lord in these lines, as given in "The Task," book 6:—

The infidel has shot his bolts away,
Till, his exhausted quiver yielding none,
He gleans the blunted shafts that have recoil'd,
And aims them at the shield of Truth again.
The veil is rent, rent too by priestly hands,
That hides divinity from mortal eyes;
And all the mysteries to faith proposed,
Insulted and traduced, are cast aside,
As useless, to the moles and to the bats.
They now are deem'd the faithful, and are praised
Who, constant only in rejecting Thee,
Deny Thy Godhead with a martyr's zeal,
And quit their office for their error's sake.
Blind, and in love with darkness! yet e'en these Worthy, compared with sycophants, who kneel
Thy name adoring, and then preach Thee man!

"Jesus and the Resurrection," as preached by the Apostles, will form no message for men who chip at the rock of Divine Truth. Oh that more of the energy spent upon investigating "tendencies" were devoted to the study of Holy Scripture itself! Then there would be fruit in life and service where now there is leanness of soul and unproductiveness in the vineyard of Christ.

The Public Reading of the Word. Rev. J. G. Greenhough, of Leicester, in a series of articles in the Baptist Times, deals frankly with certain traditional modes of conducting public worship; modes which ought to be abandoned, or at least improved. His most valuable article is that in which he urges his Free Church brethren to pay more attention to the public reading of the Scriptures. Quite truly he says, "Our people do not know the exceeding breadth and fulness of the Word of God." There is not the private Bible-reading there used to be in families; but we think there might be a taste created for it if the public reading of the Scriptures was so given as to reveal the wealth of the Divine Word. There is not the same attention given to that part of the service as to the sermon. Too frequently it is irreverently classed amongst "preliminaries." Mr. Greenhough says:—

If the minister will search the Scriptures in preparation for his public reading, he will find hundreds of helpful and inspiring lessons in rarely visited parts of the Old Testament, and not be obliged to fall back upon a well-known psalm, which is sometimes the resort of the slovenly and neglectful mind.

Purpose in Prayer. Whatever it may be, prayer is not a thing to parade. Yet its annals have much that should stimulate and encourage all servants of Christ. Quite recently it was our privilege to examine some resolutions, come to us as far back as 1835, by the late Mr. James Coxeter. They specified plans of all nights of prayer and meditation, in preparation for Sabbath worship and for daily life and testimony. A relative of the devoted man supplies the interesting sequel: A wave of blessing passed over the Sunday-school class of which Mr. Coxeter was teacher, and among the lads converted was the late Rev. Charles Vince, of Birmingham. Let preachers and teachers not think lightly of calls to fasting and prayer. God invites them into communion with Him, that He may bless their work and send overflowing good into the hearts of those with whom they come in contact.

France and Monasticism. The French report of the Select Committee on Monastic Orders has at length been laid upon the table of the Chamber of Deputies in Paris. It is the justification of the strong attitude taken up by M. Waldeck-Rousseau against the religious orders. It is remarkable that this indictment of the monks is made by a committee composed chiefly of Roman Catholics. All the same, ever since firm action began, the Ultramontanes have been crying, "Persecution!" The world can now see that France had to do something in order to extricate herself from the monastic octopus, whose suckers were slowly fastening themselves upon the State. The Orders paid no taxes, or next to none, and all their energies were directed against the Republic. The committee has made it clear that its attack is not upon the liberty of conscience, nor upon religion, but upon "a cunning and powerful organization." Exiled from France, these monks are making their home in England, to her great danger. They exist only for the Vatican. Especially must Protestants avoid sending children to their schools—no matter how enticing the curriculum, or how low the fees.

The Secret of Life.

THOUGH open to criticism in point of logic, an important truth underlies the saying that "Dirt is matter in the wrong place." How true it is! All depends on where we put things. The filth that fouls a house will glorify a garden. Let my sins be on the hither side, between me and my Saviour, and I have a very Sinai of dread, as real as it is awful, to chill and crush me. Let my sins be on the further side, with my once-crucified Lord between them and me, and lo! they tell of His glory. Transfigured by the morning splendour of full forgiveness, and standing out clear-cut against the pure, blue depths of heaven's faithfulness, they inspire an everlasting theme of song. It is only a matter of position; but, oh, the difference it makes!

So, too, when circumstances stand between us and our Lord, what darkness falls! How heavy the burden of life! What a weariness it all is! How real and active our doubts and fears, and those mean and shameful thoughts of the glorious Father which we dare not put into words! How dry the ancient wells of Scripture, and how vague and unsatisfying the promises! But who can describe the transformation scene that comes the moment we set these same troubles on the further side, the Lord in His providence being between! Fear or care—they are impossible! Seen through the warm, soft glory-light of His presence, trial is opportunity—simply a something by which to know Him better.

Again, let my faulty self stand between me and the Indwelling One, and what sin and sorrow ensue! A sickening sense of poverty possesses me—of precious faith, and love, and will-power that I need so sorely, but cannot get, no matter how I strive. Who can tell the secret misery of a self-bound heart! But let me set that same faulty self on the further side, so that henceforth I see "Jesus only," self being now entirely out of sight—and instantly the whole outlook is changed. As we rest happily in Him to keep us thus resting, as well as to meet each moment's claim as it arises, He responds to the full. All care about our love, our will, our faith, vanishes. Each new demand on us is now only a new demand on the Christ in us, and that makes all the difference.

Yes, this is the secret of life—to keep things in their right place, always on the further side, and Jesus ever in the midst.

Every Day and all the Days.

REJOICE and be glad ALL OUR DAYS (Ps. xc. 14).
Rejoice (in the Lord) ALL THE DAY (Ps. lxxxix. 16).
Show forth Thy salvation ALL THE DAY (Ps. lxxi. 15).
Speak of Thy praise ALL THE DAY (Ps. xxxv. 28).
Boast in God ALL THE DAY (Ps. xliv. 8).
Talk of Thy righteousness ALL THE DAY (Ps. lxxi. 24).
Covered by the Lord ALL THE DAY (Deut. xxxiii. 12).
In the fear of the Lord ALL THE DAY (Prov. xxiii. 17).
Serve Him without fear ALL THE DAY (Luke i. 74, 75).
God forbid we should stand idle ALL THE DAY (Matt. xx. 6).

The Drink Traffic.

A PLEA FOR NON-COMPLICITY.

THE Christian Temperance Campaign is clearly demonstrating the urgent need of Temperance evangelism and its vital relation to a soul-saving efficiency. The dominant feature of Dr. Henry's missions is their moral conviction and spiritual power. Not only are large numbers led to confess Christ as Saviour and Lord, but what is even of greater importance to the community, a new Christian conscience is created, not only with reference to the drink horror, but as it relates to all moral and social problems.

Dr. Henry says the most solemn scenes he has ever witnessed, have been in those holy and indescribable moments when the vast audiences have stood to dedicate themselves afresh to God, and, out of loyalty to Christ, to consecrate themselves to seek the lost, shield the tempted, and succour the distressed. And why not? If, as is generally conceded, the drink is the supreme hindrance to soul-saving work, and the most malignant foe of Christ and His Kingdom, then we may confidently expect that, when God's people solemnly resolve, for His sake, to remove this stone of stumbling, He will bare His almighty arm to bless and save.

If the habit and traffic in strong drink is the first dishonour to God's holy name, and the most stupendous reproach to Christian civilization, then one of the greatest honours we can do Him is to break its power, curb its influence, and crush its existence. These blessed moral and spiritual results will only follow a genuinely Christian campaign. We can only hew to pieces this Agag of drink with the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. The discussions, motives, methods and aims must be Christian. The primary appeal must be to God's own people.

The drink problem can only be solved by Christian citizenship; and Christian citizens will never do this work until they see from the Bible that "God wills it," Christ commands it, and the salvation of the people require it. God's Word alone contains the moral and spiritual dynamite that will shatter and shiver this gateway to hell. Complicity in this traffic robs the churches of the evangelistic spirit, and destroys the moral conviction that must always underlie spiritual power.

Without separation from the drink, Christians will be impotent to safeguard new converts and new-pledged abstainers. God seldom gives a church more souls than it is able or willing to nurture and train; and God knows a dram-drinking minister and a whisky-sodden church are not fit to lead and feed new-born souls. "No compromise" with the drink curse, and no partnership with the publican, brewer and distiller, will tremendously promote a Biblical and blessed revival of real religion.

Complicity with this great red dragon is a prolific source of practical infidelity among Christian people. It is not the scepticism without, but the doubt within, the Church, that cripples Christ in His effort to save. As long as Christians distrust the sufficiency and infallibility of the teaching of the Scriptures with reference to entire separation from the manufacture, sale, and consumption of alcoholic beverages; so long as they feel that they must apologize for the attitude of the Bible toward this monstrous iniquity; or so long as they attempt to defend their drinking practices by the Word of God, they open the floodgate of every species of current scepticism. If Biblical teaching is radically defective here, it may be equally untrustworthy concerning all social and ethical questions. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link.

If the Word and Son of God can be used to condone the most gigantic evil of modern times, then no wonder the masses have contempt for the churches, sneers for professions of piety, and gross neglect for the house and worship of God. If the churches were absolutely clean from this curse, their soul-winning power would be increased an hundred-fold, and the respect of the world for their work and worship would be immensely augmented. The truth is, the outside people do not believe in the consistency or consecration of ministers who tipple, and office-bearers that truckle to this body-breaking, poverty-making, and soul-destroying power. "Let everyone that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity" (2 Tim. ii. 19),

The Bounds of Christian Liberty.

By Rev. W. B. RUSSELL-CALEY, M.A., Plymouth.

THERE are probably few, if any, subjects so important to the Church of Christ and the individual Christian at the present time as that of Christian liberty. How far can a child of God be in the world yet not of it? How far can the Church use the world as not abusing it?

The Apostles had to meet this question very early in their ministerial life, and we shall do well to study carefully and obediently the broad lines they laid down under the teaching of the Holy Spirit for the future guidance of the individual and the Church.

This is far from being merely an academic subject; it is heavy with responsibility, and vitally concerns the godliness, usefulness, and happiness of the believer, and the growth in spiritual power of the universal Church of Christ. The Apostle Paul twice brings it forward (1 Cor. vi. 12, x. 23), but he puts it differently from what we generally do—not, what is lawful? but, what is expedient? what edifies? He makes a very broad statement, almost staggering in its magnitude—"all things are lawful unto me." But here we must remember there are necessary limitations. He is speaking of things within the limits of revelation; he is not ignoring those limits, such, for instance, as the Ten Commandments. The schoolboy has liberty within certain school bounds, the Englishman within the limitations of national law; but there is no liberty to transgress beyond them.

The Apostle lays down a most important and far-reaching principle, and one we far too often forget or ignore, namely, that things not clearly defined by revelation must be judged of by the spirit shown in things revealed. We must interpret the unknown and questionable, by the certainly known and unquestionable, the uncertain by the certain; we must guide our conduct, not by the mere letter of God's Word, which circumstance, time, custom, necessarily limit, but by the spirit of the Divine Word, which is applicable and obligatory for all time. We must carefully ask, in times of perplexity, not only is it morally wrong? but is it spiritually right?

Morality has reference to the law; spirituality to the Giver of the law. Much, then, does every child of God in these lawless and trying days need the teaching of the Spirit!

We must first of all grasp these two great principles. (1) The Christian is encompassed by the impassable barrier of the revealed Will and Word of God. (2) He is "the Lord's" (Rom. xiv. 8), and must use his judgment in the intense apprehension of that glorious fact. The Apostle suggests

TWO STANDARDS FOR CHRISTIAN CONDUCT.

(1) Expediency; (2) Edification—never forgetting the believer has no option in anything certainly revealed.

I. Expediency — from the Latin word meaning originally to "have the feet free" (see Matt. v. 29, 30, xix. 10; Acts xx. 20; 1 Cor. vii. 35, x. 33; 2 Cor. viii. 10—where the cognate Greek word is used, and rendered "profit," "profitable," and "to be expedient"). This is very practical and suggestive, for things inexpedient may (a) Hinder my progress. Cp. the Christian Race and Battle (Heb. xii. 1; 2 Tim. ii. 4). Let us ask, not is the occupation, or amusement, or company, lawful? but will it hinder me? Does it dull and deaden my spiritual sensibilities and appetite, or render me unfit for the performance of religious duties? Does it lead me into temptation, or render me less able to resist it? Does it make me unwilling to take up the cross and follow Christ? Does it occupy time that could be, and ought to be, better employed? Surely these are vital questions, and each believer must answer them "in the secret of His presence" (Rom. xiv. 4, 5; 1 Cor. x. 29-31). How many things does a Christian entangle himself in, and then lament his slow progress in grace! (b) It may draw me back.—The evil and danger may be positive as well as negative (1 Cor. vi. 12; ix. 27). Certain places, scenes, sounds, associations, awaken temptations by the floodgates of memory; then avoid them. You cannot dwell long in an infected atmosphere without decreased vitality; so avoid a vitiated spiritual atmosphere, and consider your peculiar and personal liability to various forms of spiritual infection.

II. Edification.—This appertains not only to the individual, but to the Church. Our duty to fellow-Christians is shown in Rom. xv. 2; 1 Cor. ix. 19; x. 33. Do we always realize and recognise (a) that in all our choices and decisions we have a deep personal responsibility to the Church of God? (b) That we are bound not only not to hinder, but actively to promote the sanctification and growth in grace of others? These are solemn points, and should be seriously considered by all the children of God when they are asked to share in or sanction the many questionable amusements and employments of the present day.

Three great revealed principles must, in every case, govern the true Christian's conduct—

(1) Responsibility to our Divine Lord.—"We are the Lord's" (1 Cor. vi. 20). Let us remember that while we may loudly claim a right to our own opinion, we are most solemnly responsible to Him for it.

(2) Responsibility to our brother.—1 Cor. viii. 10, 11; x. 24; Rom. xiv. 13-15. Will our example injuriously influence another, or lead a weaker one into danger?

(3) Responsibility to the world.—1 Cor. x. 28. Are we creating a false impression with regard to our Divine Master, His will and His Word? (Cp. Gen. xix. 14.) Let us carefully and prayerfully consider these great Scriptural principles regarding Christian liberty, and in times of perplexity be guided by the Holy Spirit in their application.

"In School and Playground": Five-minute Talks with Young People. By G. E. Morgan, M.A. The well-known railway evangelist, Mr. John Hawkins, writes:—"There is in these talks a happy blend of quiet humour, practical instruction, and Gospel truth that to me is quite refreshing. I cannot imagine either boys or girls going to sleep or remaining careless during the service if the substance of one of these talks is taken as the foundation on which to build an address by those who have to conduct children's meetings." The Witness of Prophecy.

Lecture by Dr. PIERSON.

WHILE so many attacks are being made on the citadel of the Christian's faith, and conflicting voices are raised in the effort to rob the Word of God of those elements which constitute it the one message from the Infinite to the finite mind, it is refreshing to know that the preacher of the Gospel who takes upon himself to vindicate the Scriptures never lacks a following. The splendid audiences which assemble every Friday at Exeter Hall to hear Dr. Pierson's lectures on "The Oracles of God" form an eloquent testimony to the assurance with which so many hearts are possessed in the belief that "these things are true."

Continuing his appeal to Messianic prophecy, the lecturer on Friday evening dealt with indirect predictions. In Luke xxiv. we have that remarkable conversation of our Lord with His disciples on the way from Jerusalem to Emmaus, in the course of which, beginning at Moses and all the prophets, He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself (27, 44).

THE ILLUMINATION OF THE SPIRIT.

How did this discourse become known to Luke? Our Lord promised that the Holy Spirit should bring to their remembrance the things He had spoken, and there is no reason to doubt that Luke was with Cleopas, and one of those who heard these marvellous words of Christ. The question has often been raised, Is their any hint in the Bible of what Christ said on the occasion of that memorable walk to Emmaus? Turning to the Epistle to the Hebrews, we get the discourse itself. Luke was a companion of Paul; and it is all but universally conceded that, if Paul did not write the Epistle, someone wrote it under his influence. Thus if we suppose that Luke communicated to Paul the substance of that conversation, and that we have in the Hebrews someone under his influence reproducing that discourse, the Epistle will have a greater fascination than ever before. In chapter ix. we have indicated for us the typical character of Old Testament teaching in the words, order, likeness, shadow, example, parable, and antitype. It is a most significant fact that we should have the intimation by Luke that Christ unfolded in the Scriptures the things concerning Himself, and that in the Hebrews the substance of that discourse should be made known to the writer by the Divine Illuminator.

CHRIST'S THREEFOLD CHARACTER.

In pointing out how interesting and instructive is the study of the development of Messianic prophecy found in the early chapters of Hebrews, Dr. Pierson called attention to the typical characters named—Adam, Moses, Aaron, Melchizedek, with their various offices, and the complete representation of these in the perfect Son of God. Adam was created (1) a prophet, (2) a priest, (3) a king. When he fell, he ceased to be a prophet, and needed a teacher; ceased to be a priest, and needed an intercessor; and ceased to be a king, and needed someone to give him back the sceptre. Thus the threefold character of Christ is anticipated in three great characters that follow the Fall. We have in Moses a prophet, Aaron a priest, Melchizedek a priest-king, furnishing a complete typical foreshadowing of the three great offices of Christ.

Turning to the consideration of the Tabernacle structure and furniture, the speaker showed how the entire work of Christ, from the beginning to the end of His sacrificial and glorious mediation on behalf of man, is represented in these symbols. Each has its counterpart in the truth regarding Jesus Christ recorded in the Gospel by John. The order, too, is exactly the same. The brazen altar anticipates the exclamation: "Behold the Lamb of God;" the laver: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit;" the golden candlestick: "I am the Light of the World;" the Shekinah fire: "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." Thus the narrative becomes to us a new tabernacle of testimony.

From this argument the lecturer drew some significant conclusions regarding the Messianic prophecies. The whole Bible is a mirror of our Lord Jesus Christ, or rather a series of mirrors, in which He stands in the midst; and some aspect of His glorious personality is reflected in each mirror in turn—Son of Man and Son of God; not only so, but the whole Bible is a prophetic book, and there is no place where we can say here prophecy begins or ends. There is a vast difference between the pinions of a bird and the wings a man makes for himself to fly with. For many years there have been countless attempts to construct wings with which man has hoped to imitate the bird; but such efforts have usually ended in broken bones or necks. What is the difficulty? Where a man's wings begin his life ends, and his pinions become a burden to be carried. But where a bird's wings begin its life does not end, and they become its pinions, because its life reaches to its feather tips. A man's wings are substitutes—a bird's are attributes. And there is no place in the Bible which marks the beginning or end of prediction, for the whole Book is permeated with the prophetic element.

On one occasion, Dr. A. J. Gordon gave to his children in the nursery a dissected map, telling them to place the pieces in their correct positions and put the map together. Returning in a few minutes, he was astonished to find that the children had completed their task. Asking for an explanation, he learned that there was a man's figure on the back of the map, rendering the adjustment quite easy. On the back of Holy Scripture there is the figure of a Man. He is the key that makes the Bible one book, one revelation, one open door into the mysteries of God.

West Norwood Convention.

FEW conventions at Lansdowne Hall have been more eagerly anticipated than the one held last week from Monday till Thursday. This is the ninth annual occasion on which the Convener (Pastor W. Fuller Gooch) has called together believers in the Lord Jesus to consider those things on which they have fixed their hope and towards which they were seeking to direct their lives; and never has his invitation met with a more hearty response.

The hope of the Lord's return burns brighter in scores of hearts than ever before, resulting in a closer scrutiny of desire and motive, and a re-adjustment of heart and life. Not in the spirit of controversy, or desire to propagate any specific theory concerning the prophetic details of this stupendous event, was "The Hope of Our Lord's Return" made the subject of the convention; but in the spirit of prayer and in the humble, earnest wish that the momentous fact itself should so appeal to believing hearts as to constitute a powerful incentive to sober, righteous, godly living, and a strong motive for holy and whole-hearted service. Prayer in this direction has been abundantly answered.

The keynote was struck by the Convener on Monday evening in his opening address, based on James i., in which he reminded his hearers that God is the source of blessing, and the "Word of Truth" the instrument He uses to promote His gracious ends, and earnestly entreated all to allow the Word to weigh and work with them, to do its precepts, and not merely give the outward ear to its injunctions.

The relation of the individual heart and life to the approaching day of the coming Lord was ably and impressively dealt with, in one or other of its aspects, by Rev. W. Houghton (Upper Norwood), Sir Robert Anderson, K.C.B., Rev. Wright Hay, Rev. J. B. Figgis (Brighton), Dr. Warren (of Australia), and Mr. Max Reich; while Dr. McKilliam unfolded the subject of "The Glory of His Appearing."

The relation of the churches to one another and to the Risen Lord was dealt with in the light of His coming again by Revs. Robert Middleton (Norwich) and Dr. Morris (Brighton), and the question of Jewish missions and work was taken up by Mr. I. I. Ashkenazi and Rev. J. Wilkinson (Mildmay Mission to Jews), the latter giving an interesting and inspiring account of the manifold providences and continual faithfulness of God during the fifty years he has laboured among the Jews. At the closing meeting on Thursday there were about 800 present. George Attwood.

Stratford Conference Hall.

WITH the passing of time the various forms of evangelistic activity having as their centre the Conference Hall, Stratford, show no signs of languishing, but rather give evidence of increasing force and extended usefulness. So populous a district presents innumerable opportunities for the accomplishment of such a work as that which is undertaken by those connected with the Conference Hall, and it is gratifying to learn of the blessing which continues to attend their efforts in this direction.

Visitors to the Hall on Wednesday evening last week (when the annual meeting was held) must have been impressed by the air of hearty fellowship which pervaded the assembly. Nor is this spirit of goodwill confined to the circle of workers, for it finds expression in zealous and far-reaching endeavours. Rev. Albert Swift (East Dulwich) presided over an audience that filled the spacious building. The report for the year was read by the treasurer, Mr. C. Boardman, whose untiring energy has been given to consolidating and extending the work. While his address recorded few startling facts, it showed that there has been a steady, plodding endeavour on the part of the workers to do all in their power for the highest welfare of their fellow-men. The Sunday services have an average attendance of 1,500, and the Sabbath-school about 400. The children's spiritual needs also are ministered to through other channels. There is a flourishing Christian Endeavour, a strong Band of Hope, and an active Golden Cord. It is gratifying to know that the Y.M.C.A. members and associates number 400, and, in addition, there is a junior branch with seventy adherents.

The Y.W.C.A. has a membership of 150, and a junior section of eighty. The evangelistic band and united choir have not confined themselves to the Conference Hall, for their labours have been spread over a far wider field. Unqualified help has been given to other causes, and many outside missions have reaped the benefit of the consecrated talent of these workers. The Mizpah Band has made a point of dealing individually with men and women on the streets, and many cases of decision have come under observation. The Wednesday evening Bible studies by Rev. Albert Swift have been used of God in edifying and strengthening the workers.

The Chairman reminded the friends that it was impossible, however, to tabulate the real success of their efforts. This was known to God alone. He urged the workers to greater diligence, confident that in the strength of Him whose work it was, their toil would not be in vain.

A powerful and earnest exhortation was given by Dr. A. T. Pierson. Taking as the subject of his address the words "Whose I am, and Whom I serve" (Acts xxvii. 23), he pleaded for singleness of purpose in Christian service. This was the Apostle's brief description of his relation to God, and God's entrustment to him of a work to do for His glory. The words express fully the two sides of redemption, (1) what redemption does for me—it makes me God's; and what it enables me to do—it makes me His servant. It is impossible to serve God if we do not belong to Him. The speaker went on to protest against unconverted persons taking any part in Christian work, for God does not want the gifts or service of those who are not His. Dr. Pierson proceeded to offer many thoughtful suggestions as to the methods which should be adopted in the work of evangelization, and deeply impressed his hearers as he pleaded the necessity for looking only to God, as the fountain of all grace and wisdom and the source of all strength for the work of making known His purpose and will concerning men.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, March 8. Ezra iv.

A STRIKING confirmation of the opening paragraph has been recently obtained from Assyria; and a large cylinder, inscribed with a copy of the annals of Esar-haddon, is now deposited in the British Museum, containing an account of the deportation of Israelites from Palestine, and the settlement in their stead of Babylonian colonists. These Assyrian settlers intermarried with the remnant of Israelite women, and their descendants were known as Samaritans. They served God after a fashion of their own (2 Kings xvii. 26-34, 41).

The Hebrew leaders would not comply with the proposal that the two peoples should co-operate, and it was well that they did not, else inter-marriages would have followed, and the Jews would almost certainly have relapsed into the idolatrous and evil practices from which they had been at so much cost redeemed. The path of separation is the only safe one. We cannot afford to dally with Delilah. The Church has no right to seek or receive assistance from the world in rearing her edifices or maintaining her work.

Exasperated at the refusal, the Samaritans laboured to frustrate the Jewish builders in their great enterprise, molesting the workmen, and counter-plotting at the court, so that for several years the good work slackened. In addition, the deputy governors of the empire west of Euphrates induced the King of Babylon, the famous Xerxes, to give immediate orders for the cessation of the work of rebuilding the walls (7-23). Note that Asnapper is Esar-haddon (10). To eat the salt of the palace (14, R.V.) is an oriental phrase, signifying dependence. For fifteen years the work of temple-building was completely suspended (21).

MONDAY, March 9. Ezra v.

During fifteen years of waiting, the prophets never flinched from their protest or exhortations (Haggai i. 4); and at last, in the second year of Darius Hystaspes, the work of temple-building was resumed.

Tatnai was viceroy of the satrapy of which Syria and Palestine were part. His seat was Damascus, but he appears to have travelled in person to Jerusalem to make inquiries, without doubt being moved thereto by the accusations and allegations of the Samaritans. He asked two questions, first, their authority, second, their names; but did not command the builders to cease their operations. Ah, there was one whom no mortal eye could behold at work on that historic site. The Branch was the real Builder (Zech. vi. 12, 13). Amid all your discouragements in doing the Lord's work in the world, be sure to look out for Him who never slackens His hand, but, through winter's frowns and summer's smiles, still builds on. "I will build My Church."

The words of the historian appear to be those of an eye-witness, if the we of v. 4 is authentic. (See R.V. marg.) Perhaps Ezra had arrived on a preliminary visit of inspection, and was there at the same time. To him we must attribute the pious comment on the immunity of the Jews from interruption: "The eye of their God was upon the elders of the Jews." Let us be thankful that God's eye is ever upon us and His ears open to our cry! Sheshbazzar was, of course, the Persian name for Zerubbabel (i. 8), and means fire-worshipper.

TUESDAY, March 10. Ezra vi.

Achmetha is probably Ecbatana. There Cyrus deposited the famous decree relating to the Jews, together with other of the imperial archives. A great registe-rhouse has been discovered in recent years at Nineveh, filled with tablets, covered by cuneiform characters; and this will give some idea of the House of Rolls, where search was made (1).

Under the protection of this second decree the building of the Temple went on apace, and it was completed in April, 515 B.C., twenty-one years after it was begun; and forthwith the feasts of Dedication and Passover were kept with great joy.

The feast was shared in by the proselytes, who had put away all complicity with the filthiness of idolatry, and had undergone the rite of circumcision. This gladness was without the alloy of sad comparisons and memories, for the aged, who had wept when the foundations were laid, must by this time have passed away.

Do we realize enough that only the Lord can make us really joyful; and that He alone can turn the hearts of our enemies, so that they shall be willing to strengthen our hands? If we thought less of men and more of Him, less of those who oppose and more of the Eternal God, "whose eye runs to and fro throughout the whole earth to show Himself strong on the behalf of those whose heart is perfect towards Him," what peace and joy would fill our lives with music! O harried sheep, fear not the shepherd's dogs; they do but drive you to take refuge in the Shepherd's arms. "What time I am afraid, I will trust in Thee." "When a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him."

WEDNESDAY, March 11. Ezra vii.

Ezra was the great grandson of Seraiah, the high priest put to death by Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kings xxv. 18, 22). The word "son" is used in a general sense. The scribes were deeply versed in the Mosaic code, and all that related to the civil and ecclesiastical law. Ezra left Babylon on New Year's Day, and his journey occupied four months. This was necessitated by the many poor pilgrims whom he had under his care. Referring to the safety which they enjoyed, Ezra uses for the first time a phrase which is quite characteristic of these two books. He ascribes it to the good hand of his God, which was upon him. We are reminded of Acts xi. 21. But only those can count on that good hand who set their hearts to seek the law of God, and do His work. They may reckon on it with absolute certainty.

Some think that this memorable decree was procured through the influence of the good Queen Esther; others that it was secured by Ezra bringing under the notice of the Persian Court the ancient Hebrew Scriptures. But, however it befell, it is clear that the monotheism of the Jews had made a profound impression on their captors, who felt that their intercession were worth procuring. Matters had fallen into great confusion since the deaths of the prophets, of Jeshua, and of Zerubbabel, and such an appointment as Ezra's was urgently needed.

With what a beautiful doxology the chapter closes! The heart of the pious scribe overflows. He blesses God for having put it in the king's heart to do this good deed, and goes forward in the strength of the Lord God. What can we not do when we open our hearts to the touch of that strong and tender hand (Phil. iv. 13)?

THURSDAY, March 12. Ezra viii.

The caravan which Ezra led to Jerusalem consisted of 1,754 men, but the women and children must have brought up the numbers to 6,000 or 7,000. Ahava was somewhere in Babylonia, on one of the many tributaries of the Euphrates — this was the rendezvous. Though the royal proclamation expressly exempted the Levites from taxes (vii. 24), none of them volunteered to accompany the expedition, and it was only by Ezra's direct appeal to Iddo that thirty-eight Levites and 220 Nethinim (descendants of the ancient Gibeonites—Joshua ix. 14, 15) were procured. The handing over to twelve of the priests of the sacred vessels of treasure (amounting to £500,000) was a very solemn incident, and recalls 2 Tim. i. 14. Has not the Lord also handed to the custody of His Church, to bear across the wilderness, the sacred deposit of His Holy Gospel, of the ordinances of His religion, of the Rest-Day and the Book of Truth? Has He not said to each of us, "Watch and keep these things, until ye weigh them out"?

The refusal to solicit an escort of soldiers for the four months' passage of the desert—infested then, as now, by wild plundering tribes, was a beautiful act of childlike faith, which was remarkably honoured. It may be well classed among the most astonishing events of history, that thousands of men, women, and children, with so large an amount of treasure, should have been able to accomplish in perfect safety so long and perilous a journey.

What a joyous occasion it must have been when the custodians of the sacred vessels were able to deliver up their charge to the priests of the Temple! What a relief of mind when the transference was effected! But still greater will be our joy and comfort when we shall have finished our work and kept the faith, and shall hear our Master say, "Well done."

FRIDAY, March 13. Ezra ix.

The early days of Ezra's arrival were spent in handing over the sacred treasures, and submitting his credentials and commission to the proper authorities (viii. 36). When, however, he was at leisure to look into the internal affairs of the restored people, he was beyond measure distressed to learn from the princes that "the holy seed" was intermarrying with Gentile women, and that these corrupt practices were by no means confined to the lower classes (2).

He at once saw the true drift of this evil behaviour. It would re-introduce the very idolatries and sins on account of which Israel had been carried into captivity, and break down the separation on which the holiness and usefulness of the Hebrew nation depended. Would that the people of God to-day could realize, as did the good scribe, how impotent the Church becomes when she mingles in the society, amusements, and vanities around her! This is a real and great cause of the religious indifference and failure of the present day. The old walls of separation have become broken down, and the holy seed has too largely joined in affinity "with the people that do abominations" (14). The showers of revival are kept back by this, and matters will never be righted until the Bride, the Lamb's wife, returns to her former Husband, in all chastity and purity.

The intercessory prayer, which broke from Ezra's perturbed heart, was dictated by his fear lest the gleam of prosperity, which had lately shone forth, would be permanently overcast by clouds of Divine wrath on account of his people's sin. So he stood in the breach as Moses and Daniel had done before him, and as we may still.

SATURDAY, March 14. Ezra x.

As Ezra's prayer was offered in public, when the people were assembled at the offering of the evening sacrifice, the news was soon bruited abroad, and a vast congregation gathered, to whom his grief passed, as by a holy contagion. "The people wept very sore." Shechaniah was one of the leading men of the city, and though not himself a delinquent, his father and five paternal uncles (26) were involved. The hope of which he spoke lay in immediate measures of reformation, and it was felt that Ezra, by his position and character, was eminently qualified to carry it out.

At his instigation, and after a private conference with certain leaders, a convocation was immediately summoned of the men of the returned remnant, even though it was the coldest and most inclement time of the year (December—January). In this solemn assembly a general resolution was come to, in the line of Ezra's advice, but the actual execution of it was entrusted to a number of commissioners, who were to travel through all the cities and towns, making investigation into each case. In three months they finished their work, and the evil thing was purged away; provision being doubtless made for the wives and children. Nothing is more needed in the present day than a Commission of Inquiry and Reform to induce the churches to put from their midst all that savours of the world, and to urge on Christians a life of separation from the amusements and money-making around, so as to be in the world as salt and light, but not of it. Let us remember that Christ's grave lies between the world and us

Italians and Romanism.

IF in England there is namby-pamby talking and writing about the Roman Catholic Church, in Italy there is much plain-speaking, actuated by sound common-sense. At a meeting held lately in Milan, the question propounded by the Premier of the the country, the Hon. Zanardelli, was discussed: "Si deve vedere se in Italia comanda, il Quirinale o il Vaticano?" (It is to be seen who rules in Italy, the Quirinal or the Vatican?) This question was answered with unanimity in favour of the Quirinal.

This implies the impossibility of the Pope and the King both ruling. Their ideas are incompatible, and one or other must go to the wall. In Italy there is no doubt as to who will go. It will be the Pope. One speaker, the Hon. Pelegrini, a Member of Parliament, at the Milan meeting, said that the country would go to the inferno if they were not able to beat down the Roman priest. A hope was expressed that the church of St. Peter's would cease to be a pagan temple, and that it would be used for the advancement of art and science.

Another speaker said that there ought to be an assault made upon the Vatican, moralmente e fisicamente. Such expressions show the spirit that is growing in Italy. The people are not prepared longer to tolerate in their midst, under the name of religion, a system that makes war on every principle that underlies a nation's happiness and progress, and is a huge political conspiracy, and an engine of demoralization. There is no doubt that the Pope is an international nuisance, and the Papal Church an international peril. It is the interest of humanity to put them down. When will such a crusade be started? And will England, now hoodwinked by Roman Catholics, take part in it?

A Roman Catholic newspaper, commenting on the Milan meeting, speaks of the Roman Catholic Church being now regarded, not only as a thing to be mocked and derided, but as a viper, malignant and base, which anyone is at liberty to crush. The writer laments what is true. Indifference to the "spettacolo," as the Italians call the church services, the theatrical display, is fast changing into open hostility, as it is realized that this "play" is detrimental to the financial, educational, and moral well-being of the individual and nation. Converted Priests at Rome.

WE recently announced the opening of a Home Refuge for Converted Priests in Rome. In the annual report, we are told that discontented priests "are knocking at the door of the Home." Some of them are in excellent positions, and have the promise of what the world calls "success." It is added: "We personally know these men, and believe them to be sincere." Signor Naldi, a converted monk, tells how, at the age of fifteen, he became a monk, at twenty-two a priest. He was sent to teach philosophy in a monastery, but so dissatisfied did he become that he privately sought counsel of an Evangelical minister, after a long study of God's Word and other religious books. He made up his mind to leave Rome, but the outlook was not cheering. "Where should I go, and what could I do? I had no means, and I knew that all would be against me, even those of my own flesh and blood. Finally, I learned of this Home-Refuge, and I recognised immediately that this was the way the Lord had opened for my escape."

It is proposed to keep priests under the roof of the Home until they become so thoroughly grounded in Bible truth that each will be a useful evangelist among his Roman Catholic countrymen. But we are sorry to learn that the Home Refuge is in need of funds. The committee appeal for £2,000 to procure a home capable of accommodating twenty-five ex-priests with attendants. The hon. secretary for England is Miss C. M. Ward, Gottesruhe, Montalt Road, Woodford Green, Essex.

British Syrian Mission.

THE British Syrian Mission, founded over fifty years ago by Mr. Bowen Thompson, maintains in Syria no less than fifty-four schools, with nineteen European workers, 114 native teachers, and about 4,000 children under instruction. It has a valuable training institution at Beyrout, and carries on a Bible Mission, including women's classes, with an average attendance of 841, and a Medical Mission in several villages and towns; it is the only Society that has a training school for the blind at Beyrout.

During the past two years the increased price of provisions in Syria has not only raised the cost of boarding children in the schools, but has also rendered it necessary to increase the very modest salaries paid to the native teachers; while old supporters have passed away, and living helpers have been compelled to reduce their subscriptions through lowered incomes. Meanwhile, the work in the field demands extension. Doors are open on every side. The cry of the women and children of Syria was never louder than to-day, "Come over and help us."

God's blessing is on the work. The children of the schools are the missionaries in the homes. They carry the Gospel where no European missionary can ever carry it. The hope of the country lies in the education, the evangelization, and the elevation of the rising generation. "The work you are doing," writes Rev. Dr. Jessup, of the American Mission at Beyrout (familiar with the Society's operations for forty years), "among the hundreds of thousands of Moslems, Druzes, nominal Christians and Jews, is of the highest importance. I should regard it as an unmixed calamity were your work suspended or even retrenched."

We regret to learn that at the present time the Mission (the office of which is at 29A, High Street, Wimbledon) is passing through a grave financial crisis, being confronted with a deficit of between one and two thousand pounds. There is hope in the fact that Mr. Harry C. Nisbet is entering upon the chairmanship of the work. While his energy will be devoted to putting the Mission on a firm basis, his name and influence should do something to stimulate help, both for the extinction of existing debt, and the increase of the ordinary income.

British East Africa.

THE Neukirchen Mission, named after the Rhineland town (bei Moers), in which its headquarters are situate, is making important additions to its staff of workers in British East Africa. The work was begun years ago, while the country was under German protection; it has been continued in spite of political changes, and is asserting for itself a deeply interesting and influential place among the evangelistic agencies of a dark land.

At the present time, four more workers are on their way to the field. They have not only had prolonged training in Christian truth, and the way to present it to Mohammedans and other unbelievers, but instruction in various arts and handicrafts, on the exercise of which the health and comfort of missionaries depend. They have also acquired the English language.

The names of the new workers are Herrn Becker, Blankertz, Weidt, and Kabelitz; and those who knew the first three while staying in England, at Harley College, Bow, and "The Hillyers" Home of Rest, Littlehampton, will, we are sure, pray earnestly that God may abundantly own the devotion and bless the labours of these workers in benighted Africa.

"The Revival We Need."—The article bearing this title, by Mr. Monro Collings, evangelist, which appeared in a recent issue of The Christian, has been reprinted in booklet form. (3s. 6d. per 100. Morgan & Scott.) Many who appreciated the paper when first published will doubtless find pleasure in giving wings to its timely and important message in this very convenient form. Peculiar interest attaches to a series of introductory letters prefixed to the article. These are from Lord Kinnaird, Revs. R. J. Campbell, J. B. Figgis, Thomas Spurgeon and Thomas Law, Dr. G. S. Barrett and Dr. A. Whyte. These letters are more than commendations; in some cases they are professions of personal faith, and declarations of settled purpose in the service of God.

A Remarkable Awakening.

UNLOOKED-FOR OUTCOME OF THE BOER WAR.

AS with many of our own soldiers, so with numbers of the Boer prisoners, the recent war seems to have done the work of a plough and harrow, preparing hearts for the reception of the seed of the Kingdom. Among the prisoners who have returned from their captivity are 175 young men, who during their exile formed the purpose of becoming missionaries to the heathen. Some spiritually-minded ministers of the Dutch Reformed Church, recognising the unique opening the prison camps offered for bringing the Gospel to thousands of men, became voluntary exiles that they might take advantage of the occasion. The prison camp services were followed by a remarkable spiritual awakening, some interesting particulars of which are given in the Lovedale Christian Express.

Some Transvaal students, who had been studying at Stellenbosch before hostilities broke out, rallied round the ministers, and with their aid branches of the Christian Endeavour Society and of the Young Men's Christian Association were formed in the camps. Two of these students, Messrs. Charles Mijnhardt and Harry Webb, already members of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, started missionary meetings in the St. Helena camps in order to bring before the minds of the young converts and others the claim Christ makes on their lives for personal service in the great missionary enterprise.

As the number of missionary volunteers increased they sought to do personal work among their fellow-prisoners, and the ministers attribute the awakening in the camps in large measure to this individual dealing.

The 175 young men who have returned to South Africa pledged for work among the heathen range in age from seventeen to thirty. The majority are under twenty-five years of age. Some, by reason of their previous education, are qualified to enter the Theological Seminary at Stellenbosch; others can begin a course of missionary preparation at the Wellington Missionary Training Institution.

The Dutch Reformed Church has naturally shown deep interest in the event, and has come forward in a generous way to assist in the training of these young men. Thirty-two ministers and laymen met in conference at Stellenbosch and resolved to open a preparatory training institution, where the entrants will be enabled to continue their education, and at the same time receive suitable industrial training. With this object in view, the old Drostdij at Worcester, a building surrounded by twenty acres of arable land, has been purchased from the Colonial Government for the sum of £10,000. Towards this sum the Worcester congregation has subscribed £2,000, and substantial donations have come in from other churches. For the maintenance of the young men during their period of training, congregations and individuals are assuming responsibility. It is estimated that each student will cost at least £24 per annum. Yet one congregation has undertaken to support twenty-one students, which equals an annual contribution of £500.

In accepting the liability for the training of these converts, the Dutch Reformed Church has given an evidence of a revival of its missionary spirit; and while £24 a year is not sufficient to support a worker in the field, the church will doubtless rise to the occasion when the larger call comes. It is impossible to over-estimate the influence this band of young men may have upon the evangelization of the Dark Continent.

Industrial Missions Aid Society.—The development of the work of the Industrial Missions' Aid Society points to the need for extension along the following lines:—The affording of additional facilities for trading in London and Bombay, with the opening of the branch in New York; the establishment of a factory at Ahmednagar, for hammered metal work and other technical and art industries; the erection in India of chawls (houses let out in flats), which would be a great boon to native Christians, who now suffer much from the prejudices of Hindu and Mohammedan neighbours; the organization of household industries in India, where there are openings for the manufacture of a large variety of articles; and the commencement of industrial operations at Freretown, West Africa, in conjunction with the Bishop of Mombasa.

Blessing in India.

IN December last I visited the ex-Syrian Christians in the south of Travancore. Mr. Gelson Gregson was there, having a ten days' mission, and the Syrians had come in from many parts. I was present at three meetings on the Lord's day, and was greatly impressed with the gatherings. From 1,500 to 2,000 people were present, saved and unsaved, showing the deep interest in the Gospel which prevails in these parts.

Now I have reached the Godavery Delta, and similar scenes meet me. In 1836, Messrs. Bowden and Beer landed from England in this district. At that time they did not know of a single Christian; these honoured servants of the Lord have long since passed into the presence of the King; but truly their labour, and that of many others who followed them, has not been in vain. A son of each of these brethren, and others, carry on the work. There are now six stations, and several hundred believers in various parts. Last Lord's Day I met about seventy at one station, and the previous Lord's Day several hundreds gathered together from the villages around. The other stations that I still expect to visit have been similarly blessed.

I mention these facts for the encouragement of all Christians who are interested in the great missionary movement. It is only one of many other instances which could be doubtless vouched for elsewhere, that in the present generation the Lord has wonderfully blessed the efforts of His servants in making known the Gospel; and it may well stimulate many others, who may be apt to get discouraged, "not to be weary in well-doing," knowing "that in due season they shall reap if they faint not." Scandinavian Sailors' Home.

AS we review the work of the past year, our hearts are filled with gratitude to God for all that He has done for us. Although this mission is conducted on sound business lines, necessitated by so much money being entrusted to our care for disposal, our chief aim is to bring men to Christ, and to this end bright Gospel or temperance meetings are held every evening. As a result we are able to record many cases of conversion to God.

The following instances are typical:—A fine young sailor when entering the Home informed us that he had been engaged in Christian work for years. We naturally expected his co-operation. To our disappointment, however, we found that he indulged in many vices, and influenced others to do likewise. When reminded that such conduct was wrong for a servant of Christ, he resented our interference. We, as usual, resorted to prayer on his behalf, feeling that he would make a valuable witness for the Master if he were to trust Him entirely to change his life. On his return here after another voyage, he confessed that he had felt very miserable. We were glad that the Holy Spirit had been striving in the man's heart. He attended the meetings during his stay, and one evening he yielded himself to Christ. The reality of the change was shown by his spreading the good news, and inviting other sailors to short prayer-meetings and Bible readings in his own room.

Another sailor lad, brought up in a Christian home, after a few voyages got into the company of bad shipmates, and, being weak, was soon led to indulge in their sinful habits. He seemed to lose all self-respect, and became utterly indifferent to the things of God. In conversation we had often mentioned that he could not withstand the temptations alone, but must seek the ever willing help of our Heavenly Father. For some time he seemed to turn a deaf ear, but on one occasion he readily listened to all that was said, and we earnestly prayed and believed that the seed sown would bring forth fruit.

Being convinced that, if removed from his evil companions, a fresh start would be made, we suggested that he should go to Canada. To our surprise, he acceded. We sent him to a Christian home there, and he has progressed well, and is now studying agriculture in a business college, with a promising career before him, all the while rejoicing in the knowledge of the saving grace found in Jesus Christ. His letters are a great joy to us, being full of praise that God snatched him in time from the path which leads to destruction.

Through the liberality of friends and supporters an additional building has been erected, and will, we hope, greatly enhance the usefulness of our Home. We still require £3,500 to meet builders' claims, which we trust will soon come in.

Thankful Bretons.

PASTEUR G. LECOAT writes in hearty acknowledgment of help sent by British friends to meet the crisis caused by the failure of the sardine industry. He says: "I have already received from different sources the sum of 2,841 francs (£99 6s. 10d.), and I thank you most heartily. It was a noble and beautiful act to open the columns of your valuable paper on behalf of those who were threatened by the spectre of famine. Thanks to your subscriptions and those of many others, the spectre has given place to the angel of charity, at whose approach the fountain of tears has been dried. The poor little Breton children, who had wailed with hunger and thirst, now smile at their mothers and cry no more. The Breton father, too, whose strong frame has for long years endured the battle with the waves, is filled with fresh life when he sees the bread once more in his house. The white-haired old man says to himself, 'Thank God, my children will survive me, and will be able to tell to their children how brother men stretched out their hands to them in their hour of need.'

"We have paid part of what we have received into the office of the Government, and the rest has been distributed by our own evangelists, Buanec and Omnès, in the homes of the people. It would take too long to enumerate all the interesting cases they met with among the hundreds of families visited. In one Protestant family there was nothing in the house, and the father had gone out to try to get some help, and a little boy of ten years old, the eldest of six children, was reading to his mother the story of the widow of Sarepta. Another Protestant, a man truly born again, who was once a terrible drunkard, but who now serves God with all his heart, and to whom all his neighbours bear a good testimony, having received some help from our brethren, called together his wife and four children and said to them; 'Our Christian brethren have thought of us in our misery, and have sent us help. Never forget, dear children, to ask God to bless them.' Besides this, our brethren have distributed 286 portions of the Word of God, and the books have been very gratefully accepted."

Divine Worship at Sea.—Following up their circular to shipowners inviting their co-operation in the matter, the committee of the Missions to Seamen have now issued, for distribution amongst the captains, officers, &c., of merchant ships, a useful pamphlet calling attention to the ancient custom of the sea of holding Divine worship in cargo ships on long voyages, and pleading for an extended revival of the practice. It is pointed out that in many British cargo ships the captains themselves, to the great comfort of their crews, conduct Divine worship on Sundays. In other cargo ships this is done regularly by one of the officers, or by others on board, with the captain's consent. In some of these vessels united prayers are also offered daily. But the Society is anxious that the custom should become universal. It has been liberally helped by the S.P.C.K. to provide 500 neat and convenient "service" boxes containing Bible, prayer and hymn books, with sermons, for issue to as many merchant ships, with the understanding that united worship should be regularly conducted by someone on board. For those who find any difficulty in using the Book of Common Prayer, the Missions to Seamen have compiled from that book short forms of prayer to be used at sea.

Y.M.C.A.—French Branch
IN LONDON.

NONE better than those who have themselves been strangers in a strange land—strange to its language and strange to its customs—can appreciate to its full value an institution like the French branch of the Y.M.C.A. at Exeter Hall, which offers to the French-speaking young man freshly arrived from the Continent a hearty welcome and a helping hand. It furnishes him with opportunities for forming friendships of the true kind; friendships that do not drag him down to base and selfish desires, but uplift and uphold him, showing an ideal which can only be realized as the soul rests in Christ, and spurring the young man on to manly words and manly deeds.

This French branch has been in existence for twenty years. Mr. Alfred Brauen, who founded it, is still its president. The work includes all the branches of other well-organized Associations—regular Bible readings, lectures on momentous and instructive topics, literary and musical evenings, physical culture, library, reading-room, &c.

The average attendance at the Bible readings has been over thirty. A member, now prevented from coming, writes:—

I have always loved the Association; I love it still, and I can assure you in all sincerity that the happiest moments of my life have been spent in your midst.

BENEFITS OF MEMBERSHIP.

Spiritual fruits have not been lacking. A young man who had given his heart to God, says in a letter to the secretary:—

Remember me to the friends at the Tuesday meeting, and tell them how sorry I was on Sunday that I was not able to add again my testimony to that of my comrades. I consider the public confession of our faith a necessity if we want to feel strong. To have found the right way I owe to you in the first instance. During that conversation which we had together shortly after my admission, you gave me the first indication of it. Biblical studies and the grace of the Saviour showed me the rest, and also the way I should go. Without any fear of making a mistake, I can assure you that the best time I have ever spent has been with you.

Another young man, after deciding for Christ, asks for admission to membership in the following terms:—

I am happy to be in this good Association. By attending your Bible meetings, and by reading the Word of God for myself, I have been brought to the feet of the Lord, and I am happy and joyful to have given myself to Him. In order to complete this my joy, I would ask to be admitted as an active member of your Union, so as to share more largely in its benefits and to help to bring back to life some erring soul, in the name of Christ, whose devoted, faithful and zealous servant I desire to be.

The father of the same young man writes:

I thank you on behalf of my son for the good principles and the filial respect which he acquired in your Association, and which are the result of the good counsels received there.

Testimonies like these are most encouraging. The secretary, Mr. James A. Sauvain, while acknowledging the good hand of God upon the work, and rejoicing over the progress of all its branches, especially in the spiritual direction, feels like his co-workers handicapped by the less prosperous monetary side of the work. The funds being very low, present a great obstacle to more aggressive efforts.

The workers of the French Branch would be very thankful if the list of English subscribers could be lengthened. W. M.

Decorated Missionaries.—To the many tributes of English officials in India to the devotion and self-denying labours of missionaries in the Indian Empire, another remarkable testimony has now to be added. At the recent Durbar, Rev. J. A. Graham, a Presbyterian, and three other missionaries were decorated with the Kaiser-i-Hind Medal of the First Class by the Governor-General. This official recognition by the Indian Government of the value and success of mission work may be taken as conclusive, and certainly disposes of the cavillings of those who can have but a limited acquaintance with the subject.

The Bible Society's Centenary

"Thy Word, O Lord, abideth for ever."

"IF God spares my life, I will cause the ploughboy to know more of the Scriptures than the priest." So said William Tyndale, replying to a papal representative who had broken out into the blasphemous expression, "We had better be without God's laws than without the Pope's."

THE GOOD EARL SHAFTESBURY.

The earnest promise of the great reformer was in good part fulfilled by himself, his associates, and his immediate successors. Despite the set-backs occasioned by superstition, the Word of the Lord mightily flourished, until, in our own day, even Huxley, the agnostic, had to declare: "For three centuries this book has been woven into the life of all that is best and noblest in English history; it has become the epic of Britain." In marking the progress of Bible circulation of the last hundred years, the outstanding fact is assuredly the extraordinary extent to which copies of the printed Word have been disseminated through the operations of that venerable missionary agency, the British and Foreign Bible Society. Laus Deo!

Thine was the mighty plan,
From Thee the work began,
Away with praise to man,
Glory to God!

So wrote Canon Hugh Stowell on the occasion of the Society's jubilee fifty years ago, and in view of what has since been wrought, the hymn of praise might be repeated with aptness at the Centenary which is being celebrated this week. In the providence of God, the organization has marvellously grown, until even the most distant peoples and tribes—from the frozen shores of Lapland to the land of the Ainu, from the Gold Coast to the Philippines—have in their own language the holy book wherein is taught "that knowledge which must be the noblest, the most desirable, and the most useful—the knowledge of God."

A NATIONAL OBLIGATION.

Thus, transcending the bounds of the Empire in promulgating the heavenly message of light and love to "such as sit in darkness and in the shadow of death," the work of the Society has become a national obligation. Many, alas, are the blots upon our escutcheon; where the Bible goes, the immoral trader follows with alcohol; where the Bible speaks so emphatically, men are silent, or by inconsistency contradict their creed. All the stronger, therefore, should be the expression of gratitude on the part of those who love the Bible that God has so honoured our nation as to call it to be, to so great an extent, a distributor of His truth.

The vital importance of the Bible to mankind has been the theme, from time to time, not only of master minds, but of all who love our Lord Jesus Christ. The wealth and worth of the Book have been set forth in gems of language by the greatest of statesmen, philosophers, historians, and poets, as well as by the Christian ministry. A terse saying that will live long was that of John Locke, the philosopher—"Therein are contained the words of eternal life. It hath God for its Author, Salvation for its end, and Truth, without any mixture of error, for its matter." To recall the words of the Coronation service, "This Book is the most valuable thing the world affords. Here is Wisdom; this is the Royal Law; these are the Lively Oracles of God." The Centenary of the Bible Society brings yet another reminder—at a time when the sacred page is the object of severe attack—both of the rich value of the Scriptures and of the responsibility of Christian people to see to their adequate dissemination.

THE DAY OF SMALL THINGS.

The story of the Society's inception and progress is a fascinating one. It was on December 7, 1802, that a few earnest Christian men, members of the Committee of the Religious Tract Society, met in the first floor of a warehouse in Upper Thames Street, in the counting-house of Mr. Joseph Hardcastle, a well-known merchant and an earnest Christian, who thus placed his premises regularly at the disposal of the Tract Society and the London Missionary Society. Among those assembled were Revs. Matthew Wilks, Joseph Hughes, and Thomas Charles, of Bala. In the course of the meeting, Mr. Charles spoke of "a famine of Bibles" in the Principality, and told the affecting incident (which has ever since been familiar) of a little Welsh girl who, owing to the inclemency of the weather, had been unable to take her usual weekly walk of seven miles over the hills to read a chapter! Mr. Charles pleaded for a society to supply his native land with copies of the Scriptures.

"Surely," commented Mr. Hughes, "such a society might be formed, but if for Wales, why not also for the Empire and the world?" The idea appealed forcibly to the little gathering, and Mr. Hughes was appointed to embody the general feeling in a paper entitled, "The Excellence of the Holy Scriptures, an Argument for their more General Dispersion at Home and Abroad," having for its prophetic motto the words: "Let us be the first institution that ever emanated from one of the nations of Europe for the express purpose of doing good to all the rest."

Finally, on March 7, 1804, as the outcome of much careful deliberation, the British and Foreign Bible Society was duly constituted, the practical support which enabled the organization so quickly to take shape and develop usefulness coming from the group of pious philanthropists sometimes designated "The Clapham Sect"—Granville Sharp, Charles Grant, William Wilberforce, Zachary Macaulay, William A. Hankey, and Joseph Reyner.

A FAMINE OF THE WORD.

At this time the Evangelical Revival, though deep and genuine, had touched but a fraction of the community. There was a famine of the Word of God; and infidelity and unconcern prevailed. Hannah More wrote of a rural district of more than 2,000 inhabitants, which she visited from house to house with her sister:—"We saw but one Bible in all the parish, and that was used to prop a flower pot;" and John Wesley, referring to unread Bibles, wrote:—"They have dust enough on the cover to let you write damnation on it!" Moreover, the period was one of the darkest of European history, when Napoleon was deluging the Continent with blood; yet a seed was sown in the midst of the turmoil that took root and flourished to such an extent that it would be hard now to predict the limit of its expansion. Little could the men who founded the Bible Society, have realised, amid the din of international strife, the magnitude of the task to which they had set their hands!

Magnificent progress was made. True, as historians tell us, in 1816 Pope Pius VII. condemned Bible Societies as "a plague to Christendom," and some thirty years later Pius IX. declared against them; but opposition from Rome was only in the natural course of things. The Society, following the example of Tyndale, "defied the Pope and all his laws," and in 1846 the circulation reached a million copies.

A CENTURY OF ADVANCE.

Since then the advance has been continual, until last year over five million copies were issued, the total output for the hundred years amounting to over 180,000,000 copies. With the increase of circulation, too, there has been growing economy in production. To issue one copy in 1811 cost the Society as much, on the average, as five copies cost to-day. Further, a century ago the Bible was current in about forty languages; to-day some portion of the Scriptures is published in over four hundred, including every important vernacular in the world, and of these no fewer than 367 at present appear on the list of the Bible Society.

An important ideal has been, not only to produce the Bible in every tongue, but to secure one single and accepted version in each language that shall be as correct as competent scholars can make it. Serving as the chief storehouse from which missionary organizations in all parts of the foreign field draw their supplies, the Society, as a rule, grants the books on such terms that they practically cost nothing to the missions which receive them, while no request to print and publish a properly authenticated version in a new tongue has ever been refused.

A NOBLE POLICY.

The spirit and policy of the Society in its labours to provide sufficient supplies of the written Word, was put with force by Canon Edmonds at the Œcumenical Missionary Conference held in New York in 1900. On that occasion, this eloquent champion of the Society's cause said:

It is not yet adequately realized throughout the churches that the translation of the Scriptures into the language of the people amongst whom the religion of our Lord took root, was the first solicitude of the apostolic churches, and, almost without exception, remained the policy of the Church to the sixteenth century. This is œcumenical if anything is, and yet it needs to be reaffirmed and co-ordinated, and made to be the common policy of us all. We want Christian converts to have the help of Bibles. We want them to look into that achromatic mirror in which, without refraction or distortion, they may see Jesus. We do not want them to have the distraction of rival Bibles, nor the disadvantage of eccentric Bibles, nor the darkness of unlearned Bibles. We want them to have the best that the best men can give them. We want to kindle in the churches the ambition that will keep men from sleeping till, in every land and language, there is some promise that before long there will be such a translation of the Word of God that we can look comfortably into each other's faces as we give it to the converts, and say, "Here is your spiritual history. This is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."

And in saying this, Canon Edmonds was not slow to recognise the labours of other societies in the vast field:

American and Scottish societies there are, not unfruitful or obscure, who share with the British and Foreign Bible Society that part of the "white man's burden" which is involved in the duty of bearing forth the good seed of the Kingdom of God.

THE SOCIETY'S PRESIDENTS.

Assuredly the Society has been particularly happy in its presidents. The first, Lord Teignmouth, was invited to the position at the suggestion of Dr. Porteus, the learned and venerable Bishop of London, who was himself an ardent supporter of the Society, taking a special interest in Oriental translations, and saying, almost with his last breath, "The Bible Society and the Scriptures in the East will bring about glorious days." Lord Teignmouth devoted the best of his energies to the cause for thirty years.

Lord Bexley followed, and during his seventeen years of office the Society accomplished a scheme of giving a copy of the New Testament and the Psalms to every emancipated negro in the English Colonies of the West Indies who could read. Lord Bexley was succeeded by the Earl of Shaftesbury. He accepted the office in 1851, and he writes of it as follows in his private journal:—

I should have been grieved had circumstances prevented my elevation to this high post; it is the headship of the greatest and noblest of societies, and I am not indifferent either to the honour and the utility of the position. "Grant me, O Lord, Thy Grace, and uphold me in the work!"

To the end of his life the Good Earl considered that the office of President of the Bible Society, which he held for thirty-four years, was the highest honour a man could attain in the land.

The Earl of Harrowby followed. As a Cabinet Minister, trained and versed in public affairs, he brought ripened experience to bear on this work, and gave the Society fourteen years' devoted service. The blank caused by his death, in 1900, was filled by the Marquis of Northampton, who has already proved himself a worthy successor to these men of illustrious name and deed.

THE MARQUIS OF NORTHAMPTON.

During its hundred years of usefulness, the Society has naturally developed a long succession of friends and supporters. There are notable families up and down the land with whom it is an honourable tradition to be closely identified with the Bible cause—the Gurneys, Buxtons, Braithwaites, Barclays, Aclands, and Carr-Glyns, with many more. These names recur continually in the annals of the Society.

CENTENARY PLANS.

The Centenary year will begin with two great meetings to-morrow (Friday), March 6. One for city men at the Mansion House, at 2.30, at which the Prime Minister has promised to speak; the other, an evening gathering of friends from all parts of the country at Queen's Hall, W., under the presidency of Lord Northampton. This occasion will mark the inauguration of an effort to raise, as a thankoffering, a fund of 250,000 guineas, with the view of enabling the Society (1) to employ 100 more Colporteurs and 100 more Biblewomen; (2) to prepare new Versions and extend and complete other Versions begun; (3) to provide fresh Scriptures for the blind; (4) to increase the Society's Benevolent Fund; (5) to undertake special work in Sunday schools and among young people in England and also in the Colonies.

These plans being realized, there will come wider knowledge of the glorious Book which has taken such a hold on the world as no other, of which an American essayist has said:

The sun never sets on its gleaming page. It goes equally to the cottage of the plain man and the palace of the king. It is woven into the literature of the scholar and colours the talk of the street. It mingles in all the grief and cheerfulness of life.

That in the Centenary celebrations, the noble object in view may be attained, will be the prayer of all who love and honour the Holy Word.

Witness to the Word.

By Mr. HENRY VARLEY.

TO appreciate the spiritual qualities of God's Word, a man must have a spiritual mind. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God . . . neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." No academic career, no amount of research, can supply the place of renewal of heart and mind, combined with devout and patient study of the Scriptures which have been "given by inspiration of God."

The iconoclast is in danger of repeating Uzzah's temerity, and sooner or later to share his doom. The Ark of God is not fitted for search by bands of cultured Philistines, whether in the days of Samuel, or in the early years of the twentieth century. Terms that have become common in the United States express exactly what we deprecate. These men are described as "brainy men," "elegant scholars," &c., while with us they are called "men of light and leading," "grand preachers," "cultured thinkers," &c.

As a striking illustration of the quality of mind worthy to be imitated, the name and service rendered to the Church of God by the late Mr. Thomas Newberry (editor of The Englishman's Bible) stands out with gracious prominence. A ripe and diligent scholar, he gave sixty-four years careful study to the whole Bible in the original languages. What was the result of the prolonged study and research of this man, who recently passed into the presence of the King, at the ripe old age of ninety-one? Here are his words, and they deserve to be engraved on the fleshy tables of millions of hearts:—

"As a result of a careful examination of the entire Scriptures in the originals, noticing and marking where necessary every variation of tense and preposition, and the significance of words, the impression left upon my mind is this—not the difficulty of believing the entire inspiration of the Bible, but the impossibility of doubting it."

What a weighty testimony! This man of God for more than eighty years enjoyed partnership in the Divine life. His mind was right toward God, and he found in Scripture "lights and perfections" which escaped the observation of such as did not combine the same devotion and simplicity with human culture and erudition. He was not one of those to whom the things of God are "foolishness"; his attitude was that of a learner in the school of heaven. Being born of God, the Holy Ghost was in him for illumination and instruction. It is a truism to say that spiritual life must precede spiritual intelligence and discernment. Men who are not born of God cannot think the thoughts of God.

London Missionary Society.

FAREWELL TO ITS OLD HOME.

ON Monday, October 5, 1835, the then directors of the London Missionary Society met in the "New Mission House," 14, Blomfield Street, London, to dedicate it to the glory of God in the service of foreign missions. An address was given by Dr. Pye-Smith, a descendant of whom is now the medical adviser of the Society; prayers were offered by Rev. George Collison, Rev. Dr. Bennett, a granddaughter of whom is now a director of the Society, and Rev. Thomas Lewis, predecessor of the late Dr. Allon, of Union Chapel, Islington. Six missionaries took leave of the directors before sailing to Samoa, and were addressed by John Williams, who less than four years afterwards was martyred at Erromango. In the sixty-seven years that have passed since that meeting, the L.M.S. has greatly grown in strength and influence. In 1835 it had 111 European workers on the staff, with twenty-eight European assistants as schoolmasters or printers, and 195 native assistants. Now it has 276 European missionaries, 6,203 native helpers of both sexes, of whom 940 are ordained pastors of native churches. The communicants in 1835 were 5,239, now they are 69,000; the scholars in the schools of the Society were 26,000, now they are more than three times that number.

SIXTY YEARS OF PROGRESS.

The approaching expiry of the lease of the "dear old house" and the necessity for more room, combined with other reasons, have led the directors to decide upon leaving, and finding a home in larger premises. The farewell meeting was held on Tuesday last week, and was largely attended by directors and their friends, both from London and the country. The chair was filled by Mr. G. C. T. Parsons, of Birmingham, and prayers were offered by Revs. W. Hardy Harwood (Islington), W. S. Houghton (Birmingham), R. Lovett (Religious Tract Society), and Mr. Stephen Massey (Manchester). An address was given by Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, Foreign Secretary, who reminded the meeting how interesting and important was the period of time covered by the story of the Society in that house.

Slavery ceased to be just about the time their fathers came to this house, and thus the work of the Society in the West Indies and in South Africa received an impetus. China was opened, and has made increasing demands with the flight of time. In 1857 the Indian Mutiny swept away from India the rule of the East India Company, and brought in imperial rule, under which there has been a great development of the elementary school system and women's work. Dr. Lockhart led the way in medical missionary enterprise by commencing his labours in China in 1838. In 1844 steps were taken, and with great success, to enlist the interest and co-operation of children at home in missionary service. A literature for children has been called into existence. Three new fields of labour have been entered since 1835—Madagascar, New Guinea, and Central Africa; and a succession of honoured missionaries have met and thrilled the directors in that room with good news that they brought from far-off lands.

A HOME OF GRAND IDEALS.

Rev. J. P. Gledstone, who gave the second address, said that the mission house was plain and unostentatious, as befitted its work, yet it was singularly dear to many men and women and children all over the world. For many a year it had been to him the holiest place in London, next to his own home. It had a strange power over the directors because of their common experiences of the vicissitudes of a great and sacred enterprise. They had trembled for the work of God in Madagascar and China, trembled and yet been confident. Every sorrow or difficulty in the mission field had sent a thrill through their hearts, and they knew that any cloud of adversity upon that House cast its shadow upon every mission station.

The house had been a home of the grandest ideals that could command the soul of man, uplift him, and fire him with the zeal of a consuming devotion: it was a house of faith. They and their fathers believed that the Gospel was "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," that God loves all men, that the Lord's Prayer has a definite and real meaning, and that all flesh shall see the salvation of God. "We dream dreams and see visions" of the coming Kingdom of God. Labour and sacrifice were among the means by which they sought to realize their ideals. It was a touching sight to see young men and women come and offer themselves there upon the altar of service to their Saviour and older men and women renew their vows. Some of the fathers were laymen who had sacrificed time and money to come to that house and do the Society's business.

MONEY-MAKING AND MONEY-GIVING.

In a great money-making centre the house had represented money-giving. The stewardship of means had been observed by rich and poor. The method of the past had, to a large extent, been to make as much money as possible, and then to give a proportion of it to missionary work. This method might perhaps change into another in the future, a more ideal way, such, e.g., as John Wesley had described in these words: "If you have a family, seriously consider before God how much each member of it wants, in order to have what is needful for life and godliness. And, in general, do not allow less nor more than you allow yourself. This being done, fix your purpose to gain no more. I charge you in the name of God do not increase your substance. As it comes, daily or yearly, so let it go; otherwise you will lay up treasures upon earth; and this our Lord as flatly forbids as murder and adultery. You will have no reward in heaven for what you lay up; you will for what you lay out." This method, if acted upon, might deprive the Society of legacies, but would give it a deeper running stream, and a stream that would deepen as it ran. Is it the ideal of the future, a return of Pentecost, when men and means were all given to Christ? Will the Church as a whole come to see that her great business is to glorify God and save the world?

THE WORK OF THE FUTURE.

In the work of the future (said Mr. Gledstone) while we may not decline any clear call that comes from any place, if we have the means to help, the condition of the British Empire ought to have our first and largest consideration. The population is about 400 millions, of whom 300 millions are heathen. The need is great. They are our fellow-subjects, and the command of our Lord—"Beginning at Jerusalem"—seems to apply here. They are accessible; the Government is not against us, at least, not professedly so. Many of these fellow-subjects in India are calling for help.

This house might also be called a house of prayer; no church better deserved the description. Prayer had been offered for men, and God had sent them a succession of remarkably gifted souls; new lands had been opened up; missions had been preserved; souls had been saved; means had been, and would be, sent. "God is faithful" is the testimony of the past, and would be the experience of the future. This home was solemn and affecting; God was taking them out, that He might bring them into a larger place.

The concluding hymn was one written by Rev. Jonathan Lees, a L.M.S. missionary who recently died; and Rev. Robert Dawson (London City Mission) offered the concluding prayer. Rev. T. Gasquoine (Bangor) pronounced the Benediction, and the deeply-moved company left the familiar place.

The new Mission House, which will not be ready for, perhaps, two years, will be in New Bridge Street. Temporary offices have been taken at 30, Gray's Inn Road.

The London Jews' Society.

THERE were large and appreciative gatherings of friends of the Society at the series of meetings held at Exeter Hall on February 19.

In the afternoon, Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe, who presided, said that Christians, having received much from the chosen people of God, should realize more intensely the responsibility for their evangelization. Referring to the difficulties to be contended with in bringing the Gospel home to the Jews, the speaker especially deplored the increasing influence of the "Higher Criticism."

An interesting description of work among Jews in East London was given by the next speaker, Rev. C. H. Titterton, who said that he had to be "all sorts of things in turn, medical man, nurse, teacher, &c.," the Jews seeming to think that the Mission workers can do "anything and everything." Mr. Titterton related several instances of blessing. One man was influenced through hearing Gospel hymns sung. He suffered from consumption, and when, on his deathbed, his wife wished to bring the Rabbi to him, he replied, "No; my Saviour is my Rabbi."

Miss Barrow, who followed, told of her work in the Whitechapel Ghetto. The services at St. Mary's Church, in Yiddish, are regularly attended by about 150 Jews, rising on special occasions to 400 and 500. Many also go to the night schools, where they are taught reading and writing in English. Among sick Jewesses and the young people Miss Barrow has found many opportunities of speaking of Christ.

Rev. K. E. Khodadad had an interesting story to tell of advance in Persia, where the Society has now three stations. He reminded his hearers of the fact that Persian Jews are by no means hostile to Christianity, but will allow the missionaries to teach Christ in the synagogues and preach from Jewish pulpits. Referring to his late work in Liverpool the speaker said that the printed Word had been distributed among emigrant Jews on their way to America. At Manchester a good number of resident Jews were reached. They gathered to hear portions of the Old and New Testaments read and compared. The work among children is most encouraging, and evening classes are held for young men and young women respectively.

At the evening meeting Mr. Khodadad again spoke on Persia, and Rev. F. S. Webster, who presided, gave some of his personal experiences in dealing with Jews of the upper and educated class, saying how hard it is to penetrate the crust of indifference in which they seemed to be incased. But this, with many other difficulties, must be faced and overcome. "It does not matter how much it costs" to convert a Jew, we have our marching orders from our Leader, and we must obey them.

Transitions.

The winter nights are passing—
They were dark and cold and long;
And a death-wind has been blowing
On our friends, both old and young;
And, though joyous spring is coming,
They shall sleep amid its song.

Yet what reck we of earth's winters
If our souls have heaven's light?
For when midnight falls on Egypt,
In Goshen it is bright;
And the pure in heart for ever
Have a day without a night.

Oh, the hour and power of darkness,
When the heart by sin is torn!
Oh, the hour and power of darkness,
Which our Lord for us has borne!
The gloom before the glory
Of a resurrection morn.

Resurrection to the spirit,
When we wash in Jesus' blood;
Resurrection to the body,
When the trumpet sounds abroad;
Resurrection grand, eternal,
Of humanity to God.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONERS.)

FOURTH WEEK OF THE SCOTTISH CAMPAIGN.

SONGS of praise to God are going up for His gracious working during the fourth week of the meetings in Edinburgh. On the Sabbath evening the attention of workers was attracted by a considerable body of young men and boys among those who accepted Christ. Inquiry elicited the fact that they were from Newhaven, and that twenty-five of them had walked to the city together, while an examination of the cards given in showed that every one of the company had professed conversion. Later in the week, a friend told how he and others had heard an unusual commotion on the Newhaven road, late on the Sabbath evening; but instead of rioters, it proved to be these young fishermen giving voice in song to the joy of their salvation.

A work of grace is going on in some of the large business houses of the city, and a readiness to talk about spiritual things is manifesting itself among the formerly careless employees. In two large girls' schools also it is found that a spirit of inquiry is spreading. A lady worker, who has made a point of speaking to tramcar conductors, as opportunity offered, reports that she has not received a single rebuff. The men seemed in most cases to have been thinking of spiritual things, and expressed their gratitude for the interest taken in them. One said he was not a Christian, but wished to be; and that it was his intention to be at Dr. Torrey's meeting on his first evening off duty.

GRANDFATHERS AND LITTLE ONES.

At the noon meeting on Monday week a young man bore witness to the good which had been done by the addresses among his own acquaintances in establishing their faith. A gentleman told Dr. Torrey that it had cost him £200 to get an easy conscience after one address. The thoughts of others were voiced by one who testified to receiving an intelligent understanding of truth, which before had been obscure, although he believed it. As an illustration of the varied ages of those who are being blessed, a grandfather mentioned three little ones who had been most intelligently brought to the Lord. A little girl of six had asked to walk part of the way to business with him that morning; he found that she was taking her Bible to a neighbour's house to read it with others.

The proofs of the Resurrection of our Lord were brought to a close on Monday; and on Tuesday the practical lessons of the great historical fact were driven home in an address of unusual power. Few even of the Christians had realized how important is the place of the Resurrection in the Christian system, proving—(1) That there is a God, and that the God of the Bible is the true God; (2) that Jesus Christ was a teacher sent from God, that He was an infallible teacher, and that His doctrine was not His own, but that which He received from His Father; (3) His Divinity; (4) that everyone who is united to Christ by a living faith is justified; (5) that there is a judgment day; (6) that those who are united with Him will also rise; (7) that we can have victory over sin.

ANOTHER QUESTION DAY.

Wednesday had been set aside as a second question day. Dr. Torrey dealt with various theories of the origin of languages set over against Gen. xi., pointing out that in the Bible we have a historic document which has stood the test of centuries, and on the other hand varying opinions, no two of which agree. "They ask us to give up the inerrancy of the Bible for the errancy of German scholars."

As to the expectation by the Apostles of the coming of the Lord in their own times, he showed that the word "generation" (Matt. xxiv. 34) means race rather than a period of time, and that a better translation than "fulfilled" would be, "begin to be." Then he denied that, whatever the Apostle Paul may have thought, he ever taught that the Lord would come then. The expectation that the Lord might come was, and is, the true Christian attitude; but even if the Apostle expected the Lord's return in that age, it is an added proof of inspiration that the Holy Spirit kept him from teaching it.

The Ministers' Meeting on Thursday was such a hallowed time that Dr. Torrey described it as the most important gathering of the mission, and said he had never been more conscious of the presence of the Holy Spirit.

CHORUSES THAT COULD NOT BE FORGOTTEN.

During the closing week the afternoon Bible studies were discontinued, and evangelistic addresses given then as well as in the evening. Few will forget the masterly exposure given on Monday on "Refuges of Lies" (Isaiah xxviii. 17); when the persistence of false reasoning was shown by the receipt in the afternoon of a letter explaining that, in the theatre on Sabbath, several women had given as an excuse for not confessing Christ that if afterwards they did anything wrong it would bring more dishonour on him. Some of the hymns are fulfilling Mr. Alexander's hope. The repetition of the choruses time after time is causing them to stick in the memory, so that men cannot get get away from them, though they try. A Christian wife testifies that the refrain of the Glory Song rang in the ears of her drunkard husband till he gave his heart to the Lord.

Among the cases of blessing that became known on Tuesday were those of several who had been spoken to on leaving, or after they had left, the meetings, and short talks had led to their acceptance of Christ. The topic for the day was the "The Three Fires"—(1) the fire of the Holy Ghost, Matt. iii. 11; (2) the fire that is to test every believer's work, 1 Cor. iii. 13-15; (3) the fire of eternal doom, 2 Thess. i. 7-9.

With manifest reluctance, yet under a strong sense of the duty of declaring "the whole counsel of God," Dr. Torrey preached on "Hell" on Wednesday. He explained that there had been a time in his history when he did not believe in eternal punishment; but a prayerful study of the Word of God had opened his eyes. The plea of figurative language was shown, even if admitted, to carry nothing with it, seeing that the words used convey the strongest possible picture of woe and misery; and when the way of escape was pointed out, with a ringing call to repentance, the impression on the minds of the hearers was profound.

On Thursday, the wonderful provisions of the grace of God were unfolded under the title of "God's Blockade of the Road to Hell," and at the close about a hundred persons proclaimed their acceptance of Christ as Saviour and Master.

THE FINAL DAY AT EDINBURGH.

The closing day of the mission was stormy, a fact which somewhat lessened the attendance in the afternoon; but in the evening only the holding of separate services for men and women made it possible to accommodate the crowds. Thanksgivings for the day included those of a young lady who had brought ten girls one by one to the meetings, and a young man who had persuaded twelve others to accompany him, all the twenty-two being led into the light of the truth as it is in Jesus. The afternoon message was on "The Power of God's Word," while in the evening the great solemn lessons and facts of "Eternity" were faithfully presented. Among many helpers from far and near, Miss Darling, Mr. G. E. Morgan, and Mr. Hubert Simpson, took part in the service. After the same searching dealing which has characterized the mission throughout, over fifty made public testimony of having found Christ.

Nothing has been done to make the path of confession easy, Dr. Torrey insisting in thoroughness in every respect; yet 1,500 people have taken a clear stand on the Lord's side. One minister, after receiving thirty names, said they were the most satisfactory cases ever sent to him from a mission; and it is believed that the new element will be a source of genuine strength to the churches in their aggressive effort.

The city has been moved in a way unknown for a number of years, and the committee arranged for the continuance of the mission for three weeks, under the charge of Rev. F. C. Spurr, assisted for a few days by Dr. Harry Guinness. There is every sign of the time of blessing continuing. At great meetings of women on Sabbath afternoons, and of men in the evening, there was a further gathering in of precious fruit.

CASES OF CONVICTION.

The "Get Right with God" cards have been freely scattered. At a mission-hall in the suburbs, one was given to a railway-man and his wife. They took it home and placed it on the mantelpiece, where it became a silent but persistent witness to the truth. On the following Lord's Day, the husband went to the Empire Theatre, while his wife returned to the local hall, both coming home under deep conviction. They went to the Synod Hall on Monday, without coming to the point of decision. Returning on Tuesday, however, they were among the first to stand up, and have already been used to bring others to the Saviour.

A Christian signalman, who took one of the cards at the same time, passed it on to a ticket-collector as he went on duty very early next morning. The collector treated the matter as a joke, putting the card on the front of his cap as he proceeded to collect the tickets on a workmen's train. The arrow had gone home, however, and he came with the signalman to one of the meetings under deep conviction.

A Christian lady in business spoke to another who had left her mother's home five years before, and had not only become addicted to drink, but had drawn round her a set of other young people. The Christian invited the erring sister to the meetings, and though the first reply was, "These meetings are not for me," perseverance was rewarded. Better than that, the seeking Saviour found the wandering sheep on the first evening. The worker then sought out the mother, who, however, declined to have anything to do with her daughter. Strongly urged to come to the meetings herself, she ultimately consented, making the stipulation that she should not meet her daughter. No promise to this effect was given, however, and before the week was over she was rejoicing in a new-found Saviour and in a dear child restored to home and affection.

Opening of Glasgow Meetings.

For many weeks Christian workers in widely different parts of the city have been looking forward with interest and hopefulness to the mission which Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander have now entered upon in Glasgow. Prayer on their behalf has been made, in a measure, more than usual, and this has been looked upon as a very hopeful and encouraging sign. The history of revivals proves that earnest and importunate and multiplied prayer has ever been the harbinger of a summer-time of grace. It may be noted that public prayer for the Torrey-Alexander Mission has not only been made in mission centres of a purely evangelistic character, which are naturally specially interested in Dr. Torrey's visit, but in other gatherings where worship and service are combined—in churches and meetings of brethren, the spirit of supplication has also been sympathetically in evidence. Then there have been in existence for some time a number of semi-private prayer circles in which the brethren who have now arrived have been mentioned by name, and on whose labours God has been asked to pour out a blessing.

This spirit of prayerful desire and earnest expectation has no doubt been largely kindled by the tidings of the great work which was accomplished by their instrumentality in Australia and New Zealand, and ever since their arrival in London, in the early days of the current year, all the papers that have been furnishing any account of their labours have been eagerly scanned. Many of the older Christians, not a few of them the fruits of the 1874 season, have been making references to the Moody and Sankey mission of February, 1874, and recounting in the hearing of the younger generation of believers the glorious things then seen and witnessed in Glasgow; and this rehearsal of those stirring times has also in part contributed to the interest.

A MONUMENT OF 1874.

From the purely human standpoint, the auspices under which they have begun work could not be improved upon. They have come at the call and invitation of the United Evangelistic Association, an Association that dates its origin from the time of Mr. Moody's first visit, being in fact, the outcome of the great work accomplished at that time. In the intervening years it has done an immense amount of evangelistic work, besides work of a philanthropic kind, in feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, tending the sick, and ameliorating in other ways the social condition of many. It has as chairman Hon. Lord Overtoun, and among its directors many notable Evangelical ministers, as well as a number of eminent business men, not a few of whom are earnest and eager in a very pronounced degree for the salvation of men. Mr. W. M. Oatts, formerly secretary of the Glasgow United Y.M.C.A., is acting as secretary for the special mission, and everything that could be done to advertize it in advance has been well and splendidly done. No expense has been spared in the matter of printer's ink. Huge posters have been displayed all over the City, and tens of thousands of cards have been put into the hands of workers for distribution.

WATCHING FOR SIGNS OF BLESSING.

The need of a special awakening has been very obvious, as for a long time the general spiritual tone has not been high. There has not been much, if any, cessation in active aggressive work, because in the streets and lanes of the city hundreds of open-air meetings are held weekly over and above the regular evangelistic work indoors, but the seen results have not been satisfactory, and the thermometer has registered a lower spiritual temperature than is associated with bright soul-winning seasons. For a good while the small yield has burdened many earnest spirits, and has made them eagerly scan the horizon to see if they could detect any signs of the breaking of a better day. Hence the ardency with which many have been looking forward to the arrival of the evangelists from across the sea, their hope being that under God these brethren may be divinely helped to thrust in the sickle, and reap an abundant harvest.

The opening morning, on Sabbath last, proved a testing one, as the wind blew in fierce gusts, the sky was black and lowering, and the rain dripped heavily. As we moved along to the meeting during a two mile walk we had to watch how the wind blew to prevent our umbrella from being blown outside in; and the circumstance set us hoping that the sound from heaven as of a mighty rushing wind which was heard on that ever-famous fiftieth day after our Lord rose from the dead might be heard over again and its glorious effects as signally manifested.

The hour of meeting had been advertised for 9.30, but as early as nine o'clock interested workers began to pour in, until a congregation of some six or seven hundred had gathered. The place of meeting was the Christian Institute in Bothwell Street, and promptly at the advertised hour Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander came on the platform accompanied by Mr. W. M. Oatts, Mr. Alexander McKeith, Principal Anderson, of the Bible Training Institute, Mr. George E. Morgan of London, and other prominent local workers. The 100th Psalm having been sung, Dr. Torrey asked Mr. McKeith to lead in prayer, which he did, making request that "every heart in the place might be taken possession of in power by the Holy Ghost."

THE ATTITUDE FOR BLESSING.

Dr. Torrey read and commented on the 62nd Psalm. "My soul waiteth upon God," he pointed out, is "My soul is silent before God" as given in the margin, and "if this is our attitude we shall see a great blessing." Commenting on the verse, "Trust in Him at all times," he made the happy and appropriate remark in view of the inclemency of the morning that, "Trusting Him at all times means trusting in the sunshine, and when the wind blows your umbrella outside in."

Mr. Alexander sang very nicely the hymn, "He Knows," No. 17 in his own book. This was followed by prayer on the part of Dr. Torrey, who gave thanks for such a large meeting on such a stormy morning, and specially supplicated that God would bring all His people into that attitude of soul that would enable Him to do the very best He could with them. Then came his brief address in which he said he had as his aim two things. First, Definiteness; second, Permanence. He would rather see ten men definitely regenerated than hear a great number go no further than say that they would like to be Christians. Under the heading of Definiteness he had four points which were named one by one in detail. First, he wished men to be pressed to definite acceptance of Jesus Christ as their Saviour; second, to make definite surrender to Christ; third, to make definite confession of Christ; fourth, to render definite service for Christ. Then for obtaining permanence of result his dependence was first, on God; second, on prayer; third, on personal work; fourth, on personal dealing. He wished to pledge all who would to pray earnestly and work definitely for individuals whose names they were to write down on their prayer list, and in response to his request the major part of those present stood up in token of their willingness to do so.

At 2.30 in the afternoon there was a splendid muster of fully 3,000 people in St. Andrew's Hall, two-thirds of them being men, hundreds of whom were representative of the steady evangelism which goes on within the city. Pastor D. J. Findlay led in prayer, and Dr. Torrey gave an excellent address on "Soul Winning." Some of the illustrations used were eminently suitable for the end he had in view, that of stimulating Christian workers to enter with greater zest into the winning of souls for Christ. The service, though for Christians, was not without saving result, for a well-known worker connected with the China Inland Mission had the joy of leading a young lad at the close of the meeting to Christ, the first visible fruit of the coming harvest.

A SPLENDID AUDIENCE.

A huge audience gathered in the same hall in the evening, an audience that formed a magnificent sight to look upon. Every sitting in the organ gallery at the one end of the hall, in the large back gallery at the other, in the spacious balcony, and on the wide floor area was occupied; while hundreds stood all through the service. There were more than 4,000 people present, and from the moment that Mr. Alexander led off at 6.40, twenty minutes before the advertised time, till 8.10, when Dr. Torrey closed his address, the interest never flagged. Mr. Alexander, with his "Glory Song," fairly caught the interest of the monster meeting. He had tried the hymn over at the close of the afternoon service with those of the choir who were then present, and on its being sung in the evening the effect was simply indescribable. His capable conductorship and interesting personality threw a spell over both the choir and the congregation, and as the waves of song rolled forth, one could not but feel that the spiritual temperature must, by such singing, be helped upward many degrees. We have since heard one and another declare that they never heard anything like it. Dr. Torrey gave a rich Gospel address on the love of God, which must have been profitable to many, and at its close a number stood up in token of their desire to be saved.

The evangelists are delighted with the reception they have met with in commencing their mission in Glasgow, and they think the opening services augur well for the weeks to come. The uncertain weather may, however, militate somewhat against the meetings.

A fraternal reception was accorded Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander on Monday afternoon in the Christian Institute at 3.30. In the unavoidable absence of Lord Overtoun, Mr. John W. Arthur, hon. secretary of the Association, occupied the chair. Notwithstanding that the sleet was falling and the afternoon exceedingly unpropitious, seven or eight hundred people were present. Sitting around the chairman on the platform were such well known men as Sir Samuel Chisholm, Councillor J. P. Maclay, Revs. Dr. Jas. Wells, Dr. Elder Cumming, Dr. W. Ross Taylor, Dr. Robert Howie, Dr. William Boyd, John McNeill, and many others. The chairman gave the opening word of welcome, and was followed by Rev. J. T. Forbes, Rev. J. Bell Henderson, Rev. Dr. Howie, and Rev. John McNeill. A brief word afterwards by Dr. Torrey brought this interesting reception to a close.

Personalia.

The remarkable degree of interest aroused by Rev. R. J. Campbell's addresses at the Thursday mid-day services at the City Temple will have prepared the way for the announcement that it has been decided to call him to the pastorate in succession to the late Dr. Parker. The formal decision was unanimously arrived at, at a meeting of deacons on Monday last, and Mr. Campbell is now considering his reply.

Mrs. Harrison Lee, who has just arrived in this country for the third time, commences her Gospel Temperance work at Narberth, and will visit other towns in South Wales. She informs us that by a three-fifths majority they have excluded the public houses from six townships in New Zealand, and they have a majority over the whole country, but not sufficient to introduce prohibition.

Mr. Charles Cook was detained in Gibraltar a week by reason of rough weather, as the boats could not leave for Morocco. Special services were therefore arranged in the South Barracks Mission nightly, Mr. Cook also preaching morning and evening for the Wesleyan chaplain. A great number of soldiers confessed Christ, as many as a dozen in the Lancashire Fusiliers alone, and several of the sailors from the battleships, with civilians also. A meeting for praise and prayer was held on Monday evening, the 23rd. Mr. Cook sailed for Morocco on 24th. He hopes to pay a return visit to Gibraltar.

C.E.T.S.—The Bishop of London was the principal speaker at a crowded meeting convened by the Church of England Temperance Society at Holloway Hall a few days ago. It was gratifying to see the number of Islington clergymen on the platform. The Bishop, who has been a total abstainer for twenty years, acknowelged that temperance work was most delightful, because it was most hopeful, and recalled some of his experiences at Bethnal Green, where sometimes his temperance principles had ensured a hearing which in other circumstances would have been denied. Referring to the valuable Act passed by Parliament last session, he was pleased to say that the Bishops were united in its support.

Warning.—We are asked to warn our readers against a young man, about twenty-five years of age, speaking with a foreign accent, and giving the name of Landauk, of Jaffa. Calling himself a missionary, and claiming acquaintance with professors, ministers, and other brethren, at home and abroad, he is in the habit of soliciting help wherewith to buy a railway ticket to a distant place where a relative resides! For over three months this tale has been rehearsed in the ears of pitying friends in North Wales, Liverpool, Leeds, North and South Shields, Nottingham, and Wolverhampton. Baptists, Methodists, and Brethren have received attention, but all should be on their guard, for Landauk's story is a complete fabrication, as papers in our possession go to show.

"He Gathers the Lambs in His Bosom."

By T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S.E.

TWENTY-NINE years ago a travelling gipsy woman, who had herself been born in the workhouse, gave birth to a daughter in a caravan. That daughter grew up to womanhood, without knowing how to read or write. At the age of nineteen she in her turn took up with a man who was a tinker, travelling with a van of his own. The van he subsequently sold, living with the woman in a dilapidated tent which they carried with them all over the country, pitching it where they could, ostensibly selling clothes-pegs, but really begging, and, I am afraid, sometimes stealing.

Eventually the man died by the roadside, leaving the mother and four children to a life of vagrant tramping. Of these four children, the two oldest are girls, and I shall venture to show them to you just as they were when the homes got hold of them. The photograph of these girls, in one sense, gives no true idea of their real state on admission, for we had to find them a couple of skirts and an upper garment to make them sufficiently decent to be photographed; they had only a few rags on which were all in a verminous condition. It is one of the details of the picture that the eldest girl often had to carry the tent by herself. When she was not laden with the tent, she carried the baby. And she was only ten!

At length the tent, such as it was, had to be sold at a time of more than usual stress, and then came a spell of lodging-house life in the big towns. But there was no making a living in towns for gipsy-folk; they could only earn bread in the country districts. While the whole family were at this stage, a young woman, whose sister and brother had been taken off the streets by our homes, advised the mother to apply at our Ever-Open Door at Brighton; indeed, she brought her there herself. Winnie, the elder girl, had a black eye. Kate, the younger, was in the habit of swearing terribly, and she was as quarrelsome as a child could be!

LITTLE BRITISH NOMADS.

Such were the little British nomads who came into my hands only a few months ago. Both girls are now boarded out in the West Country under gentle Christian influences. They are apparently yielding themselves to the orderly life and tender care of those who have had them in keeping. Winnie is still but eleven years of age and Kate is seven. They will cost me £26 a year, or £13 each, while they are boarded out. Then, after three or four, or perhaps five years of that training and testing life of theirs, a happy home will doubtless be found for them in one of our Colonies. England is no place for girls with such a history behind them, and with such relatives and tramp acquaintances in existence!

As I have said, these two girls are boarded out in rural homes, and I am indeed happy when the circumstances and conditions are such that I can board out a child, instead of bringing her into one of our institutions. But this is not always the case. Very many children who come to me are unfit for boarding-out. Twenty-four years experience in the boarding-out of children have taught me clearly what are the conditions in order to success; and that is why our cottages at Ilford soon become crowded with those whom I cannot board out on account of age, and on other grounds.

Take, for example, the case of a girl whom I will call Amelia. She was recently received on the application of a Suffragan Bishop, who has sent me a great number of wretched little children rescued from tramps, beggars, and people of criminal or vicious life. The good woman employed by the Bishop in this work of rescue wrote me concerning Amelia:—

Many nights Amelia has slept in the streets. Once, when we found them, the mother and child had been in the streets all night, and the latter was nearly blind with inflammation of the eyes. We placed her in hospital, where she remained two months. She has now recovered. The mother is a person of disreputе, living in a house condemned by the police, and among people of the same class as herself. Her feeling towards Amelia can hardly be described. It is savage in the extreme! She had three other children, but Amelia she simply hated, and she subjected her to as much ill-treatment as she dared, without provoking the interference of the ill-conditioned folk among whom she lived.

Now, on receiving this child, it was immediately apparent that she must not be boarded out. She must be kept in a small cottage home, where gradually the influences would tend to correct the evils that had been sown and nurtured in her earlier life. And it is for such as Amelia that I am now pleading that further accommodation may be given me for housing unwanted and homeless little girls, who need not only rescue, but years of patient care and Christian example and gentle training.

MORE COTTAGES WANTED.

On the new ground attached to our Village Home at Barkingside I have room for a great many more cottages, each of which, when built, will accommodate in perpetuity successive families of twenty rescued girls and their "mother." But, alas! to build each house will cost £1,150 and, unless I have promises of such gifts, how can I go forward? It ought not to be difficult to raise the money needed to build the twelve further cottages that are urgently required on our freehold site, for the little wastrel girls of this great Christian nation. Think of the vast sums that are spent every day by the wealthy classes on mere art treasures, which can give but little satisfaction to the heart as compared with the thought of the rescue of a little child, body and soul. During the past year, for example, 10,500 guineas was paid for a picture by Romney; for another, by Hobbema, 9,200 guineas; for another, by Hoppner, 7,800 guineas; for a picture of some cattle and sheep by Troyon, 7,000 guineas; for a picture by Raeburn, 6,500 guineas; and for the portrait of an old lady, by Rembrandt, 5,500 guineas; while for a Tudor cup, 4¼in. high, 4,100 guineas were paid in the sale room; and for a James I. silver gilt cup, 4,000 guineas. And there were a great many other art treasures changed for enormous sums, amounting to nearly £2,000,000 sterling. Votaries of wealth, luxury, and the arts are unsparing in their pursuit of culture and the pleasures which come from the possession of the rare and beautiful. I would earnestly plead that whatever may be the claims of art upon its votaries, the claims of these unwanted children (who, if unrescued, must grow up a peril to the State and a misery to themselves, as well as a reproach to the Christian Church), upon the Christian conscience, are paramount.

It is just thirty years ago since in the pages of The Christian I first pleaded for help to build our Village Homes at Barkingside. I look back now, with unspeakable gratitude, upon what God then wrought by the willing hands of His stewards.

OVER 9,000 LITTLE GIRLS

have, through the instrumentality of our Cottages, been already rescued and cherished and mothered, and, above all, have been taught of Christ and led in ways of prayer and goodness. In a number of these cases, by the blessing of God, they have been brought into the full liberty of His children, and, in not a few instances, have become wholly devoted to His service. And now it is to that very Village, where so much has been already accomplished, that I earnestly desire to add these new Cottages on the freehold land which our Incorporated Association has purchased, and which is firmly vested by our Deed of Incorporation for the purposes of the charity for ever.

Each new house may be called by the name of the donor, or in memory of any dear child or friend who has gone to the heavenly home. May I, however, add, for the sake of those who may wish to promise a cottage, and who perhaps are not prepared to pay all the money down at once, that it will not be necessary to do so. If, say, £250 can be sent when the promise is made, the remainder can follow in instalments of £200, at intervals of three or four months. It is possible that, in some instances, this system of deferred payments may make the gift easier. For example, half of it might be paid this year, the remainder early next year. I am hoping that we may be able to hold our Annual Fête this year at the Village early in July. What joy it will bring to us all if then some new Cottages could be opened and dedicated to the service of our Lord among His little ones, and others have their foundation stones laid?

IN MEMORY OF DEAR CHILDREN.

Meanwhile, I would invite the readers of The Christian who can do so, to visit Ilford at an early date. Let them go down and see with their own eyes the dear Village as it now is, the new land we have acquired, the beautiful sites which are ready for Cottages as soon as they are given or promised; let them join with our children in their service of thankfulness and praise in our Little Children's Church; and then I have no doubt that many motherly and fatherly hearts will, in memory of their own dear children so tenderly watched over and safeguarded, respond to this plea, which, on behalf of homeless and forlorn little girls, I commit in faith and hope to our Father's blessing.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

AS president of the above Mission, Prebendary Webb-Peploe says:—

"God in His mercy has graciously blessed our efforts. Many of His ancient people have been brought to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, and many more are being almost daily instructed in the way of salvation through Christ alone.

"Our Mission House in Whitechapel Road is much used. The reading-room is often crowded with Jews, the daily Bible-class secures the attention of many, the Gospel service on the Jewish Sabbath is largely attended, and the meetings for Jewish women and children are full of encouragement. Indeed, the Mission House has become in the short time that it has been opened a really strong centre of evangelistic effort, and we are thankful to say that by the generosity of a friend the building is now practically free of debt; but £800 is required within the next month, in order to close the accounts for the year on March 31 without deficit.

"The outlook is most encouraging, both at the Mission centre and at Mitcham, where we have our Home for Converts. We do not like to contemplate the curtailment of any of our work, and if funds fail us now it would be little short of a calamity."

An Encouraging Letter.

I AM sure my boy and girl readers will be interested in the letter which appears below. It is a great pleasure and privilege to me to have my occasional talks with you, and I am glad to know of the kind way in which you receive and appreciate them. But a letter, like this one, telling of the work of God's Spirit in the lives of boys and girls like yourselves, and of their enjoyment of the Christian life, will, I think, appeal to you in a special way.

As I read it, it brought back to my mind memories of my own schooldays, and of the really happy times that were experienced by those who had yielded their young lives to the Saviour. We, too, had prayer-meetings amongst ourselves, as well as those conducted with us by the masters.

It was during these days that I myself was led to Jesus—the result of a conversation on spiritual matters with another lad. Then we were very keen about bringing others to Him, which was one of the chief objects of our prayers. We had many delightful answers to them, too, which greatly cheered us. A boy for whom we often prayed gave himself to the Lord at a Sunday night service, and we asked him to join us at a prayer meeting a few of us held under the garden bushes before breakfast. But it was a drenching wet night, and the prospects for such a meeting were most unpromising, so we "took it to the Lord in prayer," with this result:—

One of the masters came into the dormitory after I was in bed to speak about the boy referred to, and I told him he had promised to join us in the morning.

"Where do you have your meeting?" he asked.

"Under the bushes, when it is fine," I replied, "but I don't know what we shall do to-morrow, as the ground will be very wet, even if it is not actually raining."

The good man was silent a minute, and then said, "You can have my sitting-room if you will be away by half-past seven." Needless to say, I gratefully accepted the kind offer, and thanked God for hearing prayer in such a simple matter.

Do not be afraid to go to God with even the little things of life, for He has promised that if we ask "according to His Will," and "with thanksgiving" for mercies already granted, He will hear us. May you have many such answers, and also experience the joy of leading friends and playmates to Jesus. Pray, too, for your fellow-searchers, and for your friend

Uncle Tom.

Copy of Letter Referred to.

The children have, for the first time, been permitted to go to Sunday-school. Owing to the Bible training given by your "Searcher," their knowledge of Scripture is not found to be one whit behind the very best scholars in the various classes entered by them, and who have had all the advantages of home training and Sunday-school combined.

In fact both their mother and I have only consented to their joining the Sunday-school on the distinct condition that the "Searcher" has the first place. They will certainly be withdrawn from the former if we find that both classes are proving too much for them.

We do feel very grateful for the "Searcher" training, and you will be glad to know that they are all very fond of it. You will also like to hear that one of my boys was received into Church fellowship on a confession of his faith when just one day less than twelve years of age.

We believe him to be a real born-again child, and that for several years. He was severely questioned as to his conversion and present spiritual experience, and the testimony borne by the Pastor and two others was of the highest kind. Each dealt with him separately, and the Pastor's testimony was, "I was much refreshed by the child's prayer in his own house."

One of my little girls, too (ten years old), gives the constant testimony that she knows the Lord Jesus, and that the word that spoke peace to her soul was "The blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

My boy is greatly quickened at present. He and other eight or nine boys meet on Saturdays (no school then) alternately in each other's homes, for praise and prayer and reading of the Word. Their unsaved school-fellows are the subjects of their prayers and efforts, and in addition they go to open-air meetings to assist in singing, &c., and in inviting boys to the church, &c.

No adult has been in any of their Saturday meetings. These were spontaneously commenced and are conducted by themselves. The pastor one Saturday invited them to his house and gave them a few hints on prayer (which is the only exception I know of to the above statement).

There is, I understand, a similar Saturday meeting of girls in the same church, also of spontaneous origin, I believe; but although my little girl has been invited by one of the members, she has not yet been present at the meeting. The girls are more numerous and older than the boys.

All of the boys in the Saturday meeting have applied for Church fellowship, and one who was admitted along with my boy is younger than he and a very bright Christian. There is here at present quite a spirit of inquiry after the Lord Jesus among children and young people.

Christ's Teaching about Righteousness (Matt. v. 17-20; 38-42).

THE Lord Jesus does not destroy, but fulfils, as the noon fulfils the promise of the dawn, and as summer fulfils the promise of the spring. Do not be afraid of Him, young friends, as though He takes delight in dashing the cup from thirsty lips, and disappointing the innocent and natural desires which He has Himself created. He will certainly show Himself hostile to every wrong way of gratifying your nature. Would He be really kind if He didn't? But He will fulfil the desire of them that fear Him in the best way, so that they will be satisfied for ever.

This is true religion! Christ constructs; He is more positive than negative, more yea and amen than nay. He sends the pulse of His own new sap into the trees, and as it passes to the tip of every branch, the old dead leaves of the autumn flutter noiselessly to the ground. Take your nature to Him, and ask Him to do for it what He has done for the great principles of righteousness, and the passionate yearnings after God which underlie the Old Testament Scriptures.

A young girl whom I knew once went to Hugh Price Hughes to ask how far she might go to dances, &c. He did not answer her directly, but pointed to the well-known line, "Thou, O Christ, art all I want," and asked, "Do you believe that?" This was allowing Christ to fulfil.

The law and the prophets evidently stand for the authority and principles of the Old Testament (Luke xvi. 16; Acts xiii. 15). Christ came not to undo them (so Wickliffe's translation), but to unfold them, embody them, and enshrine them in the reverence, affection, and character of men. Hence Rom. xiii. 8-10. The Hebrew code of truth, whether moral or religious (not ceremonial, because this, in the nature of things, could only be temporary), never had such a wide sphere of influence and commanded such perfect obedience as have been secured by the teachings of our Lord and the descent of the Holy Spirit. In this sense the whole world has come to dwell in the tents of Shem.

Heaven and earth stand for the whole material universe, and are emblems of immutability (Jer. xxxiii. 25). Till "the crack of doom" the influence of the old Hebrew Scriptures, reinforced as they are by the New Testament, must prevail. The jot was the smallest Hebrew letter; the tittle was a small part of a letter. What a contrast there is between some of the modern critics and the attitude of the Master. They appear to take pleasure in destruction, in pulling down and overthrowing the foundations of faith, giving nothing in their place. It is a greater and more godlike thing to build up the positive. The more perfect truth will always become the permanent and abiding. The destructive are not excluded, but ranked least, the constructive greatest in Christ's Kingdom.

The righteousness which the Lord seeks (20) is altogether different from that of the Pharisees. Theirs was outward and formal, and essentially selfish, since by it they desired to earn admittance into God's favour: Christ, on the other hand, demands a righteousness which is inward, vital, and spiritual. We stand before God in the imputed righteousness of Christ's finished work, and then He imparts to us an inner righteousness through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

In verse 38, as in foregoing paragraphs, notice how the Lord distinguishes between "those of old time" and Himself. "I say unto you." What majesty is in those words. He counted it not a robbery to be equal with God, yet He was meek and lowly in heart. How can you reconcile these statements except by the belief that He was Emmanuel—God with us?

Three instances are given of the non-resistance of evil men: first, personal violence; second, a legal process; third, compulsory service. Wherever we alone are concerned, we are bidden to yield rather than resist; and there are many instances on record when to yield has been the method by which evil has been subdued. A Congo missionary belonging to Harley House allowed the natives to take all his goods, but they were so smitten with compunction that they brought them all back in the evening. It is the second mile that tells.

Whenever women or children, the weak or oppressed, are concerned, I decidedly think that we must stand up for and defend them. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

The general secretary of the London Council of Christian Endeavour (Mr. Stanley P. Edwards) has issued a circular of invitation to the annual Good Friday Convention. The meetings are to be held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and will commence with a "Juniors' Own" at 11 o'clock. The topic for the afternoon rally will be "For Christ," and in the evening "For the Church." Among the speakers are Revs. J. Tolefree Parr, J. R. Fleming, J. W. Ewing, F. J. Horsefield, and Dr. A. T. Pierson.

There have been six conversions on the merchantman, Tasmania, one on the United States steamship, Ranger, and one on the merchantman Pass of Melfort, through the labours of the San Diego, Cal., Floating Endeavourers. Mr. Giles Kellog, State Superintendent of floating work, reports eleven deck services in one month. One, on the United States Steamship, Adams, had an attendance of a hundred. On merchantmen practically the entire crews attended, and a number of officers were present.

The annual convention in connection with the Munster Union of Christian Endeavour has been held in Bandon, co. Cork. It was attended by representatives of thirteen societies from Limerick, Cork, and other parts of the South of Ireland. Rev. J. D. Lamont was elected president for the coming year. Papers were read by Mrs. Lamont and Mr. T. J. Hollins, and addresses delivered by Revs. J. E. Neill, B.A., Thos. Scott, and others. The Convention, which extended over three days, was a season of much blessing.

The Riot at Ephesus (Acts xix. 29-40).

Golden Text.—Psa. xxxi. 23.

THE Temple of Diana was one of the wonders of the world. The first on record was burnt down about the time of Jeremiah. The second burnt by Herostratus for the sole purpose of making his name notorious. Alexander the Great offered to complete the building of the third, at his own expense, if his name alone could be graven on the stones.

The temple of A.D. 55 was of white marble, with 127 columns, "each the gift of a king," adorned with gold, silver, and precious stones; and served the triple purpose of temple, bank, and museum. The image enshrined (Artemis) was a shapeless block of black wood carved at the upper end into the head and breasts of a woman, her robes covered with mystic signs (v. 35). Superstition rampant in its worst forms. The shrines were carried into distant lands as objects of worship, also in the homes. Carried at the head of processions, and in battle. Also worn on the person.

The Riot Roused.

Motives, self-interest, avarice, love of money, under cloak of devotion, real or feigned, to the popular religion. Demetrius, the instigator, a successful tradesman, with his band of skilled artificers and workmen, an important body, had made their religion bring in big profits. Artful, clever, popular, the theatre was colossal, 595,000ft. in diameter, open to the skies. Built up the sloping sides of a hill, tiers of seats to hold 50,000 people. Ruins lately discovered. Had long echoed the name of Diana. Paul and his helpers proclaimed the Gospel from its arena.

The Riot Quelled.

The Recorder's speech. Politic, tactful, and effectual. If Demetrius had been wronged, bring the matter legally before the the proconsul. If a lesser grievance, let the city magistrates decide. Safeguarded Paul and reminded Demetrius that Roman power punished rioters by death. He was fearless, wise, prudent, firm and quiet. A champion of justice.

The Gospel triumphed (1) through Paul. (a) His faithful preaching and teaching from house to house. (b) His zeal under obstacles, weakness of body, affliction, persecution (1 Cor. iv. 11, 13; 2 Cor. i. 8). (c) Self-sacrifice and courage (v. 30).

(2) Through Demetrius, he admitted his craft suffered, and the temple was in danger (vv. 26, 27).

(3) Gaius and Aristarchus, who suffered with patience and faith. So the Lord delivered them (Psa. xxxi. 23).

The fears of Demetrius have come true. The Temple of Diana and even Ephesus have passed away, but the Gospel is still spreading. "The power of God" in the world to-day.

4. The town clerk and the asiarchs, the ten men of wealth and influence elected annually to preside over the games and idolatrous festivities, were used of the Lord to preserve His faithful servant from the fury of the mob (vv. 31, 37, 41; 1 Cor. xv. 32).

The Boys and Girls of Ephesus, and the grown folk too! Was there any noticeable difference between the followers of the Lord Jesus and the worshippers of the idol? The Ephesians had sung songs about Diana from infancy. The idol festivals were their ideal of pleasure. To join in the music and dancing and feasting, to wear the dress and the garlands, was their greatest joy. Business and pleasure, work and games were all stamped "Diana." To become a priest in the Temple or an asiarch in the Council was their highest ambition. All was vanity in life; after death—what?

Those among them who had believed the Gospel had learned to sing a New Song of "Jesus and His love." Their sins forgiven, the love of God in their hearts, the Holy Spirit their Guide and Comforter, their solid pleasure was found sitting at the feet of Paul, "learning more about Jesus"; and then going out among their old companions to invite them to share the blessing of eternal life in the Son of God. "In the Name of the Lord Jesus" (1 Cor. x. 31) was stamped on their home-life, business, and recreations. To be ambassadors for the King of Glory was their humble but high ambition (2 Cor. v. 20). They lived in time for eternity. After death—what? "The resurrection of Life" (John v. 29). Afterward, "fulness of joy at Thy right hand, pleasures for evermore" (Ps. xvi. 11).

S.S. Lesson Illustrations.

TRADE SLAVERY.

When the silversmiths of Ephesus objected to the teaching of Paul, they did as many other men of business have since done. On the abolition of slavery being suggested to Parliament in 1788, trade and other considerations delayed the emancipation for at least twenty years. To-day the drink curse of our land is very widespread, because so many of our legislators are more or less interested in the "trade." At the present time, as in the days of the Apostle, various deep-rooted curses are tolerated for business reasons, and when a reformer now appears in our midst, as did Paul, and preaches righteousness, there is always the fear that the whole city will be filled with confusion (v. 29). In our domestic and business lives we too often treat our pocket as a God, and are guided by our purse rather than by our conscience. Many of the "cheats" of trade and home affairs would disappear if we would but test our every action by the touchstone of God's Word.

LOVERS OF DARKNESS.

In a recently-published book, regarding a tour through China, there is an account of a curious industry carried on in one of the western provinces. A certain wax is produced there in large quantities, and is obtained from an insect in the grub state. These insects are caught and carried into the towns at nighttime by coolies, who run swiftly. If moved in the daytime the little creatures would be metamorphosed by the light from the grub to the mature insect stage, which would spoil them for the purpose of supplying wax. The authorities of Ephesus were anxious to keep the people in darkness; for with the light of Christianity in their souls they would have metamorphosed into another condition of life; and the traders connected with Diana preferred to have the city in religious darkness for their own commercial benefit. Because of the attitude of these men, when Paul would have entered in unto the people the disciples suffered him not (v. 30).

GOSPEL—SUNLIGHT.

When scientific people desire to measure sunshine they allow the sun's rays to play through a globe on to a sheet of chemically prepared paper. As the sunshine touches the sensitized surface it indicates, by a wide or narrow mark, the strength of the light, and in that way the varying power on any given day may be registered. Similarly in our lesson, Ephesus was being placed beneath the globe of enlightenment, and the Gospel beams were brought to bear upon its people. The interested craftsmen were anxious to prevent the focussing of Christianity upon the city, lest the light should spoil their business. On the other hand, the Apostle was desirous of flooding the place with the glorious news of the Saviour, so that the Ephesians might worship the true God rather than the Goddess Diana, whose image was supposed to have fallen down from Jupiter (v. 35). We who live in the sunlight of the Gospel should display in our lives the enlightenment of God's wonderful grace.

FALSE CHARMS.

Throughout India to-day one finds an enormous trade being done with small charms, shrines, and images, very much as was the case in Epesus. From their earliest days many of the native children are surrounded and clothed with charms. Indeed, one often sees the little folk of India running hither and thither without any other clothing than their "lucky charms" around their bodies. A boy has his waist-string, and a girl her fantastic jewellery; and thus protected, as the benighted parents imagine, against the many evil spirits of India, the children are allowed to roam at their will. With the light of the Gospel superstition disappears, and the preaching of the Apostle was the matter Demetrius and the craftsmen had against the newcomers to Ephesus (v. 38). If in our daily affairs we do anything on which God's blessing cannot be asked, we may be sure we are in error.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

READING.

LATER intelligence of the recent mission of Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones, at Reading, shows that the meetings were very effective in reaching the people. The crowded audiences in the Town Hall, and the attention paid to the message that was given so powerfully in speech and song, testified to the impressive character of the meetings. A correspondent writes, from Church Crookham, Hants.:—"After reading in The Christian about Dr. Henry's meetings, I determined to walk the long distance to Reading and back to hear him, and never listened to a more earnest advocate. The great audience in the Town Hall at Reading on February 19 was held spellbound. I hope every town in England will invite these gentlemen to undertake a mission."

SUNDERLAND.

The concluding days of the mission of Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones proved to be most effective. Large and increasing audiences gathered every night, and as Dr. Henry dwelt in his forceful way on Christian duty in regard to the drink and drink traffic, he secured the deep interest of Christian people, and led to much heart-searching. On the Thursday a large gathering of young people took place, and 250 of them signed the pledge. On Friday evening Dr. Henry gave his illustrated lecture on "Public-House Life in America" to a crowded audience, about 3,000 being present.

During the mission, in addition to the children's pledges, 400 adults have signed the forms. The insistence by Dr. Henry of the Christian basis of the Temperance movement, and his appeals to Christians to join hands in fighting the drink, will long be remembered in Sunderland. R. B. O.

MIDDLESBROUGH.

The campaign in Middlesbrough had an auspicious start on Saturday afternoon last, when over a thousand young people were addressed in the Temperance Hall, and 300 new pledges were secured. Subsequently a reception was accorded the missioners, and was attended, in response to the invitations of Mr. and Mrs. E. T. John, by representatives of nearly every church and congregation and temperance organization in the town. The North-Eastern Daily Gazette says:—"Such a gathering in an industrial town on a Saturday evening, when religious and moral reform workers naturally seek for rest was in itself a remarkable demonstration of earnestness. Dr. Henry, too, after he had been officially welcomed by Mr. John, as President of the Temperance Society, by the Mayor (Dr. Hedley), by Alderman J. F. Wilson, President of the Free Church Council, and Councillor Roberts, President of the Church Council, at once showed himself to be a man in earnest."

Despite a heavy storm, immense audiences assembled on Lord's Day last. At night about 2,000 people were crowded into the Temperance Hall, and a large overflow meeting was held in Gilkes Street Chapel near by. Deep interest was manifested in the impassioned Gospel address given by Dr. Henry and the effective singing of Mr. Armon Jones. Undoubtedly the mission owes much to the labours of the united committee. The Herald states that "the thoroughness of the work may be gathered from the fact that a canvass of the entire town has been made. Rev. W. M. Yorwerth, minister of Marton Road Baptist Church, by his indefatigable labours has rendered lasting service to the cause."

Obituary.

REV. F. J. HOBBINS.

THE death of Rev. Frederick John Hobbins, which took place on Lord's Day last, after an operation in the London Hospital, in his sixty-third year, deprives an East-end parish of a very faithful and earnest pastor. After labouring for a time as curate of Spitalfields, he was from 1867 to 1871 curate and lecturer of the parish church of Limehouse, and was chaplain of the Stepney Union from 1871 to 1877. In the latter year he was appointed to Christ Church, Stepney, where he did excellent and laborious work.

MR. S. B. CLARKE, SPEZIA.

On February 5, Mr. Samuel Barling Clarke, brother of Mr. Edward Clarke, of the Spezia Mission, passed to his rest. He was the second son of Rev. Thomas Clarke, Baptist minister, well known in his day as a devout philanthropist and a most laborious and faithful servant of Jesus Christ. Early developing a talent for languages and drawing, and finding in Italy a splendid field for his pencil, he resolved to make that country his home. As his brother Edward was at about that period laying the foundations of the Spezia mission, he generously placed in the hands of the late Dr. Angus the sum of £400, to enable Edward to carry to completion the plans for the Mission House, near Casa Alberto. Under the roof of this house which he thus aided to complete, after years of faithful devotion to the mission he so much loved, and after a long and trying illness most patiently borne, and during which he manifested so much of the spirit of Him he so ardently loved, he gently fell asleep.

REV. DR. HURST.

Rev. Dr. John Hurst, rector of St. Swithin, London-stone, and canon of Huron, who died suddenly on Friday last at Green Lanes, N., was brought up in Canada. In 1859 he was made rector of the parish of Windsor, Ontario, and for fifteen years did good service as a pioneer of Church missions in the Far West. On coming to England he was naturally drawn into the work of the Colonial and Continental Church Society, of which he became assistant secretary. In 1881 he was appointed to the vicarage of St. Mark's, Tollington Park, N., and in 1889 accepted, in addition, the secretariat of the Colonial and Continental Church Society. It was impossible for the two posts to be efficiently combined, St. Mark's being a large and arduous parish, and in 1892 Canon Hurst was nominated to the rectory of St. Swithin, London-stone, a small City parish, where he toiled with diligence. His administration of the Colonial and Continental Church Society was of considerable advantage to that organization. He retired from the secretaryship about a year ago.

REV W. HAY CHAPMAN.

The death is announced of Rev. William Hay Chapman, who departed this life at Netherleigh, Eastbourne, last week, after a long illness, at the age of seventy. Belonging to a well-known Evangelical family, he had occupied several benefices where Evangelical teaching had been the rule. In 1860 he was appointed to High Cross, near Ware, and in 1864 accepted from trustees the vicarage of Southwold. From 1867 to 1870 he was vicar of Doveridge, and from 1870 to 1873 of Lowestoft. In the latter year he accepted the chaplaincy of the Lock Hospital, which he held for three years, moving in 1876 to the vicarage of Christ Church, Clifton, to which he was nominated by the Simeon Trustees. After five years here, and six as vicar of St. Peter's, Southborough, he was selected in 1887 by the Crown to succeed the Rev. Sholto Douglas as rector of All Souls', Langham Place, which important cure he held for six years. He was subsequently rector in turn of Kirby Cane, Suffolk, and of Maresfield, Sussex. A year ago, after continued illness, he resigned work and went in search of health to Southwold and to Eastbourne. He was a man of noble presence, and greatly beloved by those among whom he laboured.

About Books.

THE JEWISH ENCYCLOPÆDIA.

THE succeeding volumes of this great undertaking bring deeply-interesting surprises to the Christian student. The boldness of the conception is matched by the comprehensive character of the enterprise. A "Descriptive Record of the History, Religion, Literature, and Customs of the Jewish People from the Earliest Times to the Present day," as this work is declared on the title-page to be, cannot but be a massive affair; obviously Christian antiquities, and many subjects along the by-ways of religious history, must be included. And such one finds to be the case—of course treated from the Jewish point of view, but not the less thoroughly on that account. Here we read of Jews who have become Christians as well as of such as have become nothing in particular; and when institutions known as Biblical are described, it is in the light of views, historical and traditional, that are largely new to those who have not been brought up in a Jewish atmosphere.

The third volume* opens with Bencemero and ends with Chazanuth. Hence we are through with the "Abs" and "Bens," and find ourselves in the midst of some great men and things. Among the principal contents, each running to many pages, may be specified—Bible Canon, Bible Editions, Bible Exegesis, Bible Manuscripts, and Bible Translations, some of these being illustrated with reproductions of pages of historic books. Matters of communal importance as well as general interest appear under such headings as Betrothal, Blood-Accusation, Breach of Promise, Burial, Cemetery, Censorship, Charity. What Jewish moralists have to say on Borrowing, Bribery, and Betting is set out with succinctness; there is an account of the Beni-Israel of Bombay, also an elaborate paper on the Calendar. If Jewish history is served up under names of persons and places, all the superstitions of Jewry may be sampled under such headings as Cabala and Bibliomancy.

The editors of this great work are making a book which will deliver its message for many days. When their plan calls a halt on any subject, then they tell you where you can find more information or pursue your studies further. They recognise that even twelve volumes will leave something unsaid, and so they give you a helping hand for continuing investigations. If the pages reflect the specific light of Judaism (Biblical and Traditional) upon religious life and world history, they also enable the Christian to examine somewhat the evolution of Rabbinical thought. Though by no means exhausting the value of such a large work as this, such a use of the volumes will be worth attempting on the part of Christians, and assuredly the labour thus expended will be fruitful in various ways.

Studies in Romans. By Margaret F. Bean. (1s. net. Baptist Tract and Book Society.) A modest work, but in every way excellent. Mrs. Bean has studied the noble Epistle to real purpose, and she gives us a careful analysis and very useful lists of comparisons and contrasts, also the special features of each chapter. Many workers will thank us for commending this little work to their notice.

The Master's Guide for His Disciples, being a manual of all the recorded sayings of Jesus, arranged for easy consultation and systematic reading, is a little book which has had a useful circulation in various forms. It is now issued at a very low rate with a view to secure for it a wider reading. It is put in this shape in order that it may be bought for distribution by Christian workers at the lowest possible price. (6d. net. Elliot Stock.)

The Indexed Testament is the title of an edition of the "Salvation Testament" issued from the London Bible Warehouse. (1s. 6d. net.) Great texts are underlined and accompanied by distinctive letters, which recall the purposes for which they may be quoted on emergency. Moreover, the passages bearing on Salvation are so classified and indexed at the end of the book that any person may turn them up at a moment's notice.

New Testament Holiness, by Thomas Cook (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly), is a comprehensive exposition of the doctrine of sanctification. It is written by one who has for years been stimulating the churches on the subject. Mr. Cook is always clear in statement, and apt in the illustration of teaching and practice. His book will impress the earnest reader, who will almost certainly desire again and again to repeat the blessed exercise of its perusal. A portrait of the beloved author is given as frontispiece.

A somewhat unusual vein in the mine of spiritual truth has been worked by Rev. Charles Brown in his Talks to Children on Bunyan's Holy War (2s. 6d. H. R. Allenson); and it has yielded pure gold. These twenty-one sermonettes reveal a mind which could enter with fullest sympathy into Bunyan's ideas, and by the exercise of rare powers of analysis and keen insight could apply the teaching to the circumstances and needs of our day. Parents and teachers will find much that will arouse the interest of youthful minds, while the tone is thoroughly Evangelical throughout.

It is freedom in the widest sense which Mr. Henry Johnson has in view when he tells the stories of a series of great victories in A Book of Heroes. (2s. Religious Tract Society). Epaminodas, Telemachus, and Garibaldi are included; but the majority of the men and women are those who went forth at the bidding of Christ, conquering the powers of darkness in His name and in His strength. Missionaries are specially and deservedly prominent. Anne Askew, Elizabeth Fry, and Lady Bankes are given as representative heroines. The excellent illustrations add to the attractions of a book well fitted to give to the youthful reader a worthy and noble ideal of the Christian calling.

The Poetry of Plants. By Hugh Macmillan, D.D., LL.D. (6s. Isbister.) Twenty-five papers on a theme which is the author's "very own." The book is not a botanical treatise, but, in the words of the preface, a collection of popular studies, showing the many points of beauty and interest about some of the commonest of our trees and wild flowers; things which we are apt to pass by in the fields and by the waysides without any recognition. The result of keen observation and much thought, the pages introduce us to an atmosphere where poets and philosophers join hands. Sometimes the natural products of Bible lands are in question; at other times incidents of history are interwoven with charming descriptions of common-place objects. Many a moral and spiritual lesson is pointed by the way; and such as read with sympathy are sure to reap pleasure and profit from the exercise.

Messrs. Gowans Brothers, 8 and 9, Clerkenwell Green, E.C., have issued a series of Gospel cards—Life Words—likely to be of great service in evangelistic work. On one side are striking passages from the Word of God, attractively printed; on the other, the way of salvation is clearly but briefly explained. The themes include Sin, Sacrifice, Salvation. (1s. per 100; reduction for quantities.)

Mr. Albert Dawson (Ingleneuk, East Finchley, London, N.), whose little book, Joseph Parker, D.D., His Life and Ministry, gave so much pleasure to Dr. Parker and his friends, has been asked to write a complete biography of the great preacher. Mr. Dawson will be glad to have any letters written by Dr. Parker, or information or reminiscences, particularly if relating to his early days, or Banbury and Manchester ministries. All original documents will be carefully returned.

A Saved Darling is a new Service of Song, by Mr. H. F. Morriss, of Rotherhithe, adapted for Bands of Hope and similar societies on their "entertainment evenings." It is the narrative of a youth who was nearly "lost in London," but was met by an earnest worker and saved by his influence from a life of sin. The music is all old and well known, so that the service can be rendered without previous preparation. (Q. J. James, 103, Lower Road, Rotherhithe, E. 3d.)

The Glare of Judgment. By Anna Belinda Goodchild. (Paper covers, 6d.). The story is told in a bright and interesting way, on strictly Evangelical lines, and the Gospel runs through it as a silver thread. Encouraging to Christian workers, but especially suited for giving to servants and young women generally. The Habits of Christ. Four Essays by Rev. Geo. Goodchild. (6d.). Excellent in tone and intent, and suggestive of cultured thought, though a little lacking in simplicity. "Aloneness with God," "Spirit Culture," "The Exercise of Spiritual Speech," and "Frequenting God's House," are the themes chosen. (From the Authors, 4, Edinburgh Avenue, North Parade, Skegness.)

Evangelists at Work.

(Every child of God may find a useful service in remembering in prayer the evangelists and hearers referred to on this page, from week to week. Thus is Revival spread.)

Rev. John McNeill at Bristol.

THE interest of Rev. John McNeill's mission at Bristol culminated in the five week-night meetings in the Colston Hall, this being the first time the new large hall had been used for an evangelistic mission on week evenings. On the Monday and Tuesday the weather proved very unpropitious; but even under these depressing circumstances no other building in the city could have contained the people who flocked to the hall. On the Wednesday a special rally was made of the Christian Endeavour Societies. Half an hour before the time announced for the meeting, the hall was crowded, and when the proceedings commenced, some ten minutes before time, every inch of standing room which the rules permitted was filled. Mr. McNeill spoke on the "Call of the Spirit and Bride," and few who listened to that address will ever forget it. It is unfortunate in connection with this meeting that many who came long distances to hear the preacher were unable to obtain admission to the hall. At the last meeting, speaking from Phil. ii. 12, 13, Mr. McNeill made at the close of his address a most impressive temperance appeal to Christians, thus bringing to an end a series of addresses remarkable alike for their force and variety, their humour and their pathos.

During the first week of the mission, an afternoon meeting was held in the Broadmead Chapel, by far the largest chapel in the centre of Bristol. This meeting from the first showed the very great impression which the preacher had made upon the community; for day by day the attendance increased until by the end of the week it could not have fallen much short of 1,500 people.

Promising, however, as this meeting was, Mr. McNeill preferred to rely upon a service held during the dinner hour, in which he could reach the business men and women at a time when they could attend. As he phrased it, "Nothing cuts so deeply into the vitals of a community as a short midday meeting held at an hour when all classes can spare a portion of the meal time to attend." The wisdom of this change, which was made in the second week, was speedily manifested by the fact that although the attendance never came quite up to the 3.30 service, the character of it completely changed. The gallery was always more than full of women, mainly shop and factory workers, and the floor of the chapel was always full, and sometimes crowded, with men—business men and working-men—and it was refreshing to the workers to see the same faces full of interest, and often something more than interest, day after day.

The Missions' Committee were unable to secure the use of the Colston Hall for all Mr. McNeill's Sunday meetings, but they were deeply indebted to the committee working the Sunday afternoon services, who placed that service at Mr. McNeill's disposal, which gave him three opportunities of reaching, on the Lord's Days, as large an audience as the Hall would contain. At eight o'clock each Sunday evening he addressed a meeting in the People's Palace, a large music hall. Each night this building, which seats between 2,000 and 3,000, was crowded, and here the gathering was of a rougher kind than those obtained in any other meeting. Each Sunday morning the pulpit of one of the leading Nonconformist churches was placed at Mr. McNeill's disposal, so that on the Lord's Day he practically spanned the whole social scale. Those very difficulties which the committee met in seeking buildings to accommodate the people desirous of hearing the missioner became a means of spreading into all classes of the community the interest and blessing which his visit has effected.

Mr. McNeill's methods have not included an after-meeting in the usual sense of the term, but he had abundant evidence of the good accomplished during the Mission by the number of letters he received before leaving Bristol, and by the receipt of cards which had been sent in indicating that the sender had as a Christian been distinctly helped, as a backslider been restored, or as a sinner savingly converted. Wherever those who have sent him cards have expressed such a desire, the names will be sent to the ministers interested.

One of the features of the Mission has been the singing of a large united choir numbering over 500 voices, and completely filling the large orchestra of the Colston Hall. This choir was formed by volunteers from the choirs of almost all Nonconformist Churches in Bristol, and it is pleasing to be able to state that it has been decided to make it a permanent organization, and to endeavour through its agency to organize sacred song services in public institutions and other spheres that may be available.

No such meetings have been held in Bristol for many years. It was frequently remarked that the eagerness of the people to hear was like the old times of 1872-75 come back again. The work has been done, the people have been gathered, the Word has been proclaimed, the results are in God's hands, and the glory is His. L. P. N.

Mr. W. R. Lane in Blackpool.

A ten days' mission under the auspices of the Blackpool Free Church Council has just been concluded, the missioner being Mr. W. R. Lane. The Sunday services were held at the Grand Theatre, and the week night at the Wesleyan Chapel, excepting the lecture on "Bunyan and the 'Pilgrim's Progress,'" and the story of the preacher's conversion and experiences as a Coldstream Guardsman. For these the Hippodrome was taken. There were large congregations throughout, and a gracious spirit prevailed. Good work has been done. The meeting for men only on the second Sunday afternoon proved exceptionally powerful, and was, perhaps, the largest of its kind ever seen in this town. The theatre was well filled, and the address to which the men listened was worthy of the occasion. Mr. Lane is essentially a manly man, and by the men of our town his message was keenly appreciated. The closing meeting at the huge Hippodrome was a clear indication that a great work could have been achieved had the preacher been able to extend his visit. Although most unfavourable weather prevailed the congregation was both large and enthusiastic. H. C. W.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

During the month of February Mr. Albert E. Sims, of the Evangelization Society, conducted a mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E. Mr. Sims paid his first visit to the Great Hall, and he was not long in winning his way into the hearts of the people. From the very first there was an appreciable increase in the attendance on the week nights, showing the hold he had upon those who came. Sunday nights the fine hall presented, as usual, an imposing sight, with its thousands spread all over, right up to the ceiling at the back. Mr. Sims has a way quite his own of presenting the truth. A good voice, well used with emphasis just when it is needed, gives him great power over his audience.

The people sat in marked silence and listened to the proclamation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He spoke as a man who loved their souls and would do his utmost to get them to immediate decision for Christ. Nor was his pleading in vain, for night after night men and women wended their way into the inquiry-room, and were dealt with by earnest Christian workers. Many hitherto miserable homes have been made happy by the faithful preaching of Mr. Sims. His addresses to believers were most helpful. They were out of the ordinary rut, giving sound advice based upon the blessed utterances of the Master. Many Christians expressed their thankfulness, and wished his mission had lasted two months instead of one. The work was such as to encourage all engaged. To God be the glory for all the trophies won!

The Baptist Church, Putney, S.W.

It has pleased God, in answer to much earnest and believing prayer, to visit the Baptist Church in Putney with a blessed revival. For a long time past the spirit of supplication has been manifest, and expectations of spiritual refreshing have been cherished. The honoured instrumentality chosen of God for the bringing about of this pleasing result was Mr. William Olney, together with his colleague, Mr. F. Spencer Johnson. At every service definite blessing was experienced, and so manifestly was the Holy Ghost present to convince sinners of their guilt and to reveal in them "the Mighty to save," that no one personally acquainted with the movement can be in doubt as to the depth and permanence of the work. One very gratifying feature in this revival is that it promises to inaugurate a period of spiritual awakening throughout the district. While large numbers were led openly to declare themselves for the first time as believers on the Lord Jesus Christ, many went away from the services deeply stirred in their hearts to seek the Saviour in the solitude of their own homes. Other congregations in the locality have felt the influence of this awakening. One Christian worker in the town, who is the superintendent of a progressive evangelistic agency in a poor district, writes to the Baptist minister thus:—"Fifteen of our dear children from eleven years upwards to fifteen decided for Christ. . . . For some months we have brought our elder boys and girls together each week to prayerfully consider this matter of deciding early. . . . They were therefore ripe for the earnest, loving service of Mr. Olney and Mr. Johnson at the mission just closed at your church."

F. J. F.

Paisley U.F. Presbytery.

This winter, the United Free Church Presbytery undertook the task of carrying on evangelistic services on Sabbath evenings in the George A. Clark Town Hall, which is seated for about 2,000. Rev. J. Cables, of Oakshaw West U.F. Church, was convener of the committee, and to him the effectiveness of the meetings has been mainly due. A large choir was organized from the various congregations in town, under the leadership of Mr. Gibson, and their effective rendering of Sankey's hymns did much to brighten the proceedings. Various preachers from the town and neighbourhood have given addresses, but on the evening of Sabbath, February 22, the hall, for the first time, presented the appearance it used to have when Mr. Moody, Dr. Pentecost, or Rev. John McNeill was the speaker. It was packed in every part, and on the platform were many who are well known in town for their interest in evangelistic work. Mr. Joseph Wright, of Glasgow, gave a stirring address on Rev. iii. 20: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." He at once secured the attention of his large audience, and when he closed it was easily seen that the impression made upon his hearers was deep. Many of them were of the non-churchgoing class.

Lantern Missions in Ireland.

An esteemed correspondent writes:—"Missions at Tralee, for three weeks, and at Ardfert and Ballyheigue Castle, near the Shannon's noble mouth, for one week each have been held during January and February by Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sims. Large numbers have attended, including many of the Roman Catholic people, to whom the beautiful slides of the 'Pilgrim's Progress,' along with Mrs. Sims' solos, prove an irresistible attraction, even in spite, sometimes, of clerical prohibition."

Baptist Church, Hemyock, Devon.

A three-weeks' mission, conducted by Mr. A. W. Smart, of the Evangelization Society, London, has just concluded here. Notwithstanding this being a scattered, rural district, the meetings have been largely attended, people frequently walking eight to twelve miles in getting to and returning from the services, and so crowded was the church several nights that the workers had great difficulty in finding accommodation for the people. The preaching of the Gospel has indeed been made a blessing in winning many precious souls, especially among the young, while believers attending from the various Free Churches received much spiritual help. W.

Rev. A. Allan at Manchester.

A mission of remarkable power has been concluded by Rev. A. Allan at Coupland Street Baptist Church, Manchester. Mr. Allan assisted the pastor in conducting a fortnight's mission, taking the first week's services, while the pastor conducted the second. The encouragement was such that Mr. Allan was invited to take a third week, which he did with blessing to the Church and neighbourhood.

A good number decided for Christ; but the deep spiritual power that prevailed has told upon believers in such a way that it is felt that the mission is only the beginning of much larger blessing. Especially profitable and educative were the Bible readings. Some parents are rejoicing that all their children have decided for Christ. C. H. Watkins, Pastor.

Mr. W. H. Jude at Darlington.

On Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday of last week Mr. W. H. Jude paid a return visit to the Greenbank Primitive Methodist Church, Darlington. His previous visit still lived in the memory of hundreds, and this occasion was anticipated with pleasure. Save on the Tuesday, when the rain came down in torrents, the church was crowded at each service; on the Sunday evening the congregation was well over a thousand persons. The friends were pleased to find that Mr. Jude was stronger than on his previous visit, and that his hold upon the people was greater. Mr. Jude not only cheered and pleased, but he also instructed. The rich spiritual tone of his unique services brought comfort to many, and conviction to not a few. Chas. H. Leach.

Barnsbury Chapel, N.

Mr. Leonard Weaver's mission has been much blessed of God during the past week. The increased attendance has been very encouraging. The meetings have been more varied, with the one object of trying to reach all classes of people, among those taking part being "a converted thief."

On the 26th ult. Lord Radstock also spoke with power to an almost crowded chapel. The words of all these servants of God have been used in leading and helping souls into the kingdom. It is wonderful to see how the people yearn for the Gospel, which alone is the power of God unto salvation. On Saturday Mr. J. Bennett Anderson gave an interesting limelight lecture on his work in Australia and South Africa. G. F. Willgood.

The "Edinburgh Castle," E.

Rev. A. W. Bean, of Emsworth, near Southsea, has just concluded a very helpful month of service at the above. It has been a time of great refreshment from the presence of the Lord. The able and well thought out addresses of this cultured servant of God have been greatly appreciated, and the regret is that the month has passed so rapidly away. On every hand gratitude to God is expressed for the messages of grace. He is resigning his present pastorate at the end of May, having been urgently requested to take up work in Australia. It is a great pity that such an able man is not detained at home. No doubt there are several Baptist churches that would be glad of such a pastor. Our prayers for his future follow him.

On March 15 Rev. John McNeill will (D.V.) commence a mission. Prayer is asked for this.

Walter Notman, Superintendent.

Ballyhill, co. Antrim.

A mission has been recently conducted here by two lady members of the Faith Mission—Pilgrims Livingstone and Macgregor. The mission was carried on for twelve weeks, and during that time the Holy Spirit wrought mightily, and sinners flocked into the Kingdom, close on one hundred testifying to the Lord's saving power. Another feature of the mission was the blessing received by God's own people. A wave of revival has passed over us. A weekly Prayer Union of close on sixty members has been established, from which earnest prayer ascends for world-wide revival. The mission is being continued in Loanends U.F. Church, Carmavey, four miles from here, and already there are definite answers to prayer. The church, which seats 500, has been crowded on Sabbath evenings; week-night congregations are also large, but "the sight that charms us most is a sinner at the Cross," and, praise God, we are witnessing such sights. The united prayer of God's people is that the wave of revival may roll on over that district, and that many may be brought from the power of Satan unto God. J. R. Johnstone.

In connection with the City Messengers' Christian Union monthly meetings are held at the Y.M.C.A., Cornhill. On February 24 an address was given by Mr. Russell R. Smith, and two persons were led to decision; Mr. H. F. Riches writes: "This work has wonderfully grown during the past two years."

At St. Peter's Mission Church, Heeley, Sheffield, Mr. Bowen, of the "Regions Beyond Helpers Union," has conducted a mission from February 21 to 26. There has been very much blessing among the adults and children. Many have been blessed to salvation, and a great many of God's children testify to a new interest in His work at home and abroad. It has been a joy to meet our brother. A. Glen Smith (Pastor).

The inaugural mission in North Wales in connection with the World-wide Pledge-signing Crusade was conducted in the Victoria Hall, Wrexham, from February 14 to 23, by Mr. Tennyson Smith. The spacious hall was, after the first few meetings, crowded nightly, and the whole town stirred. The pledge tables were frequently thronged, and on the first Lord's Day evening five persons sought the Saviour.

In the recent fourteen days' mission, conducted by Mr. F. Chapman, of the Evangelization Society, at the Railway Mission, Wisbech, the meetings increased nightly. Mr. Chapman kept the attention of the people in a marked manner, and Christ was his theme. Sinners were convicted, and believers brought to see the need of a holy life. The friends at Wisbech are looking for more fruit as a result of the mission.

At Twyford, Bucks., and in the district, the recent labours of Mr. Herbert Pout have been blessed. Christians consecrated themselves afresh to God and His cause. There were decisions for Christ during the mission, and several have since testified of his power to save. Although this is only a small village, the chapel was nearly filled each night, while on Sundays both chapel and school-room were fully occupied by earnest people longing to hear the Gospel.

It is with deep gratitude to God that we place on record our indebtedness to the Evangelization Society for blessing received at Mr. Henry Collins' recent mission at the Town Hall, Feltham. The very earnest messages delivered by the evangelist will long remain in the memory of those who were privileged to hear them. A number of persons professed conversion. On the closing day of the mission 500 children assembled in the Town Hall for a united service. This was unprecedented in the history of religious work in the neighbourhood. We were also very much encouraged to find cases of conversion which had resulted from Mr. Collins' previous mission some fourteen months ago, but which had not been declared at the time, proving that the good work accomplished by such efforts is not to be gauged by the manifestations of blessing immediately apparent. Altogether souls have been won, backsliders restored, Christians stimulated and, above all, God's name has been glorified. P. Mallinson.

Evangelists' Engagements.

 This column is intended for Missions of some days' duration, rather than for engagements of a single day. The evangelists ask prayer for their respective missions.

Requests for Prayer.

For Mr. A. Garstin, jun., who is seriously ill.

For the mission at Stoke-by-Guildford, March 7 to 16.

For the conversion of a young man much tempted to a life of worldliness.

For blessing on a mission in St. Helens, to be conducted by Mr. R. McLean.

For restoration to health and service of Mr. T. Swanston Smith, evangelist.

On behalf of a mission to be held at Cinderford, Glos., February 28 to March 9, by Rev. F. Hart.

For a mission at New Southgate, being conducted by Mr. H. Bray, of the Evangelization Society.

For a blessing upon a mission to be held at Christ Church, Coventry, March 15-29, by Rev. J. Cushing.

For a young man who has been led into wrong paths, and is now about to start afresh in America, that he may be led to Christ.

For a mission to children at Arundel Square Congregational Church, Barnsbury, March 8-15, to be conducted by Mr. C. Dudley Smith.

That God's people may be revived and many souls converted at a mission to be conducted by Mr. J. de Burgh Rochfort at Sundorne Hall, Charlton, S.E., March 8-22.

Praise.

For answered prayer and partial recovery to health of Mr. Thomas Payne, evangelist.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

 Messrs. Morgan & Scott receive, acknowledge in The Christian, and transmit, donations sent to them in aid of any accredited Societies and Missions. To avoid misapprehension, it is added that no charge of any kind is ever made on such donations.

Spreading the Flame. A correspondent writes that since attending the Torrey-Alexander Mission at Mildmay she has been visiting infirm and aged people to whom such privileges are denied, and has read to them the reports in The Christian of the Edinburgh and Glasgow meetings. This kindly act has been much appreciated, one lady having been so much impressed that she said to the visitor: "It was worth holding the missions, if only for the blessing these reports have been to me!" To render such a simple service as this, is within everybody's power, for those who themselves are unable to visit, can send copies of these reports, with a word of counsel or of cheer, to lonely ones in isolated places who live off the track of such means of grace. There is no knowing what blessing may thus be carried far and wide. A little one may become a thousand. Souls may be won for Christ, and the spirit of prayer stimulated in a manner which may multiply a hundred-fold the actual results of the missions themselves. Will not our readers take the suggestion seriously to heart?

"Daily Bread." Writing in reply to a Note and Comment inserted last week concerning the pressure of alien competition in the bakery trade, a North London baker says:—

I employ nine men, whose average wages are 27s., in addition to which they have bread, flour, &c., equal to another 3s.; or roughly, 30s. per week. I believe that to be about the usual wages prevailing in London. There may be a few aliens, Jews, working in Whitechapel at very low wages; but you are speaking to your readers of the food brought to their tables and saying the maximum wages paid to the producers is 15s. per week. I am writing this, that you may be relieved as to that.

I may also say that I am not indifferent to the welfare of my men spiritually. I have for a long time given them each a copy of The Christian, and I am glad to say that during the Torrey-Alexander Mission every man has given his heart to the Lord.

Our Note had reference only to the facts elicited before the Alien Commission, and was not intended to apply to every bakery in London. But we only wish that in every trade the employés were as well looked after, physically and spiritually, as in the case of our correspondent.

The Scotch Licensing Act. The terrible indictment made by Lord Balfour of Burleigh a few months ago as to the increase of drunkenness in Scotland, has been speedily followed by the introduction of a new Licensing Act, which, it is hoped, will work in favour of diminished drunkenness. With one or two exceptions, the Scotch Act embodies the English Act of last year. We are glad to see, however, that provision is made for dealing with grocers who send out liquor all over the country in travelling vans. This has hitherto been a great source of evil, and it needed firmly dealing with. We welcome new legislation; but after all it is the Church in Scotland which needs the arousing of her conscience concerning the drink traffic, ere we can expect an alteration in the drinking habits of the country. The Church cannot appeal to the world to be clean if her own hands are soiled.

Compensation and Misery. Now that Mr. Ritchie persists in hinting at compensation for the brewers and the publicans, it is startling to turn to a long summary given in a Lancashire evening contemporary of the huge wealth and of the titles of the former, many of them having bequeathed fortunes of over two millions, and about a score of them having left between five hundred thousand and a million each in personal estate, excluding land and property. No wonder that our outspoken contemporary says:—

What a sum of wretchedness and suffering these fortunes represent in the lives of those who really give the brewers their prosperity—the consumers of their products!

There is only one just basis of compensation; let the traders whose houses remain compensate those whose licences are suppressed.

The Man and the Message. An article appeared the other day in the Christian World, entitled, "The Slavery of Preaching." To the Apostle Paul such a phrase would have appeared to be an anomaly. His burden was, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the Gospel!" So, too, Jeremiah, under the pressure of the Divine message, exclaimed:—

I said, I will not make mention of Him, nor speak any more in His name. But His Word was in my heart, as a burning fire, shut up in my bones; and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay.

Some ministers speak of being "spent." A fire fed on ashes will go out. Those, too, who walk in the light of a fire, and compass themselves about with sparks, of their own kindling, must "lie down in sorrow" (Is. l. 11). But he who receives the message from his Master, and counts himself an "ambassador for Christ," has always his text and sermon in the good news of God's love to man; and for this the weary world is ever pining.

The Servant and His Lord. A correspondent, referring to a recent article in these columns upon the judgment of God by the hand of Elisha upon the young people of Bethel, points out that their words of mockery were, in effect, a challenge to the prophet to prove his claims as Elijah had done—"Go up, thou also, thou bald head! Let us behold thy ascension." Similarly, Satan addressed our Lord—"If thou be the Son of God—prove it—command that these stones be made bread." "Cast Thyself down!" So, too, the cruel taunt at Calvary—"If Thou be Christ, save Thyself and us (Luke xxiii. 39). In the case of Elisha, God was not slow to vindicate His messenger, and to teach to the nation the needed lesson. Thus does He ever identify Himself with His faithful servants. "They have rejected Me." "The servant is not greater than his Lord. If they have persecuted Me, they will also persecute you." Oh, that we, like the Apostles, may have grace to "rejoice that we are counted worthy to suffer shame for His name" (Acts v. 41)!

The Enemy Within the Gates. A writer in a recent number of La Revue, in dealing with the interesting subject of the probability of a serious disruption in the Roman Catholic body in France, estimates the average annual secession of French priests as at least 200. He adds that the numbers who remain but would fain secede are innumerable, and that they continue in the daily round "not because they have kept the faith, but for fear of hunger." There is, however, in the article a word of warning to those who in these islands are looking with unconcern upon the encroachments of sacerdotalism; for the writer gives prominence to what, after all, is an evident truism—that less harm is done even by the sceptic than by the methodical attacks of sacerdotalism, with its substitution of other mediators and other names for the one which is above every name.

The Rule of Faith. Some of the speeches at the recent Convocation of the Province of York were noteworthy as voicing that unhappy spirit of unrest and unbelief which seems to be spreading in just those quarters which, of all others, should be quite free from it. The advocates of a "free" interpretation of existing vital formularies of Christian faith wax bolder. Perhaps it is a sign that the culminating point has been reached when such a defender of the truth as Canon Henson, in a recent book, has not hesitated to say:—

I am extremely reluctant to shut the door of Ordination upon men who are intellectually sensitive about accepting these probable traditions as historical facts.

Our Lord Himself had to do with the "intellectually sensitive," and it was to them that he said, "Whosoever shall not receive the Kingdom of God as a little child shall in no wise enter therein" (Luke xviii. 17).

The Christian Use of Money. Many will read with great interest the convictions expressed by Mr. Cadbury to a representative of the Sunday Strand as to the Christian use of money. They offer no dogmatic rule for others, but they express the practical convictions of one who has shown how money may be used for the glory of God. In this time, when the mere amassing of money is regarded by a vast number as the goal of existence, it is significant to find a wealthy man saying:—

I have seen many families ruined by it, spiritually and morally, and I believe its acquisition brings blessing to a very small number.

Many of the scandals of modern life are just a practical commentary upon the Apostle's words, "The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil" (1 Tim. vi. 10, R.V.). If, however, the heart retains its hold upon Christ, and the idea of sacred stewardship possesses a man, wealth may be a force of great value. Another sentence of Mr. Cadbury's touches the heart of the matter:—

The mere giving of money is, I believe, of small value in the sight of God, without personal, self-denying service as well.

"They first gave their own selves" (2 Cor. viii. 5).

Pandita Ramabai. Some of our readers have expressed surprise that this faithful worker should have welcomed a casual visit from the Superior of the Cowley Fathers, and been "much interested in the simple, helpful talks he gave to the children." We think the Pandita may be trusted to allow none but the truths of the Gospel to be placed before her flock. On leaving, the visitor wrote:—

I am profoundly impressed with the importance of Mukti as an aid in the regeneration of India. It is on a large scale, but it is the scale of faith in the living, loving, personal God, and therefore not to be measured by human conceptions in its present working or as to its future results.

We may well hope that from such a practical object-lesson he learned even more than he had taught. (See Mrs. Dyer's letter, p. 15).

India. The indictment brought by Mr. Digby, C.I.E., in a recent lecture at Liverpool, as to some of the results of British rule in India, is certainly a very terrible one, and calls for grave consideration. Supported by undeniable statistics, Mr. Digby showed that the average daily income of the inhabitants of that huge dependency has declined from twopence in 1850 to three-farthings in 1900, and he asserted that as this refers to 170,000,000 people, we are rapidly drifting to a catastrophe, "the like of which is not to be found in the pages of history." In England there has been progress in the direction of better wages and "more of everything which, judiciously used, makes for human happiness"; in India a man thirty years of age pays 50 per cent. more for his food than his father had to pay, and 150 more than his grandfather, whilst barley is 450 per cent. dearer. Such figures throw a lurid light upon the famine and its consequences. Mr. Digby states that from 1891 to 1900 the number of Indians who, if existence were as favourable as in England, would not have died made a terrible total of 25,100,000. Shall we ever have a great Christian statesman who will dare to deal with those interests, financial and otherwise, which are eating away its life?

China. Disquieting news is received of a new and widespread revolt brewing in China. Rumours to this effect have been afloat for some time, but from despatches communicated to the English papers by way of St. Petersburg, it is evident that the Boxer movement is by no means extinct. The remarkable thing is that high Chinese officials of liberal ideas have made the Legations aware of what is going on. This sign of friendship is significant, and there will be no excuse if the Legations fail to make due preparations. The Powers have a clear duty to prevent the triumph of barbarism. But above all other things, the present situation in China demands the prayers and interest of all the Lord's people. Diplomatists cannot accomplish the regeneration of that unhappy country. Evangelization is China's first need, and in that work all who are Christ's ought to take joyful part by prayer or service.

The Macedonian Terror. Whoever wishes to know the real truth about the present condition of Macedonia should study an article by Dr. E. J. Dillon in the March number of the Contemporary Review. It is only by the dissemination of information by writers and witnesses of established repute that the conscience of Europe can be awakened from its torpor. Dr. Dillon boldly charges the great Powers with responsibility in the matter, since they have known for long enough how the Turk has acted and what atrocities he has committed. Recent dispatches, since the time Dr. Dillon's article was written, speak of the institution of reforms under the pressure of Russia and Austria. Frankly, we have little belief in any reforms, so far as Turkey is concerned, which do not provide for the deposition of Turkish officials. They cannot be trusted; they will promise anything. The only solution of the difficulty is the appointment of trustworthy Christian governors, and upon this the Powers ought to insist.

Micah's Idols. The recent discovery by Signor Durighello, the eminent Italian archæologist, of Hebrew molten images at Dan, as narrated by Mr. Brodrick in the current number of the Sunday at Home, is an event of the deepest interest to Bible students. Near the ruins of a building which, according to Josephus and tradition, mark the site of the temple in which Rehoboam set up the golden calf, and in the midst of the remains of the city of Dan, the explorers, after years of patient labour, found remarkable bronze figures, the first of the kind ever discovered, which undoubtedly are molten images of Baal and Astarte. There is, indeed, reason to believe that these may be the very images which Micah had made, and which were taken from his house by the children of Dan and the five men who went to spy out the land (Judges xvii.). And so, day by day, Scripture, assailed on every hand by those who fain would substitute vain imaginings for inspired truths, is being vindicated at the hands of the explorers and the archæologist.

Heavenly Visions—and After.

THE Apostle Paul never tired of telling the story of his wonderful conversion; and when he had told it to King Agrippa, he added, as an explanation and a defence of his extraordinary conduct—"I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision; but declared both to them of Damascus first, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the country of Judæa, and also to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, doing works worthy of repentance." Conversion leads to service; heavenly visions impart messages from the Unseen.

While in the midst of the ineffable glory, the future apostle is told how many things he must suffer for the sake of the Name. And so he passes out from the holy place and from the Divine fellowship to preach in the synagogue of Damascus; with the result that the Jews take counsel to kill him, and watch the gates day and night to carry out their purpose, and are only defeated by the disciples lowering him down the wall in a basket. Jerusalem was as dangerous as Damascus; for once and again the Jews there essayed to kill him.

Heavenly visions made Paul an ecclesiastical heretic, a social outcast, "a fool" in the eyes of the wise, part of "the filth and offscouring of all things," and therefore fit only to be removed out of the way. Does communion with God and His Christ ever fail to bring something of this experience? Accepted of God, and rejected of men, is the lot both of the Master and His servants. To taste the sweets of forgiveness, and of redeeming love, is preliminary to tasting of hatred and opposition.

The heavens, once opened to a man, are never closed, provided he is not disobedient to the vision he has seen. Hence the vision of a man of Macedonia, beseeching and saying to Paul, "Come over into Macedonia, and help us." Yet, at first, it seemed as if the great missionary had made a mistake. No man of Macedonia met him when he landed at Philippi; no little group of seeking souls was down at the wharf looking for someone to guide them into fuller light; the call within was not, as in the case of Peter and Cornelius, answered by a response without. An unknown man, the Apostle with at least one companion walked the streets of this strange city apparently on a vain errand. He says, "We were in this city tarrying certain days." And no congregation assembled for any purpose which he could turn to his account. Oh, the deceitfulness of the vision! But he and his friend stood firm. "And on the Sabbath Day we went forth without the gate by a river side, where we supposed was a place of prayer, and we sat down and spake unto the women which were come together" (R.V.). They went on their way uncertain—"we supposed"—but in faith. They spoke to the first hearers they could get—a few women!

Now, one would have supposed that a heavenly vision calling to service would have opened the way, gathered a congregation, excited interest and expectation, and openly and indubitably have justified itself. But no; God's ways are not our ways. After gaining one woman as a convert there comes a burst of persecution, and Paul and Silas are scourged and thrown into prison, where the gaoler is converted, and "all that were in his house." The converts are coming in strange ways and in strange places—sure sign that the vision was true. God always does the unexpected.

On one occasion, after Paul had almost been torn in pieces of the Jerusalem crowd, and after, in his heat of feeling, he had spoken in withering scorn to the high priest, a fault which seems soon to have been felt and confessed, he was thrown into prison exhausted and troubled. "And the night following the Lord stood by him, and said—Be of good cheer; for as thou hast testified concerning Me at Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome." Heaven was still open. The Apostle might have sinned in his denunciation of the high priest, but if so, his Lord's forgiveness was instantly granted. We are "in Christ," we stand in grace. And therefore the Lord came commending His servant's fidelity in his general witness bearing, and telling him he should do the like in Rome also.

But once more the heavenly vision is a precursor of trouble. Wearisome trials and prolonged imprisonment follow, and then when the Apostle sails for Rome he is in danger of death by drowning and by the hands of the Roman soldiers. Yet he never doubts the Voice he heard that night in prison. It said he should bear witness at Rome, therefore to Rome he must go. His judges might delay his sentence and wait for "money" (bribes) from him that would never come, but he must go to Rome. The Euroclydon might rage never so furiously, he must go to Rome. The soldiers might propose to slay the prisoners, but this one must go to Rome. The ship might go all to pieces, and every one be thrown among the breakers, but Paul never doubted he should reach Rome. The serpent might fasten upon his hand, peril on peril follow him, but he still believed he should see Rome. And so he did. The vision led him into dangers, but through the opened heavens he finally passed into the presence of his Lord. Blessed are they who are not disobedient to the heavenly vision, though for a time it may make them appear foolish in the eyes of men and their lives an absurd failure. Its day of self-vindication will come.

Hammurabi or Moses?

FOR thousands of years no code of laws has challenged the Mosaic in point of age. Now an older code is brought upon the scene, giving us the laws of Babylon in days anterior to the time of Abraham! All may read the English translation made by C. H. W. Johns, M.A., Lecturer in Assyriology, Queens' College, Cambridge, issued with the title THE OLDEST CODE OF LAWS IN THE WORLD: The Code of Laws Promulgated by Hammurabi, King of Babylon, B.C. 2285-2242 (1s. 6d. T. & T. Clark). In the words of a writer in the February number of the Biblical World, one of the high-class publications of the University of Chicago Press, "The Laws of Moses no longer stand alone."

That is to say, other old laws besides the Mosaic have come down to us. Surely we are glad of it—if only for comparison's sake. The writings of Moses may well have interested us in many nations with their kings and senates, their chiefs and armies. Who supposed that these nations would have no laws or customs? Turn we to Deuteronomy (the Book which our Lord quoted on a memorable occasion—while tempted of the devil). With experiences of Egypt, Edom, Moab, Heshbon, and Bashan, the great Lawgiver exhorts Israel to obedience, not only by the fear of God, but also in view of the impression to be made upon surrounding nations. He says:—

> Behold, I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the Lord my God commanded me. . . . Keep therefore and do them; for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the peoples, which shall hear all these statutes and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people (Deut. iv. 5, 6).

Then Moses institutes a most striking comparison, between Israel, the blessed nation "whose God is JEHOVAH," and surrounding peoples, knowing not their right hand from their left in idolatrous darkness. He says:—

> What great nation is there that hath a god so nigh unto them, as the Lord our God is, whensoever we call upon Him? And what great nation is there that hath STATUTES AND JUDGMENTS SO RIGHTEOUS as all this law, which I set before you this day? (verses 7, 8, R.V.)

The deeds and contracts found among Babylonian remains in recent years had abundantly prepared us for the discovery of codified and comprehensive laws for social life and commercial relations. Many references to Hammurabi (Amraphel of Gen. xiv. 1) have been brought to light, and only recently his letters have been published, both in text and translation. Moreover, one inscription has furnished an outline portrait of the famous ruler! That the maxims of his rule should have survived is marvellous, in a way; and it encourages a hope that other such monuments may yet be discovered. We who believe our Bibles, quite reasonably indulge expectations that would not become men to whom the early chapters of Genesis are mythical and legendary in substance and manner. What Colonel Conder said years ago of Exodus is continually being proved true of the earlier portion of the Pentateuch: "The topography is an actual topography, easily followed on the ground; and the chronology of the Hebrew text of the Old Testament agrees, from Abraham's time downwards, with the monumental dates." In a word, the places named in the record have borne witness to its truth. Now, in turn, the persons named in Scripture are being recovered from contemporaneous chronicles, and their deeds set forth, not from a religious standpoint, as in the Bible, but from a purely human point of view. Thus God is standing by that Word which His people have learned to trust and love.

Whensoever they were promulgated, and howsoever long they were in force, the Laws of Hammurabi, as inscribed on the large monument found a little over a year ago by French explorers in Babylon, are essentially statutes and judgments for a people to whom there was NO "God nigh unto them," to use the words of Moses in Deuteronomy. Beginning with laws regarding witchcraft, and ending with slave regulations, the Code deals with the rights and privileges of various classes. The humanitarian provisions are unequal, and capital offences are many. Though taking account of conventual life, from beginning to end the laws are secular. Speaking generally, their Mosaic counterpart is found in Exodus xxi. and xxii. Readers of the Expository Times will have known what to expect, and the same may be said of students who see The American Journal of Semitic Languages (Chicago). An account of the discovery is promised in the March issue of the Homiletic Review.

The glorious Decalogue, the Words which God spake, and which will be rehearsed to the end of time by all who love and obey Him, have no counterpart or parallel in the Code of Hammurabi. Though in some particulars the statutes and judgments of Moses were accommodated to the conditions of a stiff-necked people, and attended by concessions on account of "the hardness of their hearts," the Ten Words stand alone, and will ever be assigned a high place among the gifts of God to man; they are in very truth laws of heaven for life upon earth. They were given to a separated people, and associated with holy and righteous statutes and judgments, enactments and commandments, such as no other nation possessed. Hence Moses asked, "What great nation is there that hath statutes and judgments so RIGHTEOUS?"

It is a most instructive exercise to compare the Law of Moses with the Code of Hammurabi. In the one case, there is a constant God-consciousness, while in the other the things of the present fill the horizon. The difference cannot be accounted for by natural development or social evolution. God interposed; and hence we have laws that are "holy, just, and good." The Law of Moses is still the miracle of ancient literature; and when it is said that it no longer stands alone, we are inclined to say: That may be; but as the two codes stand, one is small and the other gigantic—one is of the earth, and the other from God. The Law of Moses was RIGHTEOUS as no other code has been. A comparison of the two, exhibits that which, thank God, has not been lost and buried for milleniums, as occupying the supreme position. The God who gave it, preserved it to the race.

Hammurabi was great, and we shall doubtless hear much of his exploits in coming days. Moses was greater—the man of God—and the Law which he gave was attested by Christ, the Prophet whose advent he foretold. As time goes by, Moses will appear as a greater man than some have even yet thought. How was that man honoured of God, that around his teaching there should have gathered from generation to generation a body of doctrine such as the Psalmist contemplated when he exclaimed: "O how love I Thy law; it is my meditation all the day"! Hammurabi caused his power and glory to be inscribed on a stone, the interment of which in earthy ruins made his name and fame to cease from among men. Concerning the Hebrew Lawgiver, it has been testified, in undying words by the unerring pen of inspiration, that he was "faithful to God in all his house;" and in the lofty praise of heaven his name and no other is associated with that of the adorable Son of God. "And they sing the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb" (Rev. xv. 3).

Love Thyself Last.

Love thyself last! No other way I see,
No surer guide to true felicity;
First, to thy God let true affections flow;
Then serve thy neighbour all the way below.

Lest self intrude, and nobler counsels fail,
With prayerful wrestlings let thy soul prevail;
The Christian path is steep, and rough, and long,
But clear-eyed Hope still sings her morning song.

True happiness and peace are vainly sought
Where others' cares and joys are set at nought;
But self-dethroned and in the dust laid down,
Shall, all unseeking, win love's golden crown!

The Oracles of God.

DR. PIERSON ON THE ATONEMENT.

IN continuing his lectures at Exeter Hall, on "The Oracles of God," Dr. PIERSON again addressed on Friday evening a full and appreciative audience. Leaving the witness and argument of prophecy, which have engaged attention for several weeks, he turned to the consideration of the forecasts of the fact of the Atonement in Old Testament Scriptures. Just as the heart of the Bible is Messianic prophecy, and the heart of Messianic prophecy is the Person of Jesus Christ, so the heart of the doctrine of the Person of Jesus Christ is Redemption by Blood, which is the nearest equivalent to the word, Atonement.

Regarding the connection between the Old and New Testaments, Dr. Pierson emphasized the words of Augustine that the Old Testament is patent in the New, and the New is latent in the Old. The great truths that are doctrinally and historically set forth in the New are set forth typically, pictorially, and symbolically in the Old. The fact of the Atonement is the central of these great truths. In the first eight chapters of Romans seven distinctive truths regarding redemption by the blood are set forth. (1) Redemption begins in deliverance from the wrath of God; (2) proceeds by the expiation of the guilt which invokes and challenges that wrath; (3) puts away the sin from between the sinner and God as something that is cancelled; (4) the doctrine teaches us that there is a restoration between the alienated sinner and God, so that he becomes a member of the Divine family: Redemption (5) cancels the debt of man, and institutes pacific relations with a Holy God; (6) it brings emancipation from the power of sin and deliverance from its penalty; and (7) all this depends upon a personal relation with the Lord Jesus Christ, for redemption does not come through blood even, except through

THE PERSONALITY OF THE REDEEMER.

It is not by mere chance that these great truths are set forth in the first three books of the Old Testament, and in exactly the same order as in Romans. The three great festivals—the Passover, the Day of Atonement or Propitiation, and the Jubilee—are symbolical of the New Testament Atonement. In the Passover the great conception is deliverance from wrath. In the celebrations of the Day of Atonement there can be little doubt what is meant by the scapegoat (Azazel). On this day there were twin ceremonies. Two kids of goats, of the same age and size, distinguished only by a piece of scarlet ribbon: one of them was slain, and his blood poured out; while upon the head of the other Aaron placed his hands, and confessed over him the sins of Israel. This goat (Azazel) was then led away by the hand of a fit man into a "lone place," out of sight of the people, and where he would not be likely to find his way back to the camp. When we remember that Azazel may mean "put at a distance," the idea is made plain. Thus the twin ceremonies set before us the double conception, that (1) the guilt of my sin is expiated in the blood of the slain Lamb, and (2) my sins are borne away by Him who hung upon the cross, to a lone place, even beyond the remembrance of God.

If we turn to the Jubilee festival, we find that three things took place—(1) All aliens were to be restored to their cities; (2) all debts were to be cancelled; (3) everyone in servitude should be set free. Moreover these three events forecast three great facts set forth in Romans—restoration to God's favour, conciliation of the law of justice, and emancipation from the power of sin as well as from its penalty.

After dwelling briefly on the solemn and profound truths which the Book of Ruth embodies and anticipates concerning the Kinsman of the New Testament, Dr. Pierson went on to hold that the greatest proof that Christianity is from God is the argument of experience. The greatest minds have come back from their theological and philosophical excursions to confess—"Jesus died for me!"

The Bible Society's Centenary

THE INAUGURAL CELEBRATION.

THE "life story" of the British and Foreign Bible Society has been aptly described as "a hundred years of faith justified." To compare its humble beginning, in the counting-house of a London business firm, with the world-wide influence which marks its operations to-day, is to realize how bountifully God has blessed the twofold undertaking of translating and publishing His own Word.

AT THE MANSION HOUSE.

The inaugural celebrations of the Centenary year commenced on Friday last, when two meetings were held, remarkable for the deep, strong interest that was manifested. In the afternoon the Egyptian Hall was filled by a sympathetic audience drawn from many sections of the Christian Church. The LORD MAYOR (himself a Jew), welcomed the Society to the Mansion House, and expressed his reverence for the Sacred Scriptures.

THE HOUSE IN WHICH THE WORK BEGAN.

The president of the Society, the Marquis of NORTHAMPTON, who followed, said that 100 years ago there were fewer than fifty translations of the Bible in existence. At the present time, however, translation has been completed into over a hundred languages, and is in course of completion in at least 300 others. Over 180,000,000 copies of the Bible, or portions thereof, have been circulated. Yet the demands of the world are enormous; there are about 450,000,000 of people who have never yet had the privilege of reading the Divine message in their own tongue. "Doors" are open in all directions, for there is evidence of an instinctive reaching-out of the hearts of men towards the Unseen. The best way to celebrate the Centenary is by extension. More native colporteurs are needed; more Bible-women in those lands where women alone can reach their own sex. More translations are required, as well as the revision and perfection of translations already made. If we look at the progressive nations of the earth we see nations of the open Bible; if we look at those where the Bible is closed, we see decadence. The open Bible means development and power, for the teachings of the sacred pages are the surest basis of a national character. This Centenary, then, should be marked by a great expansion of work for the glory of God, the honour of our country, and the benefit of the peoples of the world.

ADDRESS BY THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

The Prime Minister, who was the next speaker, said, at the outset, that there may well come a thrill of astonishment at the extraordinary amount of work done. The men who a hundred years ago founded this great society, could they have looked forward to the increasing work which, with increasing years, it has been permitted to accomplish, would have felt that when they founded it they were indeed engaged upon a great, a fruitful, and a beneficent undertaking. "If I rightly caught the figures put before us by Lord Northampton, the languages into which the Bible or some portions of the Bible have been translated amount to something very near, if they do not actually reach, the figure of 400. Putting religion aside, what a benefit to philology and to the allied sciences that great work is! But it is not philology which has brought us here to-day, not science, but religion.

CONSOLATION, HOPE, AND INSTRUCTION.

Proceeding, Mr. Balfour contrasted the conditions, religious and philanthropic, of the time when the Society was started, with those of to-day, and, answering possible criticisms, imagined a critic asking: "Do not the results of Bible criticism chill the enthusiasm and dim the ardour with which you seek to spread abroad the knowledge of the Book?" The answer is "No." These researches make it far more of a living record of the revelation of God to mankind. "I most truly think that not only is the Bible now what it has always been to the unlearned—a source of consolation, of hope, of instruction—but it is to those who are more learned—but possibly not nearer the Kingdom of Heaven—augmented in interest and a more valuable source of spiritual life than it could ever have been in the pre-critical days."

In conclusion, appealing for the sinking of sectarian differences in the furtherance of common duty, Mr. Balfour said there is always a danger in regard to everything, whether it be politics, or literature, or religion, that those who live in a narrow circle take a parochial view of the subjects with which they are concerned, but there is nothing parochial about this Society. Its field is the world.

Mr. R. W. PERKS, M.P., who followed, emphasized the points: (1) that laymen take a large share in the direction of the Society, and (2) that the Holy Scriptures are circulated by it without note or comment, to speak for themselves as the rule of faith. It was in dark days for Britain that the Bible Society, like Sunday-schools and Ragged-schools, were commenced by men not specially prominent, but plain people of the middle-class. The times are changed, but the Bible remains the same, not merely an ethical system, but furnishing a revelation direct from God.

The last speaker, Mr. F. A. BEVAN, spoke of the Bible as the Book which proves its Divine inspiration and authority, among other things, by its adaptability to the needs of humanity everywhere. Close to the Mansion House, in Lombard Street, is a church in which there is still preserved one of the "chained Bibles"; the work of this Society has been, and still is, to "unchain the Bible."

AT THE QUEEN'S HALL.

At night Lord NORTHAMPTON presided, in the Queen's Hall, over an audience which crowded the capacious building in every part. Appealing to Bible readers and Bible lovers, he forcibly presented the claims of the Society. Briefly tracing the history of the Bible in this country, he reminded his hearers of their duty to maintain the glorious work of spreading the knowledge of God's Word, which was so devotedly commenced by our Protestant forefathers. But for the Bible, Britain would never occupy the position it does to-day. We make national recognition of what the Bible has done for the home and the country. That there are sad imperfections in the national character is obvious, but the greater progress we make, moral and religious, the clearer it becomes that such progress arises from Bible teaching. The Bible, therefore, must remain the foundation of the education of our children. "If the Bible has been comfort and consolation to you, help others to have that comfort and consolation also, not only in this country, but throughout all lands. The work we plead for is the work of God Himself."

THE BIBLE IN INDIA.

Speaking from the standpoint of an Indian officer of long service, Sir ANDREW WINGATE found the secret of English influence in India in the word "sympathy," and that sympathy is to be traced to its source in the teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ. Not till India possesses a Bible-permeated atmosphere, can the youth of India have the necessary moral fibre to withstand evil, and maintain righteous government; but it is an encouraging sign that many natives are endeavouring to arouse the national conscience to a sense of national sin. Without the Bible Society, too, the missionary on the field would find his work crippled. At the recent Decennial Conference at Madras, it was clearly stated that the growth of Christianity is largely due to Bible circulation, and that the work of distribution is necessary to the winning of men for Christ. In the closed lands of Nepal and Tibet, and in homes where missionaries can gain no entrance, the Bible goes with its message of life. It is the prince of pioneers, casting up a highway for the ambassadors of peace, and preparing the way for the coming of the King.

THE BIBLE IN CHINA.

Rev. J. WEBSTER (U.F. Church Mission, Manchuria), representing the Lord's workers in China, said that the 400,000,000 people of that vast land now have the Bible. The Word has been carried into the towns and villages of the country. What other book would have stood the storms of opposition and derision that the Bible has encountered there? Had it not been the Word of God indubitably, it must have perished; but it is more powerful to-day than ever. A record of the past two years would read something as follows:—"The Kings of China set themselves to put an end to the Bible, and the mandarins sought to destroy every copy. More than one Stephen perished; more than one Saul of Tarsus went forth breathing slaughter, but the Word of God grew and multiplied." We have won the common people to the missionary. But "was not the Boxer movement directed against missionaries?" No. Had the white people all been missionaries there would have been no Boxer movement. To-day the sub-agent of the Society in Manchuria can go into any of the homes of the people and be an honoured guest. Hosts have been won for Christ, largely through the missionary having the Bible; but much remains to be done, particularly for the higher class Chinese, and also for the Russians, of whom there are hundreds of thousands in Manchuria.

IN THE SOUTH SEAS.

The venerable Rev. F. LANGHAM, Wesleyan missionary, of Fiji, gave striking testimony to the power of the Gospel among savages. He said that the history of fruitfulness there is the history of the open Bible. In 1835 the people were semi-nude savages, guilty of disgusting crimes. The Fijians were sitting in midnight darkness when there rang out the words, printed by the Bible Society in 370 languages: that "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish." What is the result? To-day the Bible is found in 1,300 villages. Every Sabbath day it is read in all these villages; and in the Sabbath and day schools the chief book is the Word of God. We have 35,244 native church members, and the large proportion read the Word of God. More than half the native population are virtually church members, and some have gone to other islands, 2,000 miles away, to tell the story of redeeming love, and have won thousands of converts in their turn. No fewer than 183,000 copies of the whole, or portions, of the Scriptures have been sent out by the Bible Society, and "I had the pleasure of handing the Society a cheque for £500 sent by the Fijians. Truly, our people love the Bible."

IN THE ARCTIC ZONE.

Rev. E. J. Peck (C.M.S., Cumberland Sound), who has laboured for twenty-six years among the scattered Eskimos in the frozen north, said that he was himself converted and led to become a missionary through reading the Word of God. The Bible Society has been "the backbone of missionary work." When the work was begun, at a place whither no tidings of the outside world came more than once a year, the Society provided Bibles. In a church made of a common sort of sealskin—the only available material—the Christian faith was taught. Night after night the people assembled to study the Word, and to-day many are familiar with it. One poor woman whose heart was touched, took portions and journeyed with them right into the Arctic Circle, along the barren shores of Davis Straits, distributing them and teaching the people.

THE BIBLE AND THE FUTURE.

The concluding speaker, Rev. F. W. Macdonald (secretary, Wesleyan Missionary Society), said that the Bible has a great and glorious past, having nourished the souls of men in piety and peace, leading to the pursuit of all that is highest and best. There have been sacred writings that have passed away. Will it be so with the Bible? I would answer in the words put by Tennyson in a retort to a sceptic:—

Say that His day is done? Ah, why should we care what they say?

"His day done!" It has only dawned. That is our answer. Remember there has been but one century, after all, in which united, organized efforts have been made to secure world-wide circulation. Think, then, of the advance in distribution from thirty-five languages at the beginning of the century to 370 at the present time. We are confronted with not a few race problems; but I claim one place where "East and West may meet"—they meet within the compass of the Bible in equal citizenship. We need never fear that the Bible will be baffled by frontiers. It came from the narrow bounds of Judaism, availed itself of the civilization of Rome, then passed on into the very bosom of the Teutonic races; and when, in later years, our modern Anglo-Saxon races crowded to the great West, and the wondrous South, this unwearied traveller went with them. See, then, what a noble vision is before us after our century of preparation! We renew our allegiance to the Bible. We feed our souls with noble memories, and face the future full of hope."

Senor Emilio Olsson, La Mission Evangelica, Adrogné F. C. Sud, Buenos Ayres, South America, in thanking us for The Christian in 1902, says, "Your paper is a blessing to a tired and lonely missionary in a dark land like South America. . . . God has not forsaken His servant, although I have suffered a great many trials and hardships the last few years. In 1902 I travelled a good deal, though not so much as in former years. The good seed has been sown by many waters."

The Pope's Semi-Jubilee.

By Rev. ALEX. ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice.

THE twenty-fifth anniversary of the election of Joachim Pecci to the Popedom is being celebrated in Rome by multitudes of people with great enthusiasm. No one grudges the Pope any personal honour shown him. As a man he is welcome to be regarded with whatever respect and esteem people may choose to show him. But Joachim Pecci as a man is one thing, and Joachim Pecci as the Pope is another. In this latter capacity he stands as the head of the Roman Catholic Church, an institution which is regarded by the Italian people as having been the source of the oppression, and ignorance, and poverty, and misery they have suffered from in the past; and as being to-day a political force working for the destruction of the Royal House of Savoy, and the disintegration of the kingdom; and as being a moral force, or rather an immoral force, working for the arrestment of all progress—material, intellectual, and spiritual.

With the Italians his personal character is lost sight of—sinks into insignificance—in comparison with his official character. He dwells in their midst, in his palace of the Vatican with its 11,000 rooms, as the head and embodiment of the Papacy. In this character, and in this character alone, do they take account of him.

AN HISTORIC UTTERANCE.

In the Town Council of Rome there are some Papal clerical members. These men intimated to Prince Colonna (the Lord Mayor), that they wished to bring forward a motion that the Town Council, representing the city of Rome, should send a congratulatory message to the Pope on the occasion of the observance of the semi-jubilee of his Pontificate. Prince Colonna instantly replied that on no account would such a motion be even entertained, far less passed, adding the ever-to-be-remembered words, "Il Papa non riconosce il Re, ed io non riconosco il Papa" (the Pope does not recognise the King, and I do not recognise the Pope).

Here is true patriotism, here is true morality. Regarding the Pope in his official capacity as the enemy of King Victor Emmanuel, and as consequently the enemy of the Kingdom of Italy, whose sovereign and ruler he is by the grace of God and the will of the people, he refuses in any way to associate the city of Rome, the capital of Italy, with congratulatory messages to him on this pontifical festival. The clericals did not persevere with their motion, because, as they said, not only would it be rejected by the council, but the people in the city, learning of their attempt, would get up anti-clerical demonstrations and jeopardise the success of the Jubilee festivities!

THE REAL CELEBRANTS.

Who, then, are celebrating with such enthusiasm the Papal jubilee? Not the King of Italy, not the Mayor of Rome, not the citizens of Rome, not the people of Italy, but strangers. There are tens of thousands of such in Rome at present. Every hotel and every private lodging-house is full of them. The bulk of these foreigners are Roman Catholics, amongst whom are many from England. Such have chosen the Pope as their sovereign in things temporal and spiritual. Such have committed to him the care of their consciences. Such have divested themselves at his command of every prerogative—reason, judgment, conscience, moral responsibility—which God has bestowed upon them. It is a sad and pitiable surrender for a human being to make; but as such have made it, we do not wonder that, on an occasion like the present, they should flock to Rome to prostrate themselves at the feet of their lord and master, who, insulting human reason and stultifying all history, in his claim to infallibility, sitteth in the place of God, making himself God.

But amongst these crowds of strangers are many Protestants, men and women who have embraced Christ and Christianity, and who, realizing their responsibility in God's sight for what they believe and for what they do, have repudiated the Pope as anti-Christ, and his church as an anti-Christian institution, "the antitheses of Christianity;" whose influence, as anyone can see for himself, is malevolent, not beneficent:—for, wherever Roman Catholicism goes, poverty and misery and ignorance and fear go with it, and a blight falls on man and nature.

Among the foreigners in Rome that crowd to see the Pope and attend his ceremonies are many such Protestants. At this we have cause to wonder. And the Italian press wonders too. I read the other day an article which expressed astonishment that Protestants should attend these Papal ceremonies, and should be amongst the most eager to attend them, so eager indeed as to be willing to pay fabulous sums of money to do so!

PROTESTANT DEVOTEES.

This newspaper spoke reproachfully of such Protestants as being worse than Roman Catholics. Of course, such Protestants would answer that they did not go either through reverence for the Pope or the Papal Church, but from curiosity; they wanted to see what are sights in Rome, and unique sights that can be seen nowhere else. Yes, but such travellers should reflect that they cannot gratify their curiosity in these matters without doing the following very inconsistent and, I think, wrong things.

In the first place, they give financial support to the Papacy. As a matter of fact, a very large proportion of the money that goes to maintain the Papal Church in its mischievous doings, comes out of the pockets of Protestants. There is a false charity, a charity that loses sight of moral distinctions abroad, and which leads Protestant people and Protestant Governments to do these things. Secondly, they give moral support to the Papacy, and of this the Church knows how to avail itself. It follows up the conciliatory action of these Protestants, it ingratiates itself with them, it disarms them of their Protestantism, and secures their neutrality, if not support, in the fight it carries on against all the principles of enlightenment and progress.

PRIVILEGE ABUSED.

Thirdly, these Protestants play an unbecoming part toward the Sovereign of Italy, and toward the Government of Italy, whose protection and goodwill they are enjoying as travellers in the land. The freedom they enjoy to travel where they will, to carry what papers and books they will, to have their own places of worship, with perfect immunity from surveillance, not to say persecution, are all the gift of the Government of Italy. They were not enjoyed when the Pope was in power; they would not be enjoyed now, were he to have his will, for, as the Duke of Norfolk said at the Jubilee of some four years ago, they, as Roman Catholics, lamented with him that he had not the power to put a stop to all Protestant work in Rome, which so grieved him and them to the heart. What the Sovereign of Italy does not do, what the Government of Italy does not do, what the municipality of Rome does not do, namely, acknowledge the Pope and pay homage to him, these Protestants should not do.

The action of Prince Prospero Colonna, the Syndic of Rome, ought to be a guide to Protestants in Rome as to how they ought to behave towards the Pope; and his words ought to be written as a motto in their guide-books!

The Premier of Italy and Romanism.—In a letter to Dr. Alexander Robertson, Sig. G. Zanardelli says:—"I have received through Rev. Cav. Fera, your new book, 'The Roman Catholic Church in Italy,' together with your preceding ones, 'Fra Paolo Sarpi,' and 'The Bible of St. Mark.' The subjects you treat of in these splendid volumes demonstrate how great is the true affection which you have for Italy—for its future, its greatness, and its liberation from the domination of the Vatican. It is a thing extremely gratifying to Italy that so many chosen minds and hearts in foreign lands bear towards her a love so warm and so efficacious. To this love which you cherish for my country, I owe the gift of your scholarly books, which I prize very highly; and that on Sarpi has for me, a citizen of Brescia, a special interest, as that city gave to the great Venetian his most eminent disciple, Fulgenzio Micanzio."

Continental Prisons.

FRANCE.

SOME twenty years ago Paris possessed ten huge old prisons, containing about 1,000 men in each. Most of these I was enabled to visit, and left with many of the prisoners copies of the New Testament. The prison system of this country is very strict in many respects, and yet lax in other ways. For instance, a man may be kept in solitary confinement for ten years, and another may be put into a perfectly dark cell for thirty days; while, on the other hand, he is allowed a bottle of wine per day, and may have a certain allowance of tobacco to smoke.

A fortnight ago I again went the round of some of the Parisian prisons, and was glad to find some of the worst of the old buildings have been pulled down—such as La Roquette (the Newgate of Paris), Mazas, and Sainte Pelagie, whilst a palatial new model prison has been erected some few miles outside Paris at Fresne, which compares favourably from a sanitary point of view with any prison I have ever visited. In the large prison of Sante, in Paris, a magnificent new part has recently been constructed. In every cell water is laid on, and the electric light installed, whilst an electric bell enables the prisoner to ring up the waiter —I mean the warder—when needed. I quietly gave my books to both the prisoners and the officers, who received them graciously.

A remarkable thing is to be recorded of the prisons of France, which we in England would do well to imitate. On the walls of the corridors of these Houses of Correction are pasted huge placards, illustrated in colours, which speak of the misery and the results of drink. In the middle of the poster is a very large bottle with a label, across the top of which is the word ABSINTHE, at the bottom POISON, and between which is a large skull. At the head of the bill are the words—Distillation! Degradation! Degustation! Desolation! and at the bottom a number of decrepit, aged, and imbecile people labelled—"Pensionnaires pour le prison," &c. Anything more striking and powerful can hardly be imagined.

The Conciergerie (corresponding to our Tower of London) is still used as an ordinary prison, and it was here the Humberts of the "mysterious safe" notoriety were first brought when they arrived in Paris from Madrid. It consists of two parts, the modern gaol, and the historic prison. A letter from the Minister of the Interior, enclosing a permit, enabled me to revisit both. The immense hall, beneath the level of the streets, resembles the crypt of a magnificent cathedral, and is not unlike a grand banqueting hall. Part of this was used in troublous times to confine the revolutionists, and was so crowded by the hundreds who slept merely on straw or the stone floor that it became known as "The Street of Paris." The whole of this great Hall is now used as a storeroom of broken statuary—among which I saw a bust of Napoleon III.—and a workroom in which a solitary prisoner was engaged in carpentering.

SPAIN.

ABOUT fifteen years ago, coming home from Morocco through Spain, I visited the prisons of this land of the Inquisition. The Government had asked me to report to them the condition I found them in, and my report was almost as bad as it possibly could be, for from a sanitary point they were almost as bad as those of Greece or even Morocco itself.

I am glad, however, to say that things are improving, in some measure, in this slow-going and out-of-date country. The old, filthy prison of Barcelona has been pulled down, and a new Model Prison is in course of erection. On arriving in Madrid I made arrangements to visit the Carcel Modelo, the most important and somewhat modern prison of the city.

It was here the Humberts were confined when recently arrested, and there are other notable criminals among the eleven hundred prisoners. This prison is a vast improvement on anything I have ever seen in Spain, for it is built in the pentagonal style, and is exclusively cellulaire in its system, and so very preferable to the old dungeons of an earlier date, such as I have seen at Linares and elsewhere, where ventilation and sanitation are negligeable quantities.

There is no church in the place, but at certain times Mass is said in the centre of the prison. All the corridors look towards this point, and all the cell doors are opened towards the same. Each prisoner can see the officiating priest, but can hear nothing. In a few moments the ceremony is over, the cell doors are closed, to be re-opened a week later. This is all the Spanish prisoner or convict hears of Christ our Lord or of His blessed Gospel; and this, in a general sense, is true of every other Roman Catholic country I have ever visited.

CHILD PRISONERS.

A good many political prisoners are here; they enjoy a measure of liberty denied to others. These men gladly accepted copies of the Scriptures, whilst loudly declaiming against the injustice of being confined for their very liberal opinions. The pathos of prison life was seen by the Governor introducing to our notice a criminal recently imparted to his care, charged with stealing a watch. "Our latest and least criminal!" He was a tiny child, whose head did not reach to my jacket pocket, and who, the moment we spoke to him of his wrong-doing, burst into tears. It seemed ridiculous—so small an offender in so large a prison, and the only prisoner to be seen in the vast hall, for the others were in their cells!

Alas! I was soon in a corridor with twenty-nine other juvenile offenders, whose ages ranged from nine years upwards. After some little talk about their offences, and a pat on their heads here and there I gave them each an illustrated Gospel, and I venture to think that the valuable books issued by Mr. Walters were never better placed than with these "Mother's boys" in Madrid's Carcel Modelo. The under-governor bade them "Read diligently, and preserve the books carefully"—and somebody said, "Amen, Lord." "That it may please Thee to show Thy pity upon all prisoners and captives!"

CHARLES COOK.

Dunkerque Sailors' Rest.

THE tenth annual report of the Dunkerque Sailors' Rest, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Mackenzie, gives an interesting account of Gospel work among British and foreign seamen in that French port. Not only are conversions recorded, but they have been privileged to see seed sown in previous years bringing forth abundant fruit in the changed lives of many of the converts. An encouraging case is that of Paul H., a young German who was converted three years ago. He now devotes his time ashore to helping the sailors' missions at the various ports he trades to. At one mission he has a large class of his fellow-countrymen, who look forward eagerly to his visits, when he tells them the "old, old story" in their own language. The friends of the mission have translated a number of Sankey's hymns into German and Swedish for the use of this class, thus enabling many to sing the Gospel of grace and glory in their own tongue. He and his wife have offered themselves to a foreign missionary society in Germany for service abroad.

BREAD UPON THE WATERS.

Another interesting incident took place at the Sunday-night meeting not long ago. A Scandinavian sailor stood up and told how several years ago he had joined a British ship, the mate of which was a Christian. By his kindly interest, and still more by his godly life, he won this man over to the Lord's side. As he stood, his face beaming with the joy that filled his heart, he said: "I have never met him who led me to Jesus since I left that ship, but I should like to see him once again to thank him for all his kindness to me, and for leading me into the light." The mate of whom he spoke, now captain of a large sailing vessel, was present, and sitting a few seats from the speaker, rose and grasped the sailor's hand, saying: "I was the mate on the ship you speak of, and I am glad to see you again and know you are still following in the good way." The meeting was an affecting one. Captain D. experienced the great joy of knowing he had been the means of turning a sinner from the error of his way. This unexpected meeting resulted in the captain engaging the carpenter to join the ship on the next voyage.

Altogether the report shows a solid work is being done, blessed by the Lord of the harvest, and appreciated by those for whom it is intended. We regret to state that after the strain of ten years' uninterrupted labours, Mrs. Mackenzie's health has seriously broken down, and she has been ordered several months complete rest. All the funds received have been devoted to maintaining the work; there is consequently no reserve to fall back upon at this crisis.

En Route for South Africa.

IN a recent communication Miss ANNA M. COOTE, well known for her devoted labours among coloured girls in South Africa, gives some interesting particulars of her voyage to the Cape on her return to her much-loved work. "We had not what people call a pleasant voyage, but it was a profitable one. Many of the passengers gathered with us for prayer each night. Each day we had Kindergarten for the boys and girls, and some long past childhood said they enjoyed the services greatly. The children were most intelligent. One Russian Jewess, with five children, knew the Bible well. Two of her girls and a boy about eleven could tell Bible stories from both Old and New Testaments.

"I had been given leave to go anywhere on the ship, and hearing that a baby was very ill, I sought it. The poor mother, going to her husband at Pretoria, had eight children, the youngest of whom (one year and ten months) was dying. We prayed with the mother and some women. Above us a concert was in full swing. How we longed to put a word in at the crowd gathered to 'while away' a precious hour, to let them know that God was speaking on the boat; but they would not be disturbed. The little one passed away, and next morning was committed to the deep. God's voice was now heard. As many sailors as could be spared, and nearly all the passengers, attended the service conducted by the Captain." Miss Coote has returned to her sphere of service, after a sojourn in England, with renewed faith in God, and assured of the continued interest and sympathy of her many friends.

Protestant Schools for India.

WHILST working amongst the heathen and non-Christians I have often thought how sad it is to know that while we are doing all we can to make the people of India give up idolatry, our own people—the British in India—are being drawn back to it! A vast number of the schools for white children are carried on by the Roman Catholics, Ritualists, and the extreme High Church party.

I have often thought that what is needed is a School Society for India, or a Protestant School Society. How many well educated and even wealthy ladies would like to work in India, but for the language and the climate. But the climate and language difficulty would be got over in this work, for no fresh language would be wanted, and only the best climates are chosen for schools. Although the work would not be direct mission work, it would be mission work in another form, for one of the chief difficulties in the evangelization of India is the lives of professing Christians. As things are, people who cannot afford to send their children to Europe are compelled to fall back upon the education provided by non-Protestant institutions.

Progress in Ecuador.

THOSE who have the interests of the Gospel at heart will rejoice to learn that a Civil Marriage Law was adopted by the Congress of Ecuador, and duly signed by the President, in October last. This is a simple statement, but it means much in a land which for generations has been a stronghold of Romanism. It means that a heavy blow has been given to the Papal power, and an advance step taken in the interests of public morality.

Up to the present time authority to grant or withhold permission to wed has been entirely with the Church. If a man was too poor to pay the fee demanded by the priest, he could not be married, and the result was concubinage. Again, if he was unwilling to go to confession, which is a condition for receiving the Roman sacrament of matrimony, he remained unmarried, and the result was the same. This latter has been a very common case all over Ecuador. Now marriage is to be regulated by laws of the State, and celebrated before civil authorities. This is a necessary requirement, and costs nothing. After it is fulfilled the contracting parties are at liberty to have a further ceremony before a minister of the religion they profess.

Of course the clerical party made extraordinary opposition to the measure, and this has not ceased with its adoption. The bishops have united in publishing several "manifestos" to their people, in which the strongest kind of language is used in connection with the weakest kind of argument.

The Minister of War has willingly granted missionaries permission to labour without hindrance among the soldiers in the barracks and in the military hospitals. The same privilege is extended to them for work in the prisons by the Minister of the Interior and Police. This official has also given instructions that the public authorities are to maintain order at Protestant meetings, and to see that the evangelists are respected, and that freedom and safety in their work is guaranteed to them.

Five points in this interesting republic are occupied by workers of the Gospel Missionary Union of Kansas City, Mo., U.S.A. One of these is out in a country district of the mountains, amid the down-trodden descendants of the ancient Incas, the serfs of the land. The two ladies there engaged need our sympathy and prayers, that they may be kept cheerful and hopeful in the midst of the loneliness of their position, the difficulties of acquiring the Quichua language, and the indifference of the Indians. The labour of the other workers amid the Spanish-speaking Ecuadorians is more hopeful, in that they enjoy opportunities of preaching in public and from house to house. In Guayaquil a few converts have been baptized, while in other parts there are individuals who have given promise of receiving the Word mixed with faith.

As we see so clearly the hand of God in the national affairs of Ecuador, year by year opening the door a little wider for the proclamation of the truth, and steadily dissipating the popular fanaticism, we are more than ever confirmed in our confidence that the evangelization of Ecuador is a work to which God has set His hand.

A Call from Bengal.—Mrs. Flora M. Hewlett writes from Benares, with regard to Mission work in that stronghold of Hinduism:—"We have many tokens of encouragement, both in the school and in the zenanas, but one longs to see God's Holy Spirit working in our midst. I have now only one Christian teacher to help me in the school work, as I have not enough funds to support another, though there is enough work for two more in the school and in the zenanas. I wish some lady who cannot come herself would allow me to be her representative, and collect funds to carry on the work. I should write to her regularly and tell her all that is being done; and, though not present, she would very definitely share in my work among the heathen. It would be a comfort for me to know that I had a partner at home who was holding the ropes, and sharing my joys and sorrows. I should also be able to extend the work in this great city if funds were increased."

Pandita Ramabai's Work.

THERE are one or two points in the very enthusiastic letter concerning our dear friend, Pandita Ramabai, and her work, which appeared in your issue of February 26, upon which I should be glad to be permitted to make a few comments. As it stands, it may lead some to misunderstand Ramabai's relation to the High Church party. The letter is evidently written by a new worker, without a true apprehension of the past history and present standing of the work.

It is a fact that Ramabai was baptized by the High Church party, when, as she would herself tell you, she had only an intellectual belief in Christian doctrine, and had not been led to see herself a sinner in need of personal salvation. But so little value did she set by that baptism that she has since been baptized by immersion by a servant of Christ who does not even prefix "Rev." to his name.

Ever since her conversion, Ramabai has been growing, and her work has developed in the very opposite direction to that carried on by the Ritualistic sisterhood, under whose auspices she obtained her first knowledge of Christianity. But these people were very kind to her, and she has retained the friendship of individuals among them.

I am at a loss to understand why the visit of "Father" Page should have been singled out to write about, when I am hearing privately of exceedingly helpful visits from Dr. Cuthbert Hall, Rev. Gregory Mantle, Mrs. Penn Lewis, and other well-known Evangelical teachers. Dr. Cuthbert Hall's visit was at a most opportune time, just when a new scheme of some Brahmin opponents to harass Ramabai's work was developed, and the institutions were agitated. My informant says: "God sent a strengthening angel in the person of Dr. Cuthbert Hall. Oh, how kind, how interested, how loving he was!"

It is, indeed, wonderful how Ramabai is upheld and helped to go forward in answer to the believing prayers of God's people in all lands. It is only that their prayers may not be hindered by any misunderstanding, that I venture to write.—Yours sincerely,

Addington, Kent. Helen S. Dyer.

Servians in South Hungary.

COMMUNICATIONS have been already published regarding the interesting work of Colporteur Pavkov in Southern Hungary. The good work goes on with many tokens of encouragement. A convert, G. Z——writes:—

"Having been led through Pavkov to know the grace of our Lord, it has been my desire not to hide my talent in the earth; rather, I have felt powerfully moved to proceed to active service. As a young man attending classes, I commenced among my fellow-pupils. I read the Bible to them, and gave copies to some of them. Now, having left school, I have undertaken a missionary journey, and have visited a number of villages.

"In Kuman I had an assembly of twenty persons, to whom I read the parable of the Prodigal Son, endeavouring to apply it to the hearers. They listened with quietness indescribable, and at their request I remained three days with them reading the Bible to them.

"In Beodra the people, on hearing of my arrival, assembled, some coming also from the neighbouring Karlova. The interest taken by the Servians in the Gospel message is increasingly evident. How necessary it is to have a preacher among them! Our countryman, Pavkov, has been labouring among them in an evangelistic way beside doing the work of colporteur, but it is all too little. One who would give himself wholly to the work of evangelization is required.

"In Nagy-Kikinda I went to a man who was in the habit of reading the Bible for himself, but did not trouble himself much about other people. When he saw, however, that I was about to go forth to invite the people, he went with me. In the evening we had an assembly of from forty to forty-five persons. I read to them about the Good Samaritan, explaining the parable, and directing their thoughts to the Lord's great compassion.

"At other villages I had an interesting reception. The work of the true reformation is thus in progress among these members of the Greek Church. Let us not delay; let us be up and doing, that the spark which has been kindled may not be quenched!"

Itinerating in France.

BEFORE leaving Normandy I had a most successful fortnight in Rouen, a city of churches. Here the Gospels were received with evident pleasure by a very mixed population. Standing on the Pont Boissine, opposite the Rue de Grand Pont, day by day, I had the satisfaction of being accosted by officers (military) and fashionable people of both sexes, asking for "another Gospel Book." On the Sunday afternoons I stood outside Notre Dame, where copies were taken with expressions of grateful thanks by all classes.

Arriving at Cannes, a place blessed with many evangelistic agencies, I find a number of open doors for aggressive evangelism. The fishing and shipping interests in the harbour, the visitors of different nationalities, the many villages along the coast, afford a wide scope for unremitting labour. Yesterday I went to the well-known village, La Bocca, where the chief industry is basket-making. Entering the workshops, I had my meetings all ready to be addressed. There are nearly as many Italians as French here, and I was furnished with Gospels in both languages. After presenting each with a copy, I held a series of short services, to the evident gratitude and pleasure of the toilers. Whilst open-air preaching is not allowed in France, yet there are plenty of open doors like this to be found everywhere.

I expect to return to England on March 9, when I shall be glad if those interested in Normandy will give me an opportunity of speaking as to the need there. I am proposing to return there in June to carry the glad tidings to thousands who have never heard it. I hope still to fulfil evangelistic engagements in England, yet I should be thankful were the funds provided to spend part of the year in this much-needed work. My home address is "Normandie," New Malden, Surrey.

Barcelona Protestant Hospital.

AGAIN, now for the twenty-fourth time, I ask the readers of The Christian to join with us in praise and thanksgiving for all that the Lord has done last year through and for the Protestant Cottage Hospital. Although contributions from England have been falling off more and more, an offering of £40 from an English working-man who "neither drinks nor smokes," who cares more for his Master's smile of approbation than for the praise of men, and the proceeds of a sale of work held in December, have made it possible to wipe out the debt with which we unfortunately began last year, and to close the year with a balance in hand. Besides thirty-three Spaniards, seventeen foreigners, representing six different nationalities, were received as patients. The spiritual welfare of the patients is always kept in view, and we have to thank the Lord for much blessing received. For details of the work I refer to the report, which I will gladly send to all interested in the work.

I earnestly plead for renewed interest in this corner of the Lord's vineyard, because, besides providing for the current expenses, we have this year to enclose the new strip of land and build the boundary wall. When will our friends make it possible for us to build on this land the much-needed and much-prayed-for home for the aged poor? Will the aged Protestants of Barcelona be always obliged to seek the shelter of the Roman Catholic Almshouses when they are past work, where there is no peace for those who do not comply with the idolatrous rites of Rome? Do not forget that the Spanish Protestants of Barcelona belong almost all to the poor class. May I also ask for more foreign postage stamps? My supply is quite exhausted, and only £2 10s. could be realized by stamps last year. Anna von Mielecka.

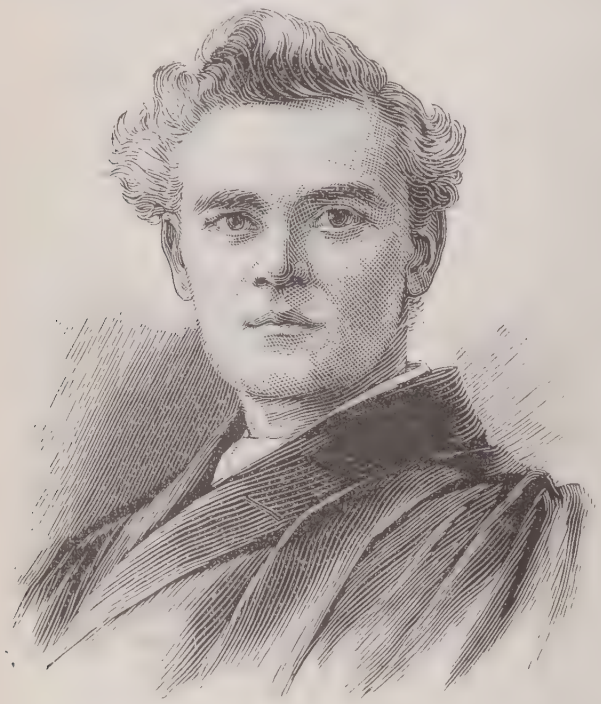
Free Churchmen in Council

AT BRIGHTON.

IF any evidence were needed to indicate the feeling of Nonconformists towards the Free Church Federation movement, it would assuredly be found in the magnificent gatherings assembling at Brighton this week, and in the fact that during the year no fewer than sixty-six new councils have been formed. The eight hundred councils and forty federations which now exist, are an expression of that spirit which is one of the most hopeful signs of our times—the spirit of unity which is animating the respective denominations, and leading them to recognise that the application of the law of Christ in every relation of human life is best promoted by strong fellowship among the churches and confederate endeavours.



REV. R. J. CAMPBELL, M.A., DR. PARKER'S SUCCESSOR, WHO PREACHED THE COUNCIL SERMON.

From Photograph by Messrs. Pannell & Holden, 49, St. George's Road, Brighton.

One of the primary objects of the movement is to facilitate fraternal intercourse and co-operation among the Evangelical Free Churches, and the report presented at the Brighton meetings this week is an encouraging revelation of the extent to which this ideal is being realized. In some minds there may have been fears that the vast pressure of work connected with the campaign against the Education Bill would involve the neglect of the spiritual side of the movement. This, however, has not been the case, for the united missions have been more numerous than in any previous year. The three evangelists—Mr. Gipsy Smith, Mr. W. R. Lane, and Rev. J. Tolefree Parr—have been heard in every part of the country, and their ministry has been remarkably owned of God. Crowds have flocked to hear the Gospel, and subsequent examination has shown that the results have been permanent to a gratifying extent. The purpose of Mr. Meyer's missions was to promote the efficiency of the common church life, and especially to help and cheer Christian ministers and other workers; testimonies to the rich fruitfulness of the work are numerous. His visits have done much to deepen the devotion of church members, and to quicken the interest of pastors and people on many important points of Christian life.

The Education Campaign has, of course, monopolized in a large degree the energies of the national and local councils. From the inception of the movement, vigilant attention has been given to the educational problems of the country, and when the Government undertook to bring in a comprehensive measure dealing with the great subject in a manner calculated to endanger the highest interests of Free Churchmen, the general committee at once made its voice heard, and urged the local federations and councils carefully to examine the measure. The spontaneous opposition of Nonconformists to the Bill was greatly strengthened by the Federation, and its efforts in this direction, right from the first manifesto, have been marked by energy, thoroughness, and resolution.

Apart from the Education Campaign and united missions, the Councils have engaged themselves in a great variety of social, civic, and moral enterprises. The scope of the operations widens every year, and the work in its various forms becomes more real, vigorous, and united, and withal more deeply spiritual. Open-air evangelistic efforts were held in connection with a large number of the councils, and in many cases where such enterprises would have been impracticable by one church they have been organized and successfully maintained by councils. In the matter of temperance reform, the past year has witnessed widespread activity, and the united efforts put forward in this way have proved abundantly fruitful. The Pledge-signing Crusade was taken up enthusiastically, and brought to a close in January last. It was then found that half a million pledges had been taken. In addition to numerous protests against extension of the hours for drinking in connection with the Coronation celebrations, Gospel temperance missions have been held in almost every part of the country, and one of the many very hopeful features of the councils' work in this direction is that of organizing temperance teaching in day schools.

Invaluable work has been done in withstanding the rising tide of Sabbath desecration, and protests made by united churches were effectual where the attempts of individual churches would in all probability had been disregarded.

Another evil to which attention is being given is the gambling mania, and the Council has frequently been called upon, not only to emphasize the disastrous results of betting and gambling, but to take emphatic action. The social purity campaign has been prosecuted with unfailing diligence since the commencement of the committee's crusade in 1894, no fewer than 350 houses of ill-fame, in two metropolitan districts alone, have been closed, and spiritual work has been rendered possible by the disappearance of flagrant and open vice.

It is gratifying to note the growth of the federation abroad. On all hands there is felt a hunger for unity in operation and mutual encouragement, and in America especially the movement is making rapid and strong progress.

THE NEW PRESIDENT.

For the first time in the history of the federation a minister of the Primitive Methodist Church has been chosen to fill the presidential chair. Rev. James Travis has served the Connexion with conspicuous ability during his ministry, extending for upwards of forty years. At an age when most men are thinking of repose after so long a period of service, he is full of zeal and energy. For years he has been known as one of the most eloquent preachers of his denomination, while no less remarkable than the eloquence which marks his pulpit utterances is the ability he constantly manifests as an administrator, and his power of influencing others. As a platform speaker he is ready and powerful, while in the committee room, as on the platform, he is tactful and effective.

Born in 1840, at Summit, near Rochdale, Mr. Travis gratefully acknowledges that he owes his definite religious decision to the influence of a pious mother, whose prayerful and consistent life affected him powerfully for good. Soon after his conversion he was engaged in the work of soul-winning, and while still quite a lad became a local preacher. In due course, he was admitted into the ministry, Manchester being his first circuit. The greater part of his ministerial life has been spent in Lancashire. The passion for evangelistic work for which early Primitive Methodists were so widely known, is one of the characteristics of Mr. Travis; but to this traditional fervour have been added intellectual culture and scholarship and the ability to handle the problems of a large and influential organization. One of the most important posts in the Connexion is the secretaryship of the Missionary Society, and it was in this office that he made his mark as a competent organizer. At the Methodist Ecumenical Conferences held in London and Washington successively, he was chosen to represent his church, and his visit to America was soon followed by his election to the presidential chair of the Conference. Blessed with a vigorous constitution, he is unsparing of himself where his work is concerned. An ardent temperance reformer, and a keen advocate of all that makes for social progress, Mr. Travis has shown large-hearted sympathy with every section of the Church of Christ in efforts to advance the highest welfare of the race, and above all to lead men to a constant recognition of the claims of God. The distinction with which he is now honoured is a fitting acknowledgment of the sincerity and enthusiasm which have marked a long and fruitful ministry in the Gospel.

REV. J. TRAVIS, PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL.

From Photograph by J. Brandebourg, 14, St. Werburgh Street, Chester.

During the hours of Monday delegates from all parts of the country arrived in large numbers, in order to be able to participate in the reception in the evening by the Mayor and Mayoress (Alderman and Mrs. J. C. Buckwell). In consequence of the large number of the guests it was found necessary, in addition to the entire suite of rooms in the Royal Pavilion, to utilize the Dome. The beautiful halls were the rallying ground of numerous groups of friends, many of whom meet each other but once in the course of the year, and the spirit of hearty fellowship and mutual goodwill pervading the gathering augured well for the coming days.

THE THINGS WHICH CANNOT BE SHAKEN.

The opening sermon by the retiring president (Dr. W. J. Townsend) was a weighty and impressive utterance, based on the words, "Having then a great High Priest, who hath passed through the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our confession" (Heb. iv. 14). Recalling some of the memorable events that have taken place during the past year, and the intense strain of controversy with which its passing has been marked, he spoke in fitting terms of the loss the Free Churches had sustained in the death of trusted and revered leaders, whose work was of international magnitude, great heroes of faith and intrepid soldiers of God. "All these things have brought us together this morning, as those who have passed through the fitful dreams of an anguished night, and we are summoned under circumstances of peculiar solemnity to renew our confidence in the things which cannot be shaken, and to nerve ourselves for the great battle of the ages against sin and error."

Proceeding, Dr. Townsend pointed out that this epistle was written under similar circumstances, when men were forsaking high ideals and losing cherished hopes, and timidly stealing from the Christ to Ananias the Pontiff, and from the eternal substance to the fleeting shadow. The present also is the day when men need to be called back to Christ, and to grip the truths which alone are the strength of a new humanity. The Christian's hope in the assurance that he has a great High Priest, this is the greatest fact of time, the old abiding foundation of human hope and salvation. Priesthood rules the world. It does more—it rules the universe. It is as old as humanity. Since man sinned one undying yearning has arisen ever fresh in the human consciousness; the race in every age and condition has nursed the desire for a great High Priest, and with outstretched hands has cried "O, that I knew where I might find Him."

At the close of his sermon, Dr. Townsend said they were called upon to fill an office, and fulfil a duty unknown in the history of the movement. Twelve months ago they had nominated Dr. Parker as president, but God, having given to the world so great a gift, had resumed it, and it was their sad duty to fill his place. In nominating Rev. James Travis to the chair, Dr. Townsend referred to fitness for the post and assured him of the confidence and support of the Council.

EDIFICATION OF THE CHURCHES.

Having acknowledged the confidence his brethren were placing in him, by asking him to occupy the chair for the ensuing year, the president remarked that when the council became a public institution ten years ago, many good people thought it to be a political rather than a religious movement, and refused to give it their blessing; but it soon became evident that neither political, social, nor ecclesiastical ambition entered into the motives of those who under God originated the federation. Its true genius was in a desire for a closer fellowship, and a more perfect edification of the churches, with a view to united and effective efforts to evangelize the people and establish the kingdom of God in the earth.

That the Council has been true to the spirit of its birth is beyond question. Above all and before all its work has been spiritual, the wider fellowship resulting has extended the horizon of our spiritual vision, deepened and broadened our Christian sympathies, enriched our religious experience, and banded us together to serve the interests of the Church and Kingdom of Christ in ways which would have been impossible in isolation. Much of our preaching is more constructive, definite, and vitally Evangelical. The general life of many of the Free Churches is more Catholic, more alert, more active than ten years ago; while the union of stately Presbyterians, orderly Congregationalists, cautious Baptists, and fiery Methodists, in worship and in work, has impressed the world with the real oneness of Christian life as nothing else has done for generations. We must continue this witness of catholicity and unity, or we share the responsibility of delaying the answer to the great prayer of our Lord for the means of His Church.

TO PURIFY SOCIAL LIFE.

After entering an eloquent protest against the Government's Education Act, and urging his hearers to continue the fight, Mr. Travis appealed to them, while fighting this battle, not to relax their efforts to purify our social life, to ameliorate the condition of the poor and suffering, to promote Sunday closing and other temperance reforms to which they are pledged. Above all it is important to cultivate a compassionate yearning and a consuming zeal for the ingathering of the Christless multitudes who swarm around our sanctuaries, but keep outside the supreme equipment. For so great and many-sided a work vital and constant fellowship is necessary with the ever-living, ever-present, and all-sufficient Christ, who shall not fail nor be discouraged till He hath set judgment in the earth and the isles shall wait for His law.

MELBOURNE EXHIBITION BUILDING.

Coloured Students at Wellesley, U.S.A. —A statement went the round of the Press a few weeks ago to the effect that the daughter of Mr. Booker T. Washington had been badly treated by fellow-students at Wellesley College on account of her colour. We are glad to receive the following authoritative contradiction:—"Miss Washington entered Wellesley as a special student. Such a student is not a member of any regular class, but chooses work in several of the departments of the college as may best suit her desires. Miss Washington was on exactly the same footing as any other special student in college (of whom there were nineteen). She conducted herself in a ladylike and fitting way in every respect, and there is absolutely no truth in the statement that her presence was the cause of embarrassment to the authorities at Wellesley. Coloured students, properly qualified, have always been admitted to Wellesley College on the same footing as other students."

*"A Great Revival."

ONE of the features of the Melbourne Mission was the spread of home prayer-meetings in thousands of families, and Mr. Alexander specially urged on the newly converted the importance of family prayers. He proposed three searching tests—tests which, he remarked, he had always found advantageous and stimulating. "First," he said, "I should like to know how many Christians here maintain family prayer in their homes. All who do, hold up a hand!" About fifty hands were raised. "That's not much account," said Mr. Alexander; "too small a number altogether. Who that has not up to the present had family prayer will start it now? Hands up!" A considerable number responded to this appeal. "Now," continued Mr. Alexander, "let all those who can conscientiously say they have been the means of definitely leading one soul to Christ raise a hand." Several hands went up. Said Mr. Alexander: "You Christians want waking up to the duty of personal work. If you're not saved for service, what are you saved for? Third, who in this hall has read the Bible through from beginning to end?" About fifty hands were raised. "Ah!" exclaimed Mr. Alexander, "I've caught some of you preachers now." He then asked, "Who will undertake to do so within the next twelve months? It can be done in that time, can't it, Dr. Torrey?" "Yes," replied the missioner, "three chapters a day and five on Sundays will do it!" A large number of hands went up to promise this, and Mr. Alexander expressed his gratification.

He told this interesting incident respecting the card bearing the words, "Get right with God," which were distributed throughout Melbourne:—

"A kind friend got about 30,000 cards printed with that text on them; and we distributed them everywhere. When I got up to Sydney, one of the Salvation Army men pulled one of these cards out of his pocket, and said, 'Do you recognise that?' 'I guess I do,' I said; and then I discovered that he was the brother of the man in Ballarat who printed the cards. Well, there was a fellow in Ballarat who was a traveller, and he used to carry a lot of his business cards around in his overcoat pocket. One day a man gave him one of these 'Get right with God' cards, and he slipped it in his overcoat pocket with the others. Every time he dived his hand into his pocket to bring out a business-card he felt this other card—because it was longer than the business cards. Although he did not pull it out and read it, he knew what was on it; and, after awhile, the thought worried him so that he did get right with God—just through that little bit of a card. Now, over in our country, the children get these things and gum them over anything, just as Dr. Torrey has been telling you about. I do not know if they let you do it here, but over there the children sometimes go to the shop of an unconverted man and paste the whole sidewalk in front of his shop over with these things. He cannot sweep them off, and he cannot lift them off—so they just have to stay there until they wear off; and you never know how much good has been done in the meantime."

* From A Great Revival: The Story of Dr. Torrey and Charles Alexander. Edited by David Williamson. (1s. net. Morgan & Scott.) This account of spiritual awakening in the Southern Hemisphere will fill the hearts of Christian readers with praise to the God who hears and answers prayer. The pages teem with incidents of conversion; and the whole narrative is one that will strengthen the faith of the believer. The attractive, telling style in which it is written, and the numerous illustrations, cannot fail to win friends for the book wherever it is introduced.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, March 15. Nehemiah i.

THIS book is always interesting, as showing how much good work may be done in the world by a man, who, though not specially gifted, has a high purpose, and is animated by pure and disinterested motives. Ordinary gifts, when placed at God's disposal, may result in extraordinary service.

The commissions already given to Zerubbabel and Ezra dealt only with the repair of the temple and its buildings; little or nothing had been done as yet by the returned exiles to repair the waste and desolate places, or rebuild the ruined walls. Josephus says that, walking in the favourite winter palace of the Persian kings, Nehemiah overheard some persons conversing in the Hebrew language; and, having ascertained that they had lately returned from Judæa, learned, in answer to his eager inquiries, of its desolate condition.

The recital deeply afflicted him (4), and he could find no relief, except in prayer, mingling confession and entreaty. Already a secret purpose had begun to form itself within his heart, which, perhaps, he had communicated to a few like-minded with himself (11), about which he and they agreed to make special supplication before God. The great deeds of holy men are wrought out in fellowship and communion with God. Prayer is the power that moves the Almighty arm, because it reflects the purpose of the Almighty will. Live near God until you know the secret movement of the Divine purpose. We, too, should take to heart the condition of God's Church. How do we know but that some one who reads these lines may be the Nehemiah of its restoration, though only gifted with two talents!

MONDAY, March 16. Nehemiah ii.

The month Nisan; i.e., nearly four months since he had learned the desolate condition of the city. This long interval was doubtless spent in intercessory prayer. Nehemiah was being tested by protracted delay, which is the hardest of all trials to bear; but the long waiting had not made the first impression of his sorrow less—his emotion was not ephemeral—the king himself noticed that his countenance was sad. And with what emotion he silently passed among the ruins (12)!

Xenophon remarks the graceful manner in which the cup-bearers of the Persian monarchs presented the wine to their royal masters, always drinking a little first. The queen here referred to, was probably Esther. Notice this instance of ejaculatory prayer, that between the royal question and his reply (notwithstanding the perturbation caused by the inquiry, and his anxiety to make the most of the opportunity), Nehemiah prayed unto the God of heaven. He prayed for grace to answer aright, and that his petition to the king might speed according to God's good hand (8, 18). See also Gen. xlix. 24.

That he should be trusted by the king to fix a time for his return, and that the necessary materials for his work should be furnished by the royal command, proves the high estimation in which Nehemiah was held at court. But the district magistrates, specially those in jurisdiction over the Samaritans (see 2 Kings xvii. 24; John iv. 9, last clause), took it greatly to heart, and cast scorn at his undertaking; but Nehemiah stood firm in his consciousness that he was divinely commissioned, and prospered (20). How noble an example of reckoning upon God—"The God of heaven, He will prosper us"!

TUESDAY, March 17. Nehemiah iii.

Eliashib was the grandson of Jeshua. He and his brethren set an example to the people. The ministers of religion must not expect their people to go further than they are prepared to go themselves. The shepherd must precede and lead his flock. There seems to have been a special service for dedication and thanksgiving when the first piece of re-building was concluded (1).

The wall was divided into portions, and one of these was assigned to each of the great families of the Return, and to the villages which were in closest proximity. The re-building was therefore carried forward simultaneously at various points, with great energy.

Note verse 5, where not many noble were called; also verse 12, where the work of the women is specially referred to; verse 20, the specially earnest devotion of Baruch; verse 23, the interest excited by each man building the piece of wall nearest his own dwelling; verse 26, the Nethinim—i.e., not only the priests and Levites, but the lowliest persons who bore the menial burdens of God's house—were included in the blessed work of restoration. Is not this like a page for God's record of our service?

This scene of busy co-operation tells its own story, and suggests how urgently we need this work of re-construction to-day. Great breaches have been made in our Rest Day, our old habits of reverence for the House of God, our love for the Bible, and our habits of domestic and private devotion. Is it not time that we should set about reconstruction, beginning with our own character, our own home and neighbourhood? Nor can we build alone (1 Cor. iii. 9, &c.).

WEDNESDAY, March 18. Nehemiah iv.

Hatred, derision, and threats were heaped by the Samaritans on the rebuilding operations. But these only elicited the more earnest dependence on God on the part of the Jews. If Nehemiah's prayer seems too hot in its imprecations, we must remember that he felt that this opposition was directed, not against him only, but against God and His cause. It was the righteously indignant protest of a pious and patriotic soul.

Notice the combination of faith in God with sanctified commonsense in verse 9. It is not enough to pray, we must also watch. Cromwell exhorted his soldiers, not only to trust in God, but to keep their powder dry. In General Booth's story, the little girl not only prayed that no birds might be caught in her brother's trap, but she broke the trap! The citizens were equally skilful in the use of sword and trowel; with the one to guard against attack, with the other to hasten forward the wall. They dare not, even at night, divest themselves of their clothes or weapons; they carried their weapons when they went to the water reservoirs, which were probably outside the walls, or would at least be the most subject to an enemy's attack (23, R.V.). Fellow-Christians, we also must maintain this twofold attitude: whilst we build in God's Church, we must repel the evil which always threatens; but we must not be so militant as to neglect the constructive side of Christian service. Our God fights for us (20), and builds beside us!

THURSDAY, March 19. Nehemiah v.

To Nehemiah's difficulties from without were added even worse anxieties from within, on account of the hardships of the poorer Jews. Many of these were almost driven to desperation by their richer brethren, to whom they had mortgaged their lands, and sold themselves and their families for bread. It would almost appear from verse 2 as if they meditated breaking violently into the corn granaries. This condition was partly caused by the difficulty of making the land productive, and by the double strain of the Persian taxes and of the cost of rebuilding Jerusalem.

Nehemiah was honestly indignant at the disclosure of the hard-fisted oppression of the rich, who were fattening on the miseries of the poor, and contrasted it with his own habit and conduct; for it was his wont to subordinate his own interests for the common good, and to use his income for liberating indigent debtors (8, 14, &c.) Finally, he challenged them to forego all interest on the loans which had been contracted, and to restore the lands which had been mortgaged. His appeal elicited an immediate and generous response, ratified by the most solemn oaths.

There are many notable expressions in this chapter. Verse 6: "I was angry when I heard their cry." Oh that the cry of the poor were allowed more often to enter into the minds of our statesmen, compelling them to abolish the temptations to drink, and provide decent dwellings! Verse 7: "I consulted with myself." We must have times for quiet deliberation as in God's sight. Verse 10: "Let us"; he who would lead others, must be prepared to set a good example. Verse 15: "So did not I." We may have a perfect right to do things which we refuse to do, because of some higher ideal. Verse 19 (R.V.): "Remember me, O my God." This is all that a dying thief, or an earnest patriot, can wish.

FRIDAY, March 20. Nehemiah vi.

The enemies of the Jews now set to work to effect their evil ends by treachery. Four times they endeavoured to induce Nehemiah to put himself into their hands. Next, they sent a letter, not enclosed, as was the custom, in a little bag, but open for all the world to read. Lastly, they sought to intimidate him, and cause him to adopt measures for self-preservation (11). But against all these plots and stratagems, his simple-hearted honesty and sincerity of purpose were sword and shield.

When we are engaged in God's work, we may trust Him to take care of our characters, and defend our reputation. We must take our marching-orders from Him, and show ourselves "approved unto God," refusing to be at the beck and call of all or sundry who invite us to the villages of the plain (2). When our eye is single to God's glory, our whole body is full of light; and in a flash of intuition we can detect, when men are feigning things out of their own heart, and when Satan is under the guise of an angel of light (8 and 12). It becomes us to take no servile thought for ourselves when we are engaged on God's work, lest if we do we may bring a reproach on our profession (13; 1 Cor. ix. 11, 12). We cannot be too particular always remembering how many eyes are watching us.

In fifty-two days the wall was finished, notwithstanding all the machinations of open enemies and false friends (17); and it was evidently "wrought of God." "Then was their mouth filled with laughter, and their tongue with singing; then said they among the nations, 'The Lord hath done great things for them.'" The Lord had built the house, or they had laboured in vain (Ps. cxxvi. and cxxvii., probably composed at this time).

It would appear that the time fixed with the Persian monarch for Nehemiah's return had now nearly expired (ii. 6); and he made the best arrangements he could devise for the future government of the community. Hanani was a near relative (i. 2), and both he and the governor of the castle or citadel were men of high principle. What a Godsend it is to any community when its governors or leading citizens merit the description of being faithful and God-fearing men!

It was a wise precaution not to open the gates of the city until the inhabitants were all astir and able to repel any attack, and it was equally wise that at night each should be appointed to duty over against his own house (3). If everyone sweeps the snow from before his own door, the streets will soon become clear; and if each Christian man were to set himself to save his own household, employés, and neighbours, the world would soon be permeated with the light and grace of God.

Notice how Nehemiah ascribes his resolve to secure a proper register of the returned exiles to the grace of God, which prompted and directed him (5). Let us keep our hearts and minds more constantly open to Him, that He may think His thoughts and purposes into them. To aid in this census, the discovery of a document drawn up by Ezra and containing the names of the first detachment of exiles under Zerubbabel, was of immense service. When we do God's will He makes all manner of coincidences assist us.

No priest with Urim and Thummim stood up till our Lord Jesus came. With Him only are the lights and perfections, and from Him alone can we obtain authoritative indication of the Father's will (John viii. 12). F. B. M.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

FIRST WEEK OF MEETINGS IN GLASGOW.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.)

AT the reception given on Monday afternoon, of which brief mention was made in our last issue, some wise words were spoken by different speakers. Rev. J. T. Forbes referred to the statistics recently given in the newspapers of church attendance, as showing the spiritual decay that had been taking place within recent years; and said that the Church's first requirement was not the sinews of war to carry on its enterprises, but the breath of the Spirit of God to fit its members for efficient service. His address, though very short, was peculiarly apposite, and touched the one great need of the present time. Rev. J. Bell Henderson cordially welcomed the evangelists, and said he knew that Dr. Torrey had not come to supplant the regular ministry, but to supplement it.

Rev. Dr. Howie, Moderator of the United Free Church, referred to the great revival that was in progress all over Scotland when he began his ministry more than forty years ago, and said that at that time God's power and working were everywhere seen quite apart from prominent human instruments. He had been told by ministers in Edinburgh that he might with all readiness receive Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, as they were sound in doctrine, though their methods might not approve themselves to him. However, he wished to say that he was less particular about methods than he used to be; and to those friends who had come, seeking to arouse the Christless, whatever their method, he with all his heart bade God-speed.

MEMORIES OF OTHER DAYS.

At night in St. Andrews Hall an audience numbering something like 1,500 assembled, and taking into consideration the wetness of the evening, and the tendency on the part of many to make Monday an off-night, such a large gathering contained within it the elements of promise. A friend who is conversant with every phase of active soul-saving work in Glasgow, and who has been for nearly three decades in close personal touch with soul-winning endeavour, spoke of it as "a good meeting." Still, after the huge muster of the night before, 1,500 in St. Andrews Hall did not look so inspiring as the same number would have done in a building of smaller measurement. Mr. Oatts announced that no attempt had ever before been made to run a series of evangelistic meetings in that hall on week nights, and certainly the undertaking is a brave venture, and worthy of success. The hall has long been the favourite rendezvous for special services on Sabbaths, and has often in bygone days been used to accommodate the crowds that flocked to hear such men as D. L. Moody, Richard Weaver, John McNeill, Henry Varley, and others of wide public fame.

When Dr. Torrey had finished his address, several rose in response to his request that any who wished to begin with Christ for the first time should stand, and these were afterwards personally spoken to. Several backsliders also professed desire for restoration.

The weather conditions of Tuesday were for the first time favourable to the mission, and at three o'clock, the advertised hour of gathering, when the first of the week-day afternoon services was begun, the size of the audience was most cheering, something like 1,200 or more having come together. There were among those who gathered many friends from country districts, and a spirit of hopefulness and expectancy pervaded the assembly. The brightness without had its counterpart within, and the preacher delivered himself in splendid form. He remarked at the outset of his address, after Mr. Alexander had had his innings in the service of song, that the meeting had "a good feel" about it, and the discourse which then followed had "a good feel" about it as well. It followed effectual, fervent prayer, and it was an effective utterance, though it contained nothing new, but was simply the setting forth of the truth well known to every soul-winner, that prayer must be made use of if satisfactory results are to be obtained.

AFTER A NIGHT OF PRAYER.

He told a story which greatly interested the meeting, of how, when once acting as chairman at Tremont Temple, he found a lady's name on the programme as one of the speakers. He did not care for the preaching of women, and, as the lady who was to speak had but shortly before been converted, he thought her address would be sure to bring disaster to the meeting. Having called on her when her turn came, he buried his face in his hands; but, as she went on speaking, he felt such an unwonted power with her words that he ventured to look up. To his surprise the meeting was moved as no other had moved it, and many were in tears. On inquiring of her afterwards as to her preparation for the service, he found that she had been so much afraid of addressing such a great meeting that she had spent many of the hours of the previous night in prayer before God. The story carried with it its own application.

The points of his address were: prayer promotes spiritual growth; brings power into our work; brings about the conversion of men and women; brings blessing to the Church.

The rising of the tide of interest was clearly attested at the evening service, the attendance being thirty or forty per cent. above that of the preceding night. Considerably over two thousand people must have been present, and a great number of ministers of the Gospel could be observed among the audience, while on the platform were such well-known men as Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming, Rev. Dr. Howie, and others. Mr. Alexander's large choir, numbering several hundreds, many of the male and female members of it being students at present in training in the Bible Training Institute, was usefully in evidence. His effective handling of his choir commands unstinted admiration, and is worthy of generous recognition. The new hymns which he is introducing from his own hymn book are being heartily taken up, and already we have heard one of them being whistled in the street.

Before commencing his address, which he announced would be on "Three Fires," Dr. Torrey said that he meant to preach a long sermon, and he did not think it would be over before nine o'clock. It was, however, 9.20 before he closed, and the rapt attention devoted to the hearing of it by the large congregation right through from beginning to end, revealed the deep interest with which every point in it was followed. No after-meeting was announced, but several eager workers were to be seen afterwards, with Bible in hand, in different parts of the building, endeavouring to point one and another of the unsaved whom they had come across to "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world," who has said, "Him that cometh to Me, I will in no wise cast out."

HOW AN INVITATION CARD WORKED.

"Let us join in prayer, and let us all pray. If some of you have not prayed before, pray now. Brother Findlay will lead us in prayer." So said Mr. Alexander at the opening of Wednesday afternoon's meeting in St. Andrews Hall, after, with the aid of his choir, the hymn, "Sun of my soul," had been sung. In response to his request, Pastor D. J. Findlay led in prayer, and then the hymn, "Trust and obey," was sung. Between the singing of each verse Mr. Alexander threw in some off-hand remarks, one of them being that the devil kept him for two years out of the greatest joy of his life, that of winning souls for Christ, by telling him that his work was just to beat time. He then read extracts from a letter which had been received that day from Edinburgh from Mr. William Robertson, of Carrubbers Close Mission, telling of a nurse who had got a card of invitation to the meetings in the Synod Hall. She could not get out, but instead of throwing the card away she stuck it in a picture-frame. Her mistress saw it, made inquiry about it, went to one of the meetings, heard the message of life, and was converted. The conversion of her husband followed, then that of a son and daughter, and now they were a happy family in Christ.

Dr. Torrey said he had received a letter of a great work last Sabbath at Newhaven, a fishing village near Edinburgh. A number of fishing lads came to one of his meetings in the Empire Theatre, in Edinburgh, and were led to the Saviour, and so high has the tide of influence risen that at a service held in Newhaven last Sabbath by a student from Edinburgh, many more of the fishermen were led out to receive and confess Christ.

Wednesday afternoon's address was on "What personal work can do," and it struck us, as he went over the ground, that Mr. Moody's mantle has fallen on Dr. Torrey in the matter of seeking to get others set to work. We know some eminent evangelists who are splendid as soul-winners, but they have not the knack of setting others to work that D. L. Moody had, and that Dr. Torrey has. The points of his address were: Personal work can reach persons who cannot be reached in any other way. It cannot but hit the mark. It is definite. It succeeds where other work fails. It removes difficulties not easily removed in any other way. It can go on every day. It can go on anywhere. Each point was spoken to in detail, and an urgent appeal made to the large congregation to enlist in such service.

STIRRING UP TO PERSONAL EFFORT.

Beyond all question, if his mission in Glasgow succeeds in getting into the harness of personal endeavour the thousands of good Christian people who willingly contribute of their means for home and foreign missions, but who stop short of hand-to-hand dealing with men and women about their souls, the result will reach far beyond the power of human measurement; and it certainly seems that many such will be moved to attempt work they have never undertaken before. The influence of his Wednesday's appeal would reach out at once far beyond the confines of the city, for there were many workers from widely different parts of the country present at the service, among whom his earnest, practical word is sure to bear fruit.

Among other influential persons who take a deep interest in the work of evangelism, there have been present at one or other of the afternoon meetings Sir David Carrick-Buchanan, of Drumpellier, Mrs. Colville, of Cleland House, and Provost Logan, of Troon.

On Wednesday night the meeting was held in the City Hall, St. Andrew's Hall having been engaged before the committee were able to make arrangements for its use. The City Hall is of smaller dimensions, but the muster was larger than that of any weeknight service that had preceded it. The platform, floor space, balcony, and back gallery were all crowded, the congregation numbering about 2,500, and, with the hall brilliantly lit, the view from the platform was inspiring. At 7.30, though the meeting was advertised for eight, the evangelists took their places on the platform, the hall being then nearly full, and for twenty minutes Mr. Alexander kept the choir and congregation going with song. Then Dr. Torrey rose and asked a minister, bearing the same surname as his singing partner, to lead in prayer. Afterwards, one of the old well-known hymns, "Hallelujah, what a Saviour!" was sung, and, under Mr. Alexander's leadership, the hymn seemed clothed with new meaning.

DEALING WITH THE AWAKENED.

Something special was evidently in the mind of the preacher in the way that he was taking time by the forelock, for when it was only a few minutes past eight he rose, and opening his Bible, said, without referring to any particular text, "My subject to-night is one word of three letters, a word that appears everywhere in the Bible. That word is—God." The address was followed with deep interest, and contained much food for thought and reflection; and much beside, especially towards the close, excellently suited for awakening among the unsaved a sense of need. As he rang the changes on the fact that "God is Holy," and all must meet Him, it became evident that he was spreading his net to make a haul. Ten minutes before nine he closed his address, thirty minutes earlier than the night before, and while all bowed their heads, as requested by him, the meeting was tested as to how many would then and there receive Christ. Several stood up, and then all in the congregation who were converted were asked to stand up and remain standing, which the bulk of those present did.

While the congregation stood, at Dr. Torrey's request the two front seats were cleared out, and those who meant to accept Christ that night, and only those, were invited to come forward. Nearly a score did, to whom he addressed helpful words from John i. 12, Rom. x. 9, 10, &c. Afterwards, when the meeting had been dismissed, each one of those who had come forward was individually dealt with, and prayed with by the willing workers who were waiting in readiness to lend a helping hand. Those who came forward, however, did not represent anything like the total of anxiety among unsaved ones in the meeting, because after the great congregation had nearly dispersed there were to be seen little groups dotted here and there over the hall, where the open Bible was in evidence, and where earnest and serious conversation could be overheard. The place was like a beehive with the "hum" that was going on, and everything seemed to indicate that a big step forward had taken place in the spiritual history of the mission.

ENCOURAGING TESTIMONY.

Snow and sleet in turn, with showers of rain thrown in between, and all accompanied with a keen biting wind, were the various items in the weather programme on Thursday forenoon, making the outlook for the meetings rather disconcerting to those who were specially interested in them. Notwithstanding the uninvitingness of the day a large congregation gathered in St. Matthew's Church, where the service had been transferred for the occasion, St. Andrew's Hall not being available. Mr. Alexander, after one or two songs had been sung, called for testimony from Mr. John Anderson, of the Bible Training Institute, and Mr. D. J. Findlay, as to their impressions of the meetings, which they gave favourably and encouragingly, in a few words. Following this there was sung the hymn "The Blessed, Blessed Jesus, He's the One." Said Mr. Alexander in giving it out: "Have you ever noticed, when in trouble, how the hymns that speak most of the Lord are the ones you draw closest to?" a thought that many cordially reciprocated. Dr. Torrey's address, which came on after prayer by Rev. D. F. McKenzie, Langside, was on "What the Bible can do." It was delivered with all his accustomed vigour, and was a clear, lucid exposition along orthodox lines. He quoted a saying from Moody which, however, he did not think originated with him, "Sin will either keep you from this Book, or this Book will keep you from sin."

"I WHICH I HAD BROUGHT MY COMPANION."

At night the City Hall was again full, as on the preceding evening, and there were many among the audience that were evidently not church-goers. Rev. John McNeill, who was on the platform, led in prayer, and read a portion of Matthew vii. The address by Dr. Torrey was founded on the question put by God to Adam: "Where art thou?" and in unfolding his message he referred to the many hiding-places men have made for themselves in seeking to hide from God. In bringing his address to a point he made a strong appeal for immediate decision for Christ, instancing various reasons why men and women should have the great matter definitely and immediately settled. When the front seats had been cleared to make room for those who were determined to receive Christ as their Saviour and Lord, fully a score came forward; but afterwards others were found in the body of the hall, who, on being personally dealt with, professed to believe on, and receive, the Lord Jesus Christ. Into two rooms at the rear of the hall, one being used for males, and the other for females, those who had come forward to the penitent form were taken, and there individually conversed with. Many of the workers were greatly cheered by the apparent sincerity and genuineness of the inquirers. One young girl on receiving Gospel light was so overjoyed that she said: "I wish I had brought my companion with me."

A meal-hour meeting, on Friday, with the employés at the Caledonian railway engine works was conducted by the evangelists. Dr. Torrey gave a suitable Gospel message interspersed with anecdote, and Mr. Alexander rendered efficient help in the ministry of song. He generously distributed a number of his hymn books among the men, for which there was a great scramble.

HOW A REBUFF WAS USED OF GOD.

One of the special features of the afternoon meeting held later was the testimony of Miss Simpson from Edinburgh, the daughter of Professor Simpson, as to personal blessing received while the missioners were at work there. She said she did not know she was to be called upon, but having been asked, she began by saying that at the first meeting which she attended, the hymn, "I surrender all," was sung. She felt she could not sing it, as she was conscious she had not surrendered all. Day after day the hymn followed her, until at last she felt that she was willing to be made willing, and, having surrendered all to Jesus, she could say that it had made a great difference in her life and in her prayers; and had given her a love for the Bible and for personal work on behalf of others, which she never had before. She further mentioned that, after having received blessing for herself, she spoke to a girl in one of the Edinburgh meetings, who gave her a rebuff, and deliberately refused to receive the Saviour. Next day she got a letter from a lady, who did not give her name, telling her how she used to be a follower of Christ, but had gone back. Singularly enough, she had been sitting in the seat behind the girl Miss Simpson had spoken to the night before, and when she saw how the girl had treated her, it had cut her to the heart, and she, the backslidden one, had gone home and on her knees returned to the Saviour whom she had forsaken.

Lord Overtoun having prayed, an able address, on "What the Holy Spirit can do," was given by Dr. Torrey, in which the various attributes of the Spirit's Personality were Scripturally set forth and emphasized.

TESTIMONY AFTER ONE DAY.

In St. Andrew's Hall at night there was a large congregation of between two and three thousand people. As usual Mr. Alexander held the reins during the early part of the meeting, and demonstrated afresh his competency as a leader of song. His great aim is not to show that he can sing, but to make every other person sing, and in this he accomplishes marvels. The people yield themselves to his persuasive, controlling generalship, and he makes rare use of their vocal powers. "All the men sing," he said. Then it was "All the women now." "You soldier boys sing," he said, addressing a row of soldiers who occupied a seat to his left on the balcony. They sang out while all others were silent; then afterwards, addressing one of them, he said, "You were converted last night, what does it feel like after being one day saved?" "Very pleasant," said the soldier.

Dr. Torrey's address, which covered nearly an hour in delivery, on "Weighed in the balances and found wanting," was a soul-searching one. Sins of every kind were mercilessly handled, and his weighty, thrilling pronouncement against certain forms of social evil are not likely to be soon forgotten.

The number who came out to the front seat in response to his appeal at its close was not so great as on previous nights, and those who responded were obviously not the class that he had principally aimed at; but there is joy in heaven over sinners repenting and coming to Jesus, whatever class they come from. Several of them were lads 16 or 17 years of age, and who can foretell what eventualities are bound up in such lives when grace gains the ascendancy and control? It is quite to be expected that there were others, older in years, who had been heavily hit by the artillery of Sinai, which the preacher had brought to bear on his audience.

THE SECOND SABBATH.

Sabbath's daybreak found Glasgow wrapped in hard frost, and in the Tent Hall at eight in the morning, where the evangelists commenced their second week's mission, were to be seen nearly 2,000 men and women who have experienced the hardening effects of sin, and the keen frosts of pinch and privation. The free breakfast which was served, and which has been served week by week for nearly twenty-nine years, is provided for those in need. Whether for the deserving is another matter. Christ did not die for the deserving. He died to meet the world's need, and the free breakfast is an exemplification of the Gospel principle. It was a motley crowd that filled the building. The friendless and the fallen were there in abundance. Women without virtue, and men without character, including the professional tramp, the incorrigible loafer, and the man out of work but who is never in it, were all there. Yet among the crowd there were some genuine representatives of honest poverty and real unavoidable distress, accounted for by the present trying times.

Mr. Alexander sang, and made the huge unwashed crowd sing again and again, until the grime that covered the faces of many was wreathed with smiles, "The Best Friend to have is Jesus"; and Dr. Torrey followed with a short precious word as to God's love for every man and Christ's power to save every man. All were afterwards asked to stand up who would take Christ, and many did. The preacher was emphatic and clear in his appeal for acceptance of Christ. He did not ask them to stand up to be prayed for, but to stand up if they were willing to receive Christ. Between forty and fifty men and women, the proportion of the sexes being about equal, were afterwards personally dealt with.

The afternoon meeting, announced for 2.30, furnished a rebuke to the unbelief of some, who, while exceedingly glad to see the great congregation, had doubted whether 4,000 women could be got together to fill St. Andrew's Hall at that hour. It was such a muster of the sisterhood as some present, long engaged in evangelistic work, had never seen before. The service was begun fifteen minutes before the advertised time, and the fruit of it was, so far, seen in the names of between forty and fifty persons being taken down as new converts.

Seven o'clock at night found the great hall again packed to its very utmost capacity, this time with a mass gathering of men, not a woman to be seen anywhere. The address that Dr. Torrey gave on "Fools make a mock at sin" was one that did not come within the region of social apologetics. He aimed at getting behind the countenance and getting into the conscience, and unless the consciences of his hearers were of the caoutchouc kind, which resume their usual shape when the immediate pressure is withdrawn, many must have carried away bruises and indents that will need repairing. As it was a large number of men came to the front in response to his appeal for decision for Christ.

In the three meetings for the day ten thousand separate persons had been addressed, as not more than could be counted on one's fingers had been present at more than one meeting, and fully one hundred souls had been personally dealt with. It was a day of good cheer, and the issues are with Him who bears the nail-prints of the Cross.

Other Evangelists at Work.

Rev. F. C. Spurr in Edinburgh,

ALTHOUGH Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander were only four weeks in Edinburgh, a great blank would have been felt in the city had steps not been taken to carry on the work. Furthermore it was felt that, with such an impression abroad, it would have been a calamity to end the mission with the departure of the two evangelists. The committee have been very fortunate in securing the services of Rev. F. C. Spurr, who is to continue the mission till March 22. Mr. Spurr had a long standing engagement to conduct a mission under the auspices of the Baptist churches of Edinburgh and Leith; and, with much cordiality on both sides, the arrangement was easily brought about by which Mr. Spurr was transferred to the Torrey-Alexander Mission.

There is only one Dr. Torrey, and perhaps still more is it the case that there is only one Mr. Alexander, while the two together make a unique combination. It would be too much to expect any one man to step in and exactly fill their place. Still, the Committee have every reason to be gratified with their decision to go on, and especially at having secured Mr. Spurr as missioner.

Besides the disadvantage of having to follow such outstanding evangelists, there have been other difficulties to contend with, especially during the first week. The work of the past month has taxed the energies and the time of the workers to the full. Many have, therefore, taken the opportunity of a breathing space; others have business and other engagements that cannot lie over any longer; while some of the churches that had suspended some of their organizations during February, could not do so again for March. Then, the weather has been of an exceptionally stormy character.

IN THE EMPIRE THEATRE.

In spite of all these drawbacks the gatherings have been successful, and the blessing has been continuous. The first meeting of this second stage of the work was one for women only, in the Empire Palace Theatre, on Sunday afternoon. Every seat was occupied, there being at least 3,000 women in the building. Mr. Spurr chose as his theme the three parables in Luke xv., or, as he put it, "one picture but in three parallels." Every woman had to find her place in the picture. She was lost like the sheep, thoughtlessly, stupidly; or like the coin, passively; or like the son, wilfully. The address was one of much power, and not a few women responded to the invitation to indicate, by uplifted hand, their willingness to trust the Saviour. At seven o'clock the theatre was crowded with men only. There must have been nearly 4,000 present. Professor A. R. Simpson, M.D., chairman of committee, presided. The text was Ezekiel xviii. 4. "All souls are Mine;" and the address was a very telling enforcement of the claims of God. At the close of the address Mr. Spurr asked all those who gave intellectual assent to what he had said to stand. The vast audience rose en masse. After they were again seated the preacher asked all those who would, for the first time, give personal and heart-committal to what they had intellectually approved to stand, and a number of men in various parts of the building at once responded by standing. The general audience having been dismissed, those who had stood and others who were anxious were dealt with personally. It was late before the last of the inquirers left, and when the first day of the work under the new conditions was fully over, there was abundant cause for joy and thankfulness.

THE AFTERNOON MEETINGS.

The climatic conditions on Monday were gloomy in the extreme, but the bright and hopeful spirit of the evangelist did much to counteract the depression caused by the weather. The afternoon meetings have been most stimulating and helpful for Christians, and the attendance has steadily gone up. The same is true of the evening meetings, with the exception of Friday, when the weather accounted for the slight falling off. The afternoon subjects have been:—Monday: "The joy of being God's possession"; Tuesday: "God's jealousy for the love of His people"; Wednesday: "Limiting God's power"; Thursday: "The filling of the Holy Spirit"; Friday: "The story of the Cardiff revival in 1889"—a tale of thrilling interest and fraught with many valuable lessons for the church.

By his afternoon addresses Mr. Spurr has proved himself an able expositor and teacher as well as an evangelist; and there has been abundant testimony to the help derived from these addresses. As to the evening meetings the Synod Hall has not yet been quite full, although the audiences must have numbered 1,500 or 1,600 people. The word has been with power, and the number that have professed to find peace in believing have been very encouraging for the work of the next fortnight. The Torrey-Alexander Choir, under the enthusiastic leadership of Mr. Henry D. Curr, continues to lead the praise, while solos have been very effectively rendered by Miss Darling and others. The prospect for next week is very hopeful. The theatre services are to be continued, while the Synod Hall is to be the home of the Mission for afternoon and evening on weekdays.

Canon Atherton at Clifton.

The mission recently conducted by Rev. Canon Atherton at Clifton was a season of earnest effort on the part of the preacher and responsiveness among his many hearers.

In asking the congregation at the beginning to send in to him petitions which they desired to be used in the intercession services, the Canon urged them not to wait till the mission was half over, but to send them in at once; and his exhortation was promptly obeyed, for very many such requests were received. There were large congregations throughout the first Lord's Day both at the morning and evening services in the church, and in the afternoon in the lecture hall. The afternoon services were evidently much appreciated. This was especially the case when the address was on difficulties in the intellectual and spiritual life.

On the first Sunday morning the preacher drew a masterly contrast between the fruits of civilization and the Spirit of God. The present century, like that which went before it, is one of advance. Yet, notwithstanding, it is one appalling pessimism. Literature and daily life are full of sighs. This is so because civilization does not bring peace of mind. "No!" said he; "peace of mind and joy are brought into human life only by the Spirit of God."

On the second Lord's Day—morning and evening—the missioner preached two eloquent and stirring sermons to packed congregations. He pictured for his hearers the responsibilities of earnestness in "pursuit," and showed that the thing pursued is seldom reached except by suffering; and when it is Christ-like character—never. It must ever be so, for such a goal is arrived at only by the way of the Cross. In telling phrases and graphic sketches Canon Atherton also discoursed on the height of character attained by, and the "whence" of the motive power of, the saints of God. He urged those present to read the lives of the men and women of the Bible; when they do not inspire they will warn and instruct.

Addresses to men only were given by Canon Atherton, while Mrs. Atherton also spoke helpfully to women. On the final day all the services were well attended, and the congregations were exhorted to make their lives a daily song of soul-uplifting praise for God's mercy and grace. During the last days of these special services about 400 cards of Christian resolve were given to those who desired them, in thankful remembrance of the mission.

The Weaver Brothers at Stockton-on-Tees.

Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver have just paid a visit to Bowesfield Lane Church, in the Stockton Circuit, of which Rev. J. F. Sherman is the superintendent. This was the fifth mission they have had with Mr. Sherman at various places, all of which have been greatly blessed, so that great expectation was was created in regard to the coming of these devoted mission preachers. The mission was carefully organized, and the arrangements were worked out in detail.

A band of earnest workers visited thoroughly, from house to house, the various districts of the town. Rich and poor, churchgoers and non-churchgoers, all received an invite to the services. Nor was the preparation of the church overlooked, as meetings full of spiritual power were held prior to the starting of the mission, so that the church was ready from the outset. On the first Sunday the congregations were large at all the services; in fact, crowded at the evening service, and also every evening of the mission. On the second Sunday hundreds were unable to obtain admission. In the afternoon a men's meeting was held, when the church was filled with "outsiders." The workers had visited the public-houses on the Saturday night, so the preachers had the right kind of congregation, many being present who had not been in a place of worship for years. A hundred and fifty-one names were taken in the inquiry-room. A remarkable feature of the mission was that a large number of seekers were among the most promising young men and women of the church. Quite a number of day school teachers were among those who decided for Christ. From first to last it was a glorious mission, the three ministers, the officials, and members working most heartily and harmoniously. J. F. S.

Interesting Times at Prestonpans.

A three-weeks' mission, conducted by Mr. Hugh Morris, under the auspices of the Haddingtonshire Evangelistic Association, in the Town Hall in Prestonpans, has been signally owned of God, and enriched with many tokens of saving power. Nearly two hundred passed through the inquiry room in the course of the mission, and as the town is a comparatively small one, the numbers are all the more cheering. The provost, Dr. McEwan, has taken a deep interest in the work throughout, and though the evangelist has gone, the provost is having the meetings carried on for a week longer, the services of Rev. Mr. Macfarlane, Juniper Green U.F. Church, having been obtained for extending the services. Joy has been brought into many a home, and gladness into many a heart, through the streams of grace that have been flowing. Fishing and mining are the chief industries of the town and neighbourhood. Some of the men who work with the net have been caught in the Gospel net; and others, whose business it is to go down the pit and dig coal, have been themselves dug out of the mire, brought up out of the horrible pit, and had their feet planted on the rock. The "Boy Preacher" at Leeds.

Master C. Hanbury Cooke, better known as "Jack" Cooke, the boy preacher, concluded his three week's mission at the Coliseum, Leeds, on Sunday week. His work in Leeds has been phenomenal, and it was not surprising to find the three services held in the Coliseum on the final Sunday crowded with enthusiastic audiences. At night hundreds of people were unable to gain admittance.

During his brief stay at Leeds, thirty services have been held, and it is computed that about 100,000 people have listened to the discourses; the week-night services being as largely attended as the Sundays. The spiritual results of the mission are very gratifying, about 1,200 persons having professed conversion. The Leeds mission has been the most effective that he has held in this country. On Sunday last Master Cooke started a three week's mission in St. George's Hall, Bradford, and we pray that a corresponding blessing may be given in the sister city.

F. W. Walker.

Mr. Chas. Cook at Gibraltar.

Owing to a rough sea which prevented our brother, Mr. Chas. Cook, crossing over to Tangier, we had the privilege of his stay on the Rock for a few days last week, during which time meetings were held in various parts of the garrison, and the Gospel of God's grace was faithfully preached to hungry souls, not a few of whom have, we believe, become new creatures in Christ Jesus—soldiers, sailors, and civilians. On his return more meetings have been held and more souls, we believe, led to Christ. Some of us remember our brother's visit to the Rock sixteen years ago, and we believe some will remember with gratitude to God his present visit, not sixteen years hence, but throughout eternity.

Mr. J. Westwood's Missions.

In Ashbourne Primitive Methodist Circuit Mr. J. Westwood, of Cleethorpes, has conducted a month's evangelistic services with much blessing to believers who were led to reconsecrate themselves to the Lord. Several adults and children professed conversion, and a good work appears to have been done among the young people. His visit was much appreciated by those who were in sympathy with the promotion of spiritual life. W. R.

Special services have also been conducted in the Greetham and Langham Primitive Methodist Chapels (Oakham circuit) by Mr. Westwood The services were well attended, and characterized by much spiritual power. Several have decided for Christ as the result of the missions.

Cox Green Mills, near Bolton.

Mr. Henry Collins, of the Evangelization Society, concluded, on last Sabbath evening, a fifteen days' mission at Cox Green Mills, near Bolton. There have been very good meetings throughout, many having attended who came from a considerable distance, without undue excitement or pressure. Many were led to come over on the Lord's side. His expositions of the Gospel of Christ were simple and direct. Men were exhorted to forsake sin and lead the new life in Christ Jesus. As a visitor to the sick, the services of Mr. Collins have been found very acceptable during his stay in this locality, and many have been exhorted and comforted, having given their souls into the keeping of the Lord. John Naughten.

Wesleyan Mission at Shipley.

In the old (Wesleyan) Providence Chapel at Shipley, Yorks, the recent evangelistic mission conducted by Rev. Thomas Waugh was most effective. The crowd came, interest was aroused, and prayer was answered. The chapel was filled in every available corner—pews, aisles, and pulpit. The power of the Highest was on the preacher and the hearers. Scenes of indescribable joy were seen as husbands and wives discovered that they had been seeking, and had found, the Saviour, at the same time. W.

Hilda's Home-Call.

THIS is "Home Mission" week, but our friend, "K. H.," who usually contributes such interesting articles under that heading, has been laid up with cold, and unable to write. Therefore I am giving you a talk from a friend who has addressed you several times before. She is very fond of young people, and they of her; and what she writes is always well worth reading. Uncle Tom.

I have noticed that "Uncle Tom" tells you mostly about living children, and not often about those who die. And this is doubtless because he does not want you to think that "good children always die young"! Besides, we need Christ for life as well as death. But I have asked him to let me tell you this week about a dear little girl who was called home only recently—one you would have loved if you had known her.

Never a robust child, little Hilda had early known the meaning of pain and weakness; but as she grew bigger she seemed stronger, and was so bright and lively that one gradually grew almost to credit her oft-repeated assurance that she was "quite well now." How eagerly the little feet bore her light, fairy-like figure across the fields to school, and how merry was the laughter with which she joined in all the fun at home and with her young companions.

On Sundays, too, the weather must be bad indeed if Hilda's seat were empty, and one felt a sense of real loss if her sweet little face were absent from the Bible-class where she sat so quietly and happily, listening quite as intently as the "grown-ups" to all that was said, and joining always in the hymns and in the Scripture-reading.

Thus she had passed her eleventh birthday before the real illness set in. After that time she drooped, gradually at first, and then more rapidly, until it became quite evident that God was about to call her to Himself. We could all see it, everybody but the dear little one herself, who still talked daily of the time when she would be well again, and resume her old way of life, school, play, &c. For Hilda was by no means an unnatural child; she loved life, and fun, and frolic, and she loved study too. The dainty little fingers were busy fingers, as well as clever, winning prizes for needlework, even at ten years of age.

This will show you that Hilda's love for Jesus did not make her dull and unchildlike. Even to the very last the family dolls, including one sent her last Christmas from the Sunday-school tree, sat in a row opposite the bed of suffering; and her large eyes sometimes turned to those four mute companions with interest and pleasure, as well as to the sweet spring blossoms on the table at her side.

Her love for Jesus was always so sweet and real; even when the pain was very severe the thought of Jesus kept her happy. And I cannot think of any brighter room than that in which the sick child cheerfully wasted away.

"I am so happy I do not know whatever to do," she said one night to her mother. "To think there is such a One as Jesus!" "I feel I am like that!" she said at another time when a kind friend had sent her a picture of the Good Shepherd, with a lamb in His bosom. And again she would tell of the beautiful dream she had had. "The angels seemed to stand all round my bed, mother, and it seemed as if they touched me." Another time, when unable to lie still because of the severe pain, she opened her eyes and glanced at a little text-banner hung over her sofa, and which bore the words, "The Lord is my strength." A smile came over the little flushed face, and she said, "It is all right." Sometimes she wished to get better, that she might do something to please Jesus. She was greatly troubled whenever her weakness made the tears come unbidden, fearing her dear ones would think her unhappy.

"I do wish you could make mother understand that I am just as happy when I cry as when I don't cry. It is only because I cannot help it that I cry, not because I am unhappy."

As the bells struck out a merry peal to usher in the New year (1903) she roused her mother to listen, and remarked, "I wonder if it will be my last."

"But you are not anxious about that, Hilda?"

"Oh, no!" and there was the old, clear, happy ring in her voice. She had "loved Jesus a long time," she often told us.

Beautiful was her thought for others. Many a dainty little gift was sent from her sick room, even when the fair curls lay so still upon the pillow that it looked as if she would hardly brighten up again. Almost the last work of the wasted fingers was to begin dressing a doll for a little schoolfellow. Though unable to finish it, a sister was pressed into the service, so that it was ready in time. And her own hands chose and appropriated the photographs and other things she wished her friends to have.

Very painful and very lingering was the end; but never a murmur was heard. "Will it be long?" she asked her kind doctor; "I am so tired." And to her mother, "I hope it will not be long, it is so hard to be patient." Doctor and friends alike thought the end close at hand; but she lingered, even then, for a few days, perfectly happy, and without a fear. "I should like to go to sleep," she said, at last, and she slept—until the Resurrection Morn.

Why have I told you all this? Not only because it is pleasant to write of so sweet and beautiful a blossom, early gathered as she was; but chiefly because I want you all to think about Hilda's Saviour. Is He your Saviour? I hope you will never suffer as this dear child suffered, if that be God's holy will; but if you were ill (and any of us may be), would you have the peace that comes from knowing that your sins are forgiven, and that you are one of Jesus' lambs? You would not like to die without Jesus. Do not live without Him—not even for a day longer.

Uncle Tom.

A Young People's Mission has been held in Ripon by Mr. Newton Jones. On the Sunday afternoon the children from all the Nonconformist Sunday-schools in the city assembled in the Wesleyan Chapel, when Mr. Jones gave a telling address, holding the children's attention from beginning to end. On the following days he held services for them, and was repaid by seeing a large number assembled. Into all Mr. Jones threw himself with great energy and earnestness, and many boys and girls came forward for Christ. The hearts of parents and teachers were greatly cheered, for much prayer had been offered that the mission might be blessed.

Dr. Barnardo says:—"'Dreams and Realities' and 'In School and Playground,' by Mr. G. E. Morgan, M.A., are excellent in tone, entertaining and instructive, while loyal to the authority and teaching of Scripture. They contain a number of addresses of a bright and simple nature, attractive and helpful alike to young and old, and full of Gospel teaching most winningly conveyed." (1s. each. Morgan & Scott.)

Christian Endeavour Topic.

Sunday, March 15.

(Christ's Teaching about Trust (Matt. vi. 19-34).

LET us trust God to care for us! "When will you give up your political work, and see to the affairs of your soul?" asked a Roman Catholic of Dr. Dale on one occasion. "Ah," was the reply, "I gave my heart to Christ years ago, and now I can give myself to His business." That answer can hardly be improved upon, except to add, to the heart, "all other concerns for this world, as well as for the next."

This was the life that the Lord Jesus lived. He would not even make the stones bread; nor eat until His Father bade Him, and sent the angels to minister to Him. He speaks out of His heart when He bids us trust our Father's care.

It is better to trust in God than accumulate wealth (19). The moth and rust destroy, and thieves steal. All earthly goods are perishable and precarious. If we are not exposed to the perils dreaded by Orientals, we have our own. How many have placed their savings with companies, or in mines and shares, to lose every penny; whilst those who have lived to bless others have found God making provision for them, and carrying them even to hoar hairs. At the same time it has always seemed to me right to avail oneself of the great principle of mutual life insurance, whether for death or the provision for old age. I do not, however, judge those who so absolutely trust their Father's care that they make no provision, believing that if they do His work in the world He will provide a Nicodemus and a Joseph to see to their burying.

Trust in God gives clearness of vision. The eye is single, and the whole body is full of light (22). When we are thinking partly of doing God's work in the world, and partly of lining our own nest, we are in the condition of the man whose eyes do not look in the same direction. There is a squint in our inner vision. We are endeavouring to serve two masters. Our judgment is therefore distorted. Who has not often experienced this? You have been endeavouring to ascertain God's will, or form a right judgment about your life, but constantly your perception of duty has been obscured by the thought that, if you decided in a certain direction, you would interfere with your interests in another. Your eye has not been single, and you have been full of darkness. When, however, you feel so absorbed in God's interests that you are indifferent to your own, all becomes clear, and you leave Him to care for all results. "Mind my business," said Queen Elizabeth to one of her ambassadors, "and I will look after yours."

Surely you can trust God for the less, since He has given you the greater (25). He has given you life; surely He will give you life's fuel, else His own prime gift is neutralized and rendered useless. The fact that He has bestowed clothing on all other bodies, and not on man's, seems to prove that He meant to see to that, in other ways, Himself.

Surely creation teaches trust. God does not fail the birds or lilies. He feeds and clothes, though they can do nothing to help themselves. Will He be less careful of those who can look before and after? Let us not think that God is niggardly and stinting in His gifts. "Solomon in all His glory was not arrayed like one of these." He gives fish as well as bread when He feeds the crowds; colours as well as leaves when He clothes the flowers.

Distrust might befit the heathen, but surely children should trust their Father (32). You have been adopted unto His family, and may call Him, "Abba Father." Surely this act of grace shows a special love on his part. Would He have taken such care of the spiritual, and have none for the physical? The ungodly may lose faith, and worry about their maintenance; but a child of God may be sure that though he have to wait for the money until within five minutes of the moment of need, it will be supplied.

C.E. NOTES.

Rev. J. R. Fleming, president of the Christian Endeavour Union of Great Britain and Ireland, has commenced his presidential tour of Metropolitan Christian Endeavour. Meetings have been arranged for him in all parts of London, concluding with the Eighth Annual London C.E. Convention at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on April 10. All the meetings are open to young people whether members of Christian Endeavour societies or not.

The "Juniors' Own," which occupies the morning session of the eighth annual London C.E. Convention at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Good Friday, promises to be a unique gathering. Usually the rally has taken the form of an elaborate display, for which the juniors have prepared for months. A new course is being adopted this year, and the meeting will be of such a character as will prove helpful not only to young Endeavourers, but also to those who work among them, and Sunday-school teachers.

(1) The gift of God's grace through Jesus Christ. (2) Received by faith. (3) Not earned, but proved by works.

Trespasses and Sins.

(1) Trespass, to break through the boundary line of God's law. (2) Sins, acts of the will. Wilfully to step on to the enemy's ground. (3) To walk and talk according to the fashion of his realm (Phil. iii. 18, 19). (4) Obey the prince of that country, imbibe his spirit, and do his bidding.

SIN—separates from God—DEATH.

"Jesus Christ the righteous, and He is the propitiation for our sins," "made nigh by the blood."

HOLINESS—unites to God—LIFE.

Bible Definitions.

Separates from God (Rom. v. 12).

1. Condition out of Christ—spiritual death. Cannot see, speak, sing, work, or even think until John vi. 63.

2. Position in Christ—alive to God.

Died in Him.	Exalted with Him.
Quickened with Him.	Walk in Him.
Raised with Him.	Glorified with Him.

2 Cor. v. 14, vv. 5, 6; Rom. viii. 30.

Whence and how is the great change wrought? From the riches of the mercy of God, and His great love (v. 4) (John iii. 16). By His "unmerited favour" through Christ.

What is my part? To take and make my own through faith. A gift is never earned but accepted, and faith is the gift of God (v. 8).

What for? That Jesus may use me to do the work He wants me to do for Him on earth and now (Phil. ii. 13).

SAVING A TRESPASSER.

A well-known naturalist was recently astonished to find a window of his house broken. A large round hole had been made as though a football had been driven through the glass. On thoroughly searching the room, a hen-pheasant was discovered crouching, and very frightened, between an armchair and the fireplace. On being released it flew a short distance, alighted, ran away strongly, and was then seen no more. The bird, almost killed with terror, is an apt illustration of those who are spiritually dead in trespasses and in sins. The bird, in breaking through the window, had transgressed, and, in going beyond the limit of its freedom, entered into captivity, and almost certain death. The soul by sinning oversteps the boundary of God's law, and is only redeemed from itself, and placed outside of danger, by the salvation of Christ. He alone must save us.

RELIGIOUS GIPSIES.

Some few miles from London, in a district where gipsies congregate, a mission-hall has been recently erected. Some of the gipsies have attended the services, and by the grace of God a number have been led to the Saviour. In one instance, all the members of a family have been converted, and great has been the effect on the general encampment. Those of the godly family have started a Gospel tent for the benefit of their fellow-gipsies; and though the mission is yet in its infancy, there is good reason to believe God will richly honour the movement in the salvation of many of the caravan folk. They who have been worldly, with desires and pleasures centred in the flesh, have been already quickened te newness of life, being made alive unto God through Jesus Christ (v. 5). The grace of God will save us, whatever our social or spiritual standing. Many of us are as gipsies in the religious world. We wander hither and thither, and are ever leading a restless tent-life. His grace will make us settled and calm our troubled souls.

FAITH AND THEIR WORKS.

In 1855 Sir Francis Crossley was on a visit to the United States. One day, when in the neighbourhood of the White Mountains, he was charmed with the scenery, and felt, as he afterwards expressed himself, to be walking with God. "What," said he, "shall I render for all His benefit to me? Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" The answer came in the determination to place the beauties of nature within the reach of all the working-men of Halifax, his native town. Two years later he was able to open the People's Park as he had wished, and in doing so he fulfilled a vow his mother had made many years before. She had said, "If the Lord does bless us at this place, the poor shall taste of it." The Crossleys received the gift of God, not of works, but of grace. Being saved, we should then ask, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Salvation comes first, and then the works follow.

Personalia.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn recently started again for the famine districts of Finland, but was compelled to return home on account of his health.

Dr. Wm. Burt, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Rome, has received a well-merited distinction from the King of Italy, having been invested with the rank of Cavaliere of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus.

Rev. R. J. Campbell, of Brighton, has recognised, in the urgency and unanimity of his invitation to the pastorate of the City Temple, the call of God to that important position. Mr. Campbell's recent addresses at the Thursday services have undoubtedly aroused high hopes, and a wide circle of sympathizers will prayerfully anticipate a continuance of blessing in the historic building so long associated with the name of the late Dr. Parker.

We are glad to learn that there was no foundation for the statement which appeared some time since, under "Requests for Prayer," to the effect that Mr. E. H. Vine, of Exeter, was afflicted with paralysis, and had entirely lost his sight. The continuance and efficiency of Mr. Vine's school have not been interrupted for a day, as during the period of his indisposition he had the assistance of his son (a B.A. of London) and an efficient staff of teachers.

Child-Training.—In the course of a wise and searching article on the training of children in the current number of the Sunday Magazine, Rev. F. B. Meyer addresses words to parents which are of the greatest value. One thing especially emphasized is the necessity of so presenting the claims of Christ's love to the child, that there shall be no waiting until the years of discretion have arrived before a definite acceptance of Christ is proposed. A very vital point is touched here, for it is unquestionably common for many Christian parents to leave their children, under the plea of "waiting until they know what they are doing," to make a choice in youth or maidenhood, This is a terrible mistake. The claims of God upon every human life do not depend upon a person's knowing them. They are absolute. From the very first a child should be taught the "ought" with regard to God, and in after years that "ought" will be completed, by the grace of God, with loyal and voluntary obedience and love.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

MIDDLESBROUGH.

THE campaign of Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones at Middlesbrough has proved the most effective of their tour.

Rev. W. M. Yorwerth, who has taken a leading part in the work, writes :—"Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones have come and gone, but they have left behind them impressions that can never be effaced. It is no exaggeration to say that the mission just concluded has been the most successful and soul-stirring ever held in this town.

"It is a subject of general remark that Dr. Henry has given a higher tone to the temperance question, and he has succeeded in rousing the churches of this town to a sense of their responsibility in this matter. His impassioned oratory, allied with a deep spirituality, are the factors that have contributed to his success here.

"The women's demonstration on Tuesday afternoon was very effective. There were 1,500 present. The midnight procession on Wednesday, headed by three bands, was most successfully carried out. On this occasion a raid was made on the public-houses, and invitations were given to those within to attend the meeting. It was estimated that no fewer than 2,000 persons were present in the Temperance Hall.

"Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones will never forget their 'send off.' Immediately after the lecture on Friday a procession was formed and marshalled, and it started amid a scene of indescribable enthusiasm. When the station was reached, we had to fight a way for Dr. Henry through the dense mass of people. Cheer after cheer was raised, and as the train steamed out the vast throng sang, 'God be with you till we meet again.' Thus ended a mission glorious in its results and rich in its possibilities of further success in the days to come."

Another interesting letter comes from Mr. J. Holmes, treasurer of the mission, who says :—"The visit has had the effect of rousing the town in such a way as it has never known before. Much lasting good has been done. The meetings throughout have been the largest on record here, and a grand total of nearly one thousand pledges was reached. Among special features of the week was the women's meeting, which Dr. Henry described as the largest gathering of the kind that he had addressed in this country; 128 pledges were secured. For the midnight meeting 5,000 tickets of invitation were distributed. Dr. Henry delivered a most impressive address on 'The soul that sinneth it shall die,' and fifty-two pledges were taken. The scene at the close of Friday night's lecture, when the vast audience formed into procession, and, headed by the Salvation Army band, escorted the missioners to the railway station, was unprecedented in the annals of the town. The solos of Mr. Armon Jones added greatly to the success of the mission, many who signed the pledge being first drawn to the meetings to hear the singing." Summing up the results of the mission, the North Eastern Daily Gazette says :—The Temperance Campaign in Middlesbrough, conducted by Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones, has secured a large number of recruits to the ranks of pledged abstainers. It has done much more than that, however. It has brought into evidence a much stronger sympathy with the work of social reform than was in many quarters supposed to exist. It has given to the temperance party a sense of power much greater than they have hitherto felt. With this assurance of influence and of united purpose will doubtless be developed a keener sense of responsibility for the welfare of the town and of the community.

DUNDEE.

A campaign was commenced in Dundee on Saturday last with a children's gathering in the Kinnaird Hall. There was a large attendance, and Mr. C. W. Scrimgeour presided. On the Sabbath Dr. Henry preached in Bell Street U.F. Church, and in the afternoon addressed a crowded assembly of young men in the Y.M.C.A. Hall. Dr. Henry took for his subject "The Slaughter of Young Men," and spoke strongly on the demoralization that is caused by the drinking habits of the youth of the country. At both these gatherings Mr. Jones sang solos, which were highly appreciated.

At night the Kinnaird Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, and many were unable to gain admission. Councillor Henderson presided and was supported by many ministers and temperance workers of the city. Dr. Henry's address deeply stirred the hearts of his hearers. The Dundee Post says : "In Dr. Henry's every movement, energy and earnestness are strikingly apparent. He is rousing and persuasive by turns." The mission continues each evening until Friday at the Kinnaird Hall. As the Dundee Telegraph says : "Dr. Henry has already rendered splendid services to the temperance cause, and is evidently bent upon greater achievements."

To Many Friends.

THIS first week in March has been a very memorable one to me, on account of my experiences in Berlin, where night after night the great Hall of the Y.M.C.A., holding at least 1,000 people, has been overcrowded, the aisles also being filled with people. At the afternoon Bible-Hours nearly all the seats have been occupied. And when it is remembered that every sentence has required to be translated by my dear friend, Count Bernstorff, it shows how great the hunger is for help about the deeper things of Christian experience.

Two crowded meetings for men on Sunday, a Bible-reading at the residence of the Minister of War, one at Count Bernstorff's residence, a profoundly interesting conference with twenty-five Free Church ministers, with one or two smaller gatherings, have kept me very busy. But every opportunity I have enjoyed of observing the signs of the times confirms the impression—which, I think, is pretty general—that Germany, and especially Berlin, is on the eve of a general religious revival. The churches are becoming crowded. One of the Free Church ministers told me that he received one hundred into his church last year, and there is a general inquiry for meetings like those I have been holding.

This is a good sign for England. It shows that man cannot live long without God. If there is an ebb to-day, there will be high-tide all round the coast to-morrow.

The Emperor's letter is still the subject of widespread discussion. Each side claims him as an ally, and dwells on the admissions which favour its views. It is certainly a very remarkable document, and I do not think its true significance has been apprehended by our religious Press. Certainly there is no Sovereign living who could have given such a remarkable résumé of the present position of the controversy about the Bible.

I now go to Breslau and then to Frankfort for a week each. Mrs. Meyer joins me at the latter place. Please do not forget to pray for me. F. B. Meyer.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey has, as many of our readers know, been suffering for some months with nervous breakdown. We learn from his friends that, although still in a weak state of health, they have good hope of his ultimate recovery. We are sure his many friends in this country will remember earnestly in prayer this devoted servant of God and his anxious family.

"Chain-Letter" Mishap.—Will friends who have helped me with the chain-letter in aid of Dr. Barnardo's Home, and who receive copies numbered higher than fifty to return them to me, without making or sending out other copies, as that number ends the chain. The letters are now so much altered, especially where figures occur, that I am having great difficulty in bringing the scheme to a termination. I have so far collected about £5,100.

Kenilworth. Gertrude Robertson.

Police Seaside Home.

AT the invitation of Lilla Countess of Chichester and the committee of the Convalescent Police Seaside Home, the annual meeting was held at the Home, Hove, Brighton, on Saturday, February 28. Mr. J. Heywood Johnstone, M.P., presided, and short addresses were given by Rev. Hubert Brooke, Sir Algernon Coote, Bart., the Hon. C. G. Legge, H.M. Inspector of Police and Constabulary, Dr. A. T. Schofield, Divisional Surgeon, and Inspector Eveson. Letters expressing regret at their inability to be present were received from Sir Howard Vincent, Sir Charles Warren, Sir Robert Anderson, Captain Nott-Bower, Commissioner of the City Police, Major W. E. Gilbert, Sir Albert de Rutzen, and Mr. Horace Smith, police court magistrates; the Chief Constables of Beds, Berks, Bucks, Kent, East and West Sussex, Surrey, and Yorks, Dr. MacKellar, Chief Surgeon of the Metropolitan Police, and many others.

The report for 1902 was read by Colonel Philips, chairman of Committee, and showed that during the year 664 patients have been received—a larger number than in any previous year except that known as the "Influenza Year." Of this number 570 were attached to the Metropolitan Police Force, eight to the City of London, and the remainder to the police and constabulary forces of various counties of England.

An earnest appeal was made to those present to help in clearing off a deficit of nearly £200 on the year's accounts. During the meeting selections were sung by some of the children from the Provincial Police Orphanage, Redhill.

Welsh Notes.

In view of the urgent calls to open new mission centres as well as the great need for new halls in several centres, together with the heavy debt still remaining on some of the older halls, the Committee of the Welsh Forward Movement has resolved, subject to the sanction of the General Assembly, to hold a week of self-denial in June. A similar effort in 1901 proved markedly successful, and it is hoped that the next self-denial week will be of even greater benefit, both financially and spiritually, to the movement.

A few weeks ago reference was made in these columns to the conference of Christian workers held at Carnarvon. The conference had for its object the discussion of the best means to remedy the deplorable moral condition of the town and district on "pay-nights." The conference appointed a strong and influential committee to consider the question. After serious consideration the committee agreed in attributing the evil to—(1) Home influence and surroundings; (2) The inconsistencies of professors and leaders of religion; (3) The weakening of the sense of personal responsibility for the evil of sin. The remedies suggested are :—(1) Stricter rule and supervision over young people on the part of parents; (2) To watch more closely the movements of young people from the hours of seven to ten in the evening; (3) To set apart best and most commodious room in the house for the service of the younger members of the family and household in order to encourage them to form habits of reading and study; (4) To teach lessons of thrift and economy in early life.

Cambridge Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE Inter-Collegiate Christian Union has been having a good term, and amongst its speakers have been the Bishop of Durham, Sir Robert Anderson, Rev. Cyril Bardsley, and Rev. J. Theodore Woods.

At the commencement of this term some members of the university started a series of magic-lantern services for boys on Sunday evenings. These have been most successful, large numbers of boys coming weekly and hearing the blessed Gospel. The boys are mostly of that age when it is most difficult to keep them in Sunday-school or Bible class.

There is about to be a general mission throughout Cambridge, for which the Lord's people are asked to pray very earnestly. Two or three mission churches have already had special services and meetings, but the mission proper will commence (D.V.) on Sunday next at Christ Church, with Canon Aitken as missioner. Between that and Easter some fourteen or fifteen parishes will hold missions.

Mr. R. S. Bradbrook at Althorpe.

The fortnight's mission just concluded at Althorpe, Doncaster, proved blessedly fruitful. Promising young men have yielded themselves to Christ during the services, and are likely, under God, to be a permanent blessing to the Church. Mr. Bradbrook's talks to the children were singularly happy, and his solo singing was specially helpful. During the afternoons Bible readings and meetings for Christians were held, and were a source of encouragement to the preacher, and also a means of blessing to the hearers. Some who came long distances from the neighbouring town and villages did so at considerable inconvenience owing to the dark nights and inclement weather, but nothing seemed to stop them; such was their desire to be present that some even ventured across the Trent in a small boat.

Victoria Hall, Larkhall, Bath.

Following a fortnight's mission at Twerton, a western suburb of Bath, Mr. Ernest Bailey conducted a ten days' mission in the above hall, situate at the extreme east of the city, and in a populous, industrial neighbourhood. It was a time of large spiritual blessing, when definite decisions were made by those who had long been hovering near the Kingdom, but till now remained outside. The congregations were purely working-class people, and the missioner gained a firm hold upon them by his earnestness and manner of presenting Divine truth. The closing meeting on the Sunday night was full of spiritual power; the Holy Spirit did not fail to fulfil all the promise of His presence and blessing, and the use He made of the preacher's last message, "Prepare to meet thy God," was clearly manifested. We shall resume the ordinary work of appeal, instruction, and effort in the name and cause of the Lord Jesus Christ (for which this mission hall was erected five years ago) with greater earnestness and enthusiasm.

James Hewitt.

Looe, Cornwall.

Rev. D. M. Cameron, of Union Tabernacle, S.W., has been holding services in the Wesleyan Church, Looe. From the first service, at which many Christians were led to give themselves more fully up to be used and guided by the Holy Spirit, an earnest desire and expectation laid hold of the Church, and at almost every meeting definite blessing resulted.

A gracious influence was manifested and blessing received by a large number of the senior scholars of the Sunday-school. One of the teachers had the joy of leading four young people to Christ at one time.

In some cases persons who after being dealt with left the meeting without deciding came back at the first opportunity with the set determination at all costs to give themselves to Christ. "Saved to Serve" was the keynote of Mr. Cameron's discourses, and a very pleasing feature was that on two occasions, when the missionary conducted services in the neighbouring town of Polperro, many of the young converts went with him to witness for their Lord. The engine-driver referred to last week was among the first to do us, and we believe this testimony was not without effect. The mission, too, has had a true spirit of revival that, we believe, has spread to neighbouring churches, and we think the end is not yet. H. H. H.

Abernethy U.F. Presbytery.

A gracious movement is in progress at Advie, in Abernethy Presbytery, the like of which, some old Christians declare, has not been seen in the district for over forty years. The breakdown came on the Thursday night during the first week of the mission, and since then the tide of blessing has rolled on. As the news of God's working by His Spirit has gone around the country side, a cry has been raised from different parts for special services.

On one night over twenty young men and women stood up confessing their desire to be saved, and on another night about thirty young men stood up. A profound and very deep impression was made on all present as the young men got up one after another. The truths of the Gospel adapt themselves to human need, and ever carry with them the comfort and healing that sin-stricken hearts require.

Mr. Samuel McKenzie is the preacher, and his labours in the district are likely to last for some time.

J. C.

Barnsbury Chapel, N.

Mr. Leonard Weaver's mission at Barnsbury Chapel, N., is being blessed by God to very many precious souls; and there are evidences that at other places of worship in Islington a fervent desire is being awakened for more aggressive work. During the past week there have been associated with Mr. Weaver in the various services Mr. J. Bennett Anderson, Mr. Collard, and Mr. Webber (the deaf and dumb evangelist), all of whose messages have been helpful to large congregations, while the aid of the North London Evangelists' Choir and the Business Men's Choir have been much appreciated. All the services are being increasingly attended, and last Lord's Day evening the chapel was packed with attentive and earnest listeners. Mr. L. Weaver's Gospel message was from the words, "Harden not your hearts"; and a touching reference was made to the death of Mr. A. Garstin, jun. (who was to have given an address at the chapel last Thursday evening), as an instance of the uncertainty of human life. There were many decisions for Christ. J. H.

As a result of the mission held in H.M. Prison, Canterbury, by Mr. Arthur Hanson, of the Church Army, there were several decisions for Christ.

A ten-days' mission held by Mr. F. H. Taylor in the Congregational Chapel, Cranemoor, Hants, was found most helpful, and deepened in interest until its close on February 25. An immediate result was that a number of young people and adults gave themselves to the Lord. G. B.

The ten-days' mission of Mr. F. H. Taylor in the Congregational Chapel at Cranemoor, Hants, was found most helpful and deepened in interest, until its close on February 25. An immediate result may be stated, as a number of young folks and adults gave themselves publicly to the Lord. G. B.

A united evangelistic mission was held by Mr. Henry Thorne in the Methodist New Connexion and Presbyterian Churches of Prestatyn, N. Wales, from February 20 to 24. Mr. Thorne's sermons and Bible readings were greatly enjoyed by those who attended the meetings, and it is believed that much permanent good will result from his visit.

Mr. J. S. Brunning has conducted services at Hoddesdon, speaking also on other topics. Pastor C. H. Lester writes: "Mr. Brunning has been for many years an earnest and attractive preacher of the Gospel. That the people are glad to hear him was attested by increasing audiences at the Baptist Church, where he recently preached for four Sundays, with attendant blessing. Mr. Brunning has also taken services with much acceptance at Thetford.

Mr. A. Y. McGregor has just closed a fortnight's mission in the Baptist Chapel, Lower Largo, Fifeshire, kindly granted for the occasion. Souls have been gathered into the fold and God's people have been encouraged to go forward with greater zeal to win souls for the Master. Mr. McGregor visited us a year ago. The young people then gathered in cheered us all with their bright testimonies to God's keeping power, and also by their pleading in prayer for the present mission. Ph. J. Thomson.

Evangelistic services were held recently at the Baptist Chapel, Caerleon. They were organized by Mr. Edgar Baker, and Rev. A. T. Jones, of Newport, was the missioner. The efforts were richly blessed; from thirty-five to forty persons declared themselves "on the Lord's side." All the services were well attended, and full of spiritual fervour. The members of the Church, also, have been refreshed and quickened, and the last evening of the mission was spent in thanksgiving to God for the "showers of blessing" which had fallen.

D. Bevan Jones, Pastor.

Mr. William Bilton has concluded a three-weeks' mission in the Primitive Methodist Church, Willington, Durham. Truly the Lord was with us! The inclement weather did not prevent the people gathering to every service in goodly numbers. Believers belonging to the other churches in the town have helped to swell the interest with their presence and activity in each meeting. Mr. Bilton is a very extensive visitor, and distributes Gospel literature, thus coming into close contact with the people. Over seventy men and women (besides many children from the Sunday-school) have come out on the Lord's side. G. F.

A most encouraging mission has been held at the Baptist Chapel, Lordship Lane, East Dulwich, by Mr. A. Jennings. Night by night hundreds gathered to listen to the searching addresses of Mr. Jennings, and the touching Gospel solos of Madame Annie Ryall. Although the mission was intended for children and young people, yet the congregations have included a good number of those of riper years. It is, perhaps, too early yet to speak definitely as to the numbers who have been brought to decision, but more than fifty have been dealt with at the after service as inquirers, and names are still being sent in. To God be the glory! E. A. Tydeman (Pastor).

In the recent Free Church Council mission at Wallsend, Rev. J. Tolefree Parr has been the missioner, and the services have been held in the Wesleyan Church. Since Mr. Parr's departure united meetings have been conducted in the other churches by local ministers. The campaign has been in every way effective. One hundred and forty-five persons passed through the inquiry-rooms, and sixty-nine pledges were taken. The distinctive feature has been that, while it was of course thoroughly evangelistic, the ethical side was strongly emphasized. Mr. Parr denounced drinking and gambling in his special meetings with no uncertain force, and the attendance at the temperance lecture and the mass meeting for men was testimony that the mission reached those who do not usually attend religious gatherings.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Requests for Prayer.

For two women, very worldly, in great distress of mind and body, that they may be converted.

For much blessing and spiritual power at the Ipswich monthly meeting, March 19. Speaker, Rev. J. J. Luce.

For blessing and conversions in a young men's Bible class at Boscombe, on Sunday afternoon, 15th inst.

Captain Dawson asks earnest prayer for a series of drawing-room addresses, to commence Tuesday, March 17, at Tunbridge Wells.

For a mission at the "Edinburgh Castle" (Dr. Bardardo's), Limehouse, E., by Rev. John McNeill, commencing Lord's Day, March 15.

For a fifteen days' mission to railway men, March 15 to 29, in the De Grey Rooms, York, conducted by Mr. T. Goudie, of the Evangelization Society.

Mrs. Dunn, of Moss Grove Mission Room, Kingswinford, asks prayer on behalf of her daughter, Marion, that God will heal her, and restore her to her home and dear ones, there to glorify His Name.

For blessing on Gospel services being conducted by Mrs. J. H. Roberts, of the Evangelization Society, in the Mission Room, Haselbury, Plucknett, that sinners may be saved, and the Lord's people roused and edified.

Praise.

For blessing vouchsafed at the Conference at "The Hillyers," Littlehampton.

A Progressive Mission.

THE last few years have proved how inadequately the agencies growing up and developing in connection with the Shankill Road Mission, Belfast, could be fostered thoroughly by one who was still the pastor of a large congregation. The arrangement that set apart Rev. Henry Montgomery to superintend the work has been fully justified. Since resigning the pastorate of Albert Street Church, he has been enabled to devote his entire time and energy to the Mission, and his ministry has tended to both consolidate and extend its varied movements.

In view of the disquieting fact that in Belfast, as in other large cities, there are thousands who absent themselves from places of worship, much effort is directed to reaching those who are not touched by the ordinary operations of the churches. Much importance is therefore attached to the open-air campaigns. From early spring until late autumn the Gospel is preached to crowds of men and women who could not be persuaded to attend a church or chapel. The various services indoors have been attractive and interesting. An absence of formality in the gatherings commends them to the public, and the large auditorium is invariably filled on Sabbath evenings. Prominent among the Sabbath engagements is the Sunday-school, the afternoon attendance of which has now risen to 500, a good proportion of these being adult scholars.

In the course of the annual report, just issued, mention is made of the fight that continues to be waged against the drink fiend. "We find the drink the determined foe of human happiness, the blight upon many an otherwise promising life. Almost every night in the year poor victims come to our office to sign the pledge, and sometimes a considerable number of those present at the open-air meetings, and afterwards drawn indoors, are under the influence of drink."

The consignments of pale-faced children that are taken to seaside Homes of rest form a feature of the summer endeavours; while the Dorcas and clothing branch is in active operation all the year round. Nothing, perhaps, has encouraged the workers more than the growth of the night school. Some 120 girls from fourteen to eighteen years of age assemble regularly to learn knitting, sewing, &c., and the results have brought cheer and pleasure to the hearts of teachers and helpers. Friends both in England and in Ireland will welcome the annual report (which may be had from Mr. Montgomery, Upper Crescent, Belfast). The note with which it closes is one of thanksgiving. "The tasks associated with an undertaking of this kind are neither few nor easy, but they have all been happy tasks because of the kindness of our friends, and the clear conviction that the harder and not the easier way has been the path of duty, and because it has pleased God to smile upon and bless our enterprise."

The After-Care Association for poor persons discharged recovered from asylums for the insane held its annual meeting on March 4 at 130, Harley Street, W. (by kind permission of Sir William and Lady Church). Sir William Church (President of the Royal College of Physicians) himself presided. The speakers included Drs. G. H. Savage, S. C. Shaw, R. Jones, H. Rayher, and S. Coupland, Mr. J. H. Tennant, M.P., and Rev. E. Grose Hodge. The report showed an increase of cases assisted during 1902.

Roman Catholic Ambassadors.—The Executive Committee of the Protestant Reformation Society have addressed a memorandum to the Secretary and Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and the Prime Minister, calling the attention of the Government to the remarkable increase in the number of Roman Catholics appointed by the Foreign Office to conduct British affairs abroad. It is pointed out that, under the subtle influence now dominating the Foreign Office, the present British Ambassadors at such important posts as Constantinople, Vienna, Lisbon, and The Hague, are all Roman Catholics. Protestants are justly alarmed at the present Romanizing of the English Foreign Diplomatic Service, as it cannot be otherwise than detrimental to the nation's best interests, and prejudicial to the civil and religious liberty of our empire.

The Churches.

Church of England.

For many years past the committee of the Lord's Day Observance Society have suggested that the clergy of London and other large towns should preach, on the Sunday after Easter, sermons on the subject of Sunday Observance. Last year, thanks in great measure to the publicity kindly given by the Press to this invitation, a most encouraging response was secured. The committee propose this year to extend their appeal to the whole of the beneficed clergy.

At St. Michael's, Cornhill, Sir W. Mackworth Young, formerly Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, delivered the first of a series of Wednesday mid-day addresses on Foreign Missions. He spoke, he said, from nearly forty years' experience in the Indian Civil Service. The last century has seen a great change in the feeling of Englishmen towards missions. As a business man, speaking to business men, he was prepared to say that the work done by missionary agencies in India exceeds in importance all the work that has been done by the Indian Government since its commencement.

Congregational.

Rev. John G. Binney, late of Park Chapel, Camden Town, has been recognised as pastor of the Tower Street Congregational Church, West Hartlepool. The meeting was very largely attended, and fully representative of the Free Churches of the town and neighbourhood.

Quite a number of applications for help from various Colonies had to be declined by the directors of the Colonial Missionary Society at their meeting last week, owing to lack of funds, and in view of an expected deficiency at the close of the financial year. Encouraging reports were received of work on the West Australian goldfields.

At the old scholars' re-union at the Sunday-school at Mount View Church, N., Rev. Dr. Rowland pleaded with the young people to seek a greater realization of the presence of Christ, and pointed out that with the growth of years there should also be a growth in grace. Rev. H. Moffat Scott (pastor) presided. A mission to young men and women, conducted by Rev. Fred. H. King, of Stroud Green Baptist Church, N., has just been held in connection with the school, with much profit.

Baptist.

"The Year Book of Brockley Road Chapel, S.E." (Rev. J. Lewis, pastor), records the addition of twenty-one members to the roll during the year. Death and removal made serious inroads upon the fellowship, but good work was done, and the year has opened with encouraging tokens.

At the annual meeting of Vernon Chapel, N., many encouraging reports were read, showing activity and prosperity. Much blessing has been seen as a result of the evangelistic services at the Euston Theatre. Over fifty friends have joined the church since last October, and over thirty have been baptized. There are large prayer meetings on Monday and Saturday evenings.

In connection with the third anniversary of the settlement of Rev. H. R. Cripps, services have been held at the Horley Baptist Church. Rev. A. W. Evans, of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, preached in the afternoon, and the public meeting in the evening was addressed by Revs. J. M. E. Ross (of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Redhill), A. Ives, J. McAuslane, and the pastor.

The thirty-fifth anniversary of the Clay Cross Chapel opening has been celebrated. At a public meeting a very encouraging report was presented by the secretary. It represented all the organizations of the church as in a healthy and vigorous condition. The congregations have so increased as to force upon their serious attention the matter of extension, people often having to be turned away from the Lord's Day evening service for want of accommodation.

The 215th anniversary of the Baptist Church, Lymington, Hants, and the first of the settlement of the pastor (Rev. F. A. Hogbin), was celebrated on Sunday week, the preacher being Rev. A. Corbet, of Bournemouth. On the Wednesday Rev. J. R. Wood, president of the Baptist Union, preached in the afternoon, and addressed a large meeting in the evening. Mr. H. Haydon and Revs. S. W. Heard, E. Edginton, and J. Cliffe gave addresses. Good reports of the year's work were given.

The manual of the church at Ramsden Road, Balham, S.W., shows a membership of 286. The organizations are remarkably complete, reports of nineteen societies being given. The total receipts last year were £1,351 17s. 2d., of which over £111 were for foreign missions, and £123 for other outside agencies. The minister, Rev. T. Greenwood, in addition to the completion of the purchase of a church-house and the building of a schoolroom, at a cost of £3,900, for his own church, has had the burden of the L.B.A. chapel at Mitcham Lane.

Methodist.

Rev. David Roe has removed from 18, Stainsby Road, Poplar, to the Queen Victoria Seamen's Rest, Jeremiah Street, Poplar, E., and, with Mrs. Roe as lady superintendent, is giving constant personal attention to the management of the building.

Those who follow the progress of the Methodist Million Fund will have noticed that for the past few months the advance towards the desired end has been somewhat slow. At the present moment there are outstanding circuit promises amounting in the aggregate to £29,000. This amount is further increased by a considerable number of personal promises made under conditions which are not likely to be fulfilled. The Executive Committee report that the amount received towards the million guineas is £945,701. Between now and the assembling of the May Synods a further "whip" is to be made.

Presbyterian.

The annual meeting of the congregation at Lambeth Church, S.E., has been held, Rev. P. A. Milne presiding. During the year twenty-three new members were received. Evangelistic services for the young were largely attended, and the visit of the Synod evangelist also proved fruitful. Much good work has been accomplished among the poor, and a great deal done to relieve distress.

The Somers Town congregation (Rev. Z. B. Woffendale) reports a year of continued progress. The membership stands at 521, and all the agencies of the church are in a vigorous condition. At the anniversary meeting Dr. Monro Gibson, in a stimulating address, congratulated the church and minister on the noble and self-denying work they have been enabled to carry on, without intermission, for the long period of twenty-eight years, in one of the most difficult parts of the metropolis. At the evening service on the following Sunday thirty-one new members were received into fellowship.

The Presbytery of Liverpool recently decided to hold services in the Assembly Rooms, Albion Street, New Brighton, with the view of establishing a congregation in this growing neighbourhood. The services commenced on Sunday week, when sermons were preached in the morning by Rev. Henry Crombie, and in the evening by Rev. P. M. Kirkland, the attendance on each occasion being most encouraging. The services will be continued during the month by other members of the Presbytery, and afterwards it is expected that a minister-in-charge will be appointed to carry on the work.

Rev. J. M. Wilson has been inducted to the pastorate at Park Church, Highbury. Rev. Dr. Hall, of Islington, who presided, in giving wise counsels on the work of a minister, said: "Decide, like the ancient and inspired hero, not to give to the Lord your God that which cost you nothing. Let your text-book be the whole Bible. If you preach the Word, the core of all your sermons must therefore be Christ and His Cross, and the more surely and lastingly will you benefit and bless them that hear you."

The late very severe gales have called forth much prayer at the meetings in the Welcome Home for Sailors, Canning Town, and on Tuesday, March 3, the friends gathered there spoke and prayed much for "those in peril on the sea." One seafaring man told how God had marvellously delivered him and his craft. Miss Child gave the text for the month—2 Thess. iii. 5. Mr. William Luff and several others spoke and testified of the Lord's upholding power.

Mr. C. H. Coleman has issued the fortieth report or the Dock Labourers' Mission. After referring to the prevalent poverty, Mr. Coleman says: "I rejoice that hundreds of poor widows' hearts have been made glad by God's Holy Word, and with food and clothing. There have been thousands of poor ragged children clothed, fed, and raised to good positions in life, who have become members in churches in East London. They are lights among the wicked and the wretched. There are the poor men standing at the dock gates shivering with cold and hunger, day after day, with no work, no food for wife and children. How glad they are to see me drop a ticket into their hands for a dinner, or a free tea and lodgings, accompanied by a kind word."

As the lease is nearly out of the old Mission Hall at Williamstown, near Dublin, in which united Evangelical services have been carried on for many years, and as the house is to be taken down, several friends interested are anxious that a new place should be provided, that the work, which the Lord has graciously owned and blessed in the past, may be continued. They have arranged to take an old house, suitably situated, which will supply a room adapted for meetings. This house is in bad repair. To obtain a lease, and to make necessary alterations, will cost £295—a lease having been promised on the condition of the premises being put into thoroughly proper order. Communications may be addressed to Mr. R. W. Thompson, Clonskeagh Castle, Dublin.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. JAMES KENDALL, Wesleyan Methodist, of York, at the age of eighty-eight. Mr. Kendall entered the ministry in 1839, and spent most of his active ministerial life of fifty-one years in Yorkshire and Lincolnshire circuits, retiring in 1890, and settling in York.—At Cushendall, Co. Antrim, Rev. CHAS. GILLIS, Presbyterian minister, aged eighty-two years.—At Pottle, Bailieboro', Rev. WM. RYDER, formerly Presbyterian minister at Anncroft Moor, near the Scottish border, and more recently Presbyterian missionary near Tralee, Co. Kerry, aged eighty-three years.—At Belfast, Mr. R. J. M'KINNEY, an elder and devoted Sabbath-school and temperance worker in the Presbyterian Church.—At Limerick, Mr. WM. NELSON, an earnest worker in the Methodist Church, aged seventy-three years. At Clacton-on-Sea, on March 5th, Mr. JOHN DAVIDGE, superintendent of Paddington Hall Mission, W., who carried on, in connection with that organization, many branches of Christian work.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Dr. Baedeker (for Stundist family)—Galatians vi. 10, 10s.

Home for Motherless Children, Chiswick (Mr. R. T. Smith)—Miss F., 5s.

Obituary.

MR. JOHN THOMSON, EVANGELIST.

THIS devoted and beloved brother, the fisherman evangelist, passed away on Wednesday, 25th February, at his own home in Cockenzie. The end came peacefully after a long illness borne with much patience. On Saturday, 28th February, hundreds of mourners followed the dear body to its last resting place in Tranent Churchyard, where it now lies awaiting the resurrection morn. We hope to give in an early issue a portrait and sketch of our friend. D. J. F.

MR. A. G. GARSTIN.

On Lord's Day last Mr. A. G. Garstin, of Crouch End, N., passed to his reward at the early age of thirty-two. Mr. Garstin was the son of Mr. A. Garstin, of Queen Square, Aldersgate Street, E.C., and was well known for his hearty co-operation in many branches of Christian work. Business by no means engrossed his attention; his interest in evangelistic work was especially deep, and on many occasions his earnest words of appeal and invitation were blessed to his hearers. He loved to be among the common people, preaching the Gospel of the grace of God, and his death removes one of the most promising and devoted of the younger Christian workers of North London.

Irish Notes.

GROSVENOR HALL, Belfast, the headquarters of Belfast Central Mission, which, together with the site, cost some nine years ago £10,500, is now practically out of debt. To bring this satisfactory state of matters about, the congregation worshipping in the hall have contributed within the last eight weeks among themselves the sum of nearly £500. Mr. Walker, of Bolton, has given £1,000, to the Committee of the Irish Methodist Twentieth Century Fund.

The Belfast Presbyterian Sabbath School Superintendents' Union, which was formed some time ago, is doing a good work, and has appointed a sub-committee to consider the whole question of the organization of Sabbath schools. There are 1,100 Sabbath schools in connection with the Irish Presbyterian Church, and 100,000 scholars. It is, however, becoming more and more difficult to get suitable teachers, and young people are showing a greater disposition than ever to stay away from church and school.

THE NATIONAL BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY

Have several new cases before them, and need immediate help and sympathy. We beg the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, who have so generously aided us in the past, to extend their practical help on behalf of the following case:—

A Man, 60 years of age, formerly employed at the Woolwich Arsenal, has through his affliction been unable to work for 4 years. He and his wife are in great distress, as the woman, being very delicate, can only earn about 6s. a week—this, and 2s. 6d. per week from a son, is all they have to depend on.

Contributions to this deserving case will be thankfully received by the Hon. Sec., Rev. J. PULLEIN THOMPSON, The Vicarage, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.; or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE RAILWAY MISSION
. . AND ITS . .
CONVALESCENT HOMES.

ABOUT 15,000 RAILWAY MEN are injured every year in the United Kingdom by accidents on the line.

Many of these men suffer amputation of one or more limbs, and after discharge from Hospital require nourishing food and fresh air to restore their strength.

THE RAILWAY MISSION CONVALESCENT HOMES at St. Leonard's and Southport provide for the men in their time of weakness.

The Homes urgently need funds. Contributions will be gratefully received by Richard Nixon, Secretary, 1, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C., who will send collecting boxes in which thank-offerings for journeying mercies may be put for the Homes.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Founded 1860.

Boys saved from Prison and Criminal Lives.

Innocent Wives and Children of Prisoners assisted.

An Extensive all-round Mission Work carried on constantly amongst the Poorest and Most Needy.

Contributions, which are much needed and earnestly solicited, will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Bankers, Messrs. BARCLAY & Co., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; or to the Superintendent,

WILLIAM WHEATLEY,

4, Ampton St., Regent Sq., London, W.C.

Preparatory Prayer. The busy man, with a multitude of engagements, undoubtedly runs a great risk of yielding to the temptation to curtail his periods of prayer, and to overlook the example set by Christ, who, when He had such a congestion of thronging objects before Him that He had scarcely time to eat, yet found time to pray. In fact, those times appear to have been with our Lord seasons of more prolonged prayer than usual. As Dr. Stalker says:—

> Many in our day know what this congestion of occupations is; they are swept off their feet with their employments. We make this a reason for not praying; Jesus made it a reason for praying. . . . A wise man once said that he was too busy to be in a hurry. He meant that if he allowed himself to become hurried he could not do all that he had to do. There is nothing like prayer for producing this calm self-possession.

The Unawakened Church. It is becoming daily more evident that the revival movement in Scotland has thus far been confined within the limits of a certain area. The Church, as a whole, is not yet awakened. A speaker at the day of prayer in Edinburgh last week remarked that when Mr. Moody first visited this country in company with Mr. Sankey, a religious hush fell upon the whole community. Ungodly men were compelled to respect it in spite of themselves. This time, so far, it has not been so. The watchers in Israel have become more vigilant, and a considerable number of the ungodly have been touched; but the greater number, both in the Church and out of it, have escaped the influence. This is a call for further prayer, that the conscience of the whole community may be seized upon by the Spirit of God. The "prayer circle" is widening, and in that circumstance there is much hope, for it is only through widespread prayer that widespread revival is to be expected.

Dead yet Speaking. Our readers will doubtless peruse, with sad interest, the message of Dr. Parker in his presidential address read at Brighton last week. It represents his last word to the Christian community. There are many gems in it, but the chief one, we think, is that sentence which focuses the practical results of the Bible upon man's life:—

> I judge every religion by the men it makes; and, so judged, the Bible has no need to be ashamed of its stalwarts and its heroes.

This may be read in two ways. It may refer to the heroes delineated upon the sacred page, and equally to those created in all times by the power of the Word of God. Questions of verbal criticism are paltry by the side of living men created by the force of Divine truth. It is strange that critics, who profess such interest in the sources of Divine revelation, should not have turned their attention to the living effects to-day of the Holy Scriptures. What inspires is inspired. The effect demands an adequate cause, and if an effect in life is Divine, the cause is more than human. This line of evidence would pay some men to investigate, far more than word-quibbling.

Mr. Campbell's Theology. The utterance of Rev. R. J. Campbell upon prayer was so inspiring, sublime, devout, that it is with the deeper sorrow that we have noted some of his recent expositions, which have shown how imperfectly he has grasped certain of the essential doctrines of the Word of God. It is far from our desire to discourage a young man at the unfolding of a promising career. We know the danger indicated by our Lord—"lest while ye gather up the tares ye root up the wheat also." But, obviously, discernment is necessary in following Mr. Campbell's ministry. He has much to learn and to unlearn. We earnestly hope that his advent to the larger world of London will bring him into touch with men whose wider knowledge and experience may be used, with brotherly consideration, to help him to a more harmonious conception and presentation of Divine truth.

The Lord's Day. The address delivered also by Rev. Silvester Horne on "The Misuse of the Lord's Day" was a vigorous and most timely utterance. Yet the position he assumed towards the question of Sabbath-keeping—a position which is very common—needs another and a stronger element in it. It is not strictly correct to say that the Sabbath is an institution sustained by Jewish sanctions. The Sabbath is older than the Jewish nation—it reposes upon the Divine will for human nature. It is a natural law affecting man in all his relationships towards God, his fellows, and himself. It is, therefore, more than a privilege—it is a duty. We quite appreciate the force of the argument that the secularization of the Lord's Day tends to ruin the higher life of the nation, and this not simply for reasons of nerves, but for reasons of the heart. Utilitarianism presents only one side of the case; the more important side is the Divine side, and while men remain men the law of the Sabbath binds them, not simply for what they will get, but because of what they owe to God.

The Man and the Sabbath. The Bishop of Lincoln having dealt in a Lenten pastoral letter with the burning question of the growing disregard of the Sabbath, the consequent destruction of the religious character of the day for domestic servants, and the development of the house-party and outdoor amusements "on the part of persons of independent means," a thoughtful correspondent addressed him asking if he did not consider that the prevailing secularization of the hours which should be devoted to sacred exercises is not in a large measure to be attributed to recent developments of Tractarianism.

> The Ritualistic clergy, who approximate their teaching to Roman Catholic standards, appear to be persuaded that attendance "at Mass" is the only religious obligation on Sundays, and to regard the pursuit of worldly pleasure, in which so many of the laity are engaged during the remainder of the day, with a lenient eye, if not with sympathetic approval.

The Bishop, however, as perhaps might be expected, ignores the point altogether, and has replied in a mere platitude.

An American Example. Perhaps it is too much to expect that all large employers of labour should deal with the question of Sunday work upon the highest ground. It is, therefore, pleasing to find that the directors of one great railway company—the Chicago and North-Western—looking at the question, even from the very practical one of benefit to the shareholders, have come to the decision that, by confining the freights on Sundays to "live stock and perishable goods," they can not only give thousands of men their Sunday free, but also obtain more efficient and willing work on weekdays, "as the day of rest will bring renewed nerve force." As the company employs a huge army of servants, the decision is an important one, and it is to be hoped that the result, and there can be but one result, may influence our English companies to go and do likewise.

Discipline in the Church. The reply of the Archbishops to the deputation of Parliamentary Churchmen, which waited upon them with regard to the state of discipline in the Church of England, serves to show how enormous are the difficulties in dealing with sacerdotalism. Both of the Archbishops agreed that "stern and drastic action" is necessary in dealing with the most extreme Ritualists. But then these very extreme men are few in number compared with the multitude of clergy who teach sacerdotal doctrines and who, as Sir John Dorington, M.P., put it, "emphasize too much the sacerdotal character of their office." This is the crux of the question, and it seems to us to have been gracefully passed by in the reply. For after all, the real question is not one of degree, but one of principle. The cleavage between Evangelicals and Sacerdotalists is not due so much to matters of lights and pictures as to the fundamental question—Is a clergyman a priest or not, and are his functions sacerdotal or not? It is upon these basal questions that Churchmen await an official reply.

Fruitful Seed. The Divine promise that the Word of God shall not return unto Him void is fulfilled in many striking ways. Years ago, says the writer in Le Prêtre Converti, a Dominican priest, Alonzo Sattana, became a Protestant and translated the New Testament, the instrument of his conversion, into the Tagalog dialect. With the help of an agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, he spread the copies through the Philippine islands. He was, however, soon seized and put to death by order of the Romish ecclesiastical authorities at Manila, the Bible Society agent, an Englishman, escaping by reason of his nationality. The copies of the New Testament were carefully collected—all save one which fell into the hands of a merchant, Paulino Zamora, who, with his family was converted, and his son to-day is the first Protestant minister of the first evangelical church in the Philippines. "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days." (Ecc. xi. 1).

The 1902 Drink Bill. The National Drink Bill, which Rev. Dr. Dawson-Burns prepares annually with so much care, has just been published, and it is gratifying to find that the sad figures for 1902 show a decrease in the money spent upon drink by over £2,000,000, as compared with those for 1901. The expenditure, however, reached £179,499,817, a sum giving an average of £4 5s. 6¾d. for every man, woman, and child in these islands, or £21 7s. 9¾d. for every family of five persons. It is not very difficult to work out these calculations, but it would be impossible to estimate the crime and poverty and disease and death underlying them. The drink bill of Great Britain and Ireland exceeds the whole expenditure upon the Government, Army and Navy, and Civil Service; it is greater than the entire sum paid for rent; and it is far in excess of the outlay upon all religious, educational, and charitable objects put together. It is something to thank God for, that at length there is even a slight diminution in the terrible total.

A Timely Utterance. The pronouncement of the United Kingdom Alliance in regard to the demand of brewers and publicans for compensation comes none too soon, but it will go far to disabuse the public mind of a number of misconceptions. A lurid light is thrown upon a large section of modern political life by the calm statements of the drink-makers and dealers as to the important part they took in the election of the present Parliament. It is undoubtedly the duty of every Christian to endeavour to bring about a healthier state of things, and to weaken the unholy power now being brought to bear upon members and the Government. As we have frequently urged, if compensation there must be, it should come from the trade itself. In cases of reduction of licences the holders who remain will benefit, and they can well afford such a levy as would be necessary. A recent estimate taken in Birmingham shows that a tax of three per cent. upon the incomes of the publicans in that centre would yield £99,000: cankered gold and silver all of it, the rust of which shall be a witness against them (James v. 3).

Ourselves and the Universe. The remarkable article by Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace in the Fortnightly Review, upon the important position of our earth in the universe, has evoked, as might be expected, a storm of criticism from astronomers and others. But whatever be true concerning the extent of the universe, and of the conditions which prevail upon other planets, it is undeniably true that our planet has been favoured of God by the production thereon of beings in His likeness and image. Above all, it has been favoured as the place where the Son of God became incarnate, where He died for our redemption, where He arose for our justification, whence He ascended, and to which He will return. And these facts make our world unique. There is a marvellous fascination in studying the heavens. The Psalmist found in such a study a source of praise. But it is a pity when men lose themselves in the contemplation of other worlds, forgetting what has been done for them by God, and what is due from them in this.

The New Tower of Babel. While extreme German critics are launching forth curious notions about the ancient Tower of Babel, we may see, if we will, some of our modern politicians engaged in building a new one. It does not take the outward and visible form of the lofty tower, but it is there all the same. For what is the exaggerated and boastful speech concerning Imperialism but a repetition of the proud words uttered long ago:—

"Let us build us a city and a tower whose top may reach unto heaven, and let us make us a name lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth"?

"The British Empire must reach to the sky." It is a boastful word, and not calculated to tranquilize our foreign neighbours. If Britain's heart rises to the sky first and looks to God, all will be well. The Imperialism that is first just and Christian, may rise under the approval of God, even to the sky; but if it be the mere vanity which would make a name at any cost, it will as certainly as its prototype end in confusion.

The Sons of the Alien. It is interesting to observe that the writer of a recent volume, dealing with the profound problem of the absorption of the alien, points to ample ground for his opinion that, in their labour centres and great towns, as in East London, the Jewish religion seems to be crumbling under its surroundings and "the influence of freedom," and this despite the fact that the attendance at religious services of the Jewish community is probably as large as it is among Protestants. This disintegration must undoubtedly have a great influence upon future national life, and the question arises whether it will be for good or for evil. In this race assimilation, what shall dominate? Shall it be the "structureless desolation" of our labour cities? or shall it be a new life fully lighted and sweetened by the Redeemer made manifest to all those whose religious spirit is being crushed out into despair and hopelessness? The problem is a vital one. The responsibility for its solution rests upon every Christian who remains supine before the crying need for evangelization.

Reforms in Russia. The decree issued by the Tsar upon the birthday of his father has been hailed with satisfaction everywhere. If but a part of its promise is fulfilled, it means that a new epoch in Russian history has been opened. The earnest and noble purpose of the Tsar is unquestionable. He is as sincerely desirous to see his own people enjoying liberty and prosperity as he was anxious, at the Hague, for the principles of peace to be extended throughout the world. Especially are we glad that he has announced his decision to strengthen the laws of tolerance, granting religious freedom to his subjects. The persecution of the Stundists has not yet faded from the public mind, and it was time, surely, that such intolerance should pass. Russia suffers to-day from officialism—ignorant, oppressive, and bigoted. And because the Tsar has the fear of God upon him, and regards his position as a sacred trust, we fervently pray that his desires may be abundantly realized.

Growing Sons and Daughters. In the course of a deeply solemn sermon recently delivered, Dr. Alexander Whyte touched one of the vital points in modern family life, contrasting the action of Job (i. 4), who offered a burnt offering when his children had gone feasting (for "it may be that my sons have sinned") with the action of many modern parents who never make the pleasures of their children a matter for deep solicitude and prayer. Surely this is one of the vital points in family life. For lack of this solicitude many youths and maidens are abandoned to pleasures which wound and dissipate their lives. And it is not too much to say that herein is one secret of the distaste which young people evince for serious and higher things. Many times in these columns have we urged the supreme importance of family training and religion. If this unit of society be wrong, everything must of necessity be wrong.

Christ and Charity. We would urge opponents of Christianity to consider for a few moments what the condition of our large cities would be without those noble organizations for the relief of want and suffering which are the direct fruit of the teachings and influence of the Divine Redeemer. Even many Christians have but a limited knowledge of what some of those institutions do to reduce the sum of back-street misery. Mr. Sydney Holland, the Chairman of the London Hospital, Whitechapel, recently stated that last year 13,160 in-patients, and 162,147 out-patients, and 3,500 children were treated, the expenditure being £300 a day, or £12 10s. per minute. He added:—

If the people were placed in a line, and a man started on his bicycle at a quarter past three to go along that line, he would not get past them until a quarter past nine; sixty-six miles of people standing closely side by side.

Those who sneer at the Christian faith may reasonably be asked, What would have been the lot of that huge army of suffering men, women, and children if it had not been for that practical obedience to the commands of Christ which underlies so large a proportion of modern philanthropy?

Fogs—Physical and Moral. Londoners in particular will be grateful to the London County Council for its attempt to investigate the cause of the thick fogs which periodically afflict the Metropolis. The secret has not yet been discovered, but certain information has been gained which will form the basis for further inquiry. The committee are hopeful that something may yet be done to minimize these disturbing visitations. There is another kind of fog which envelops human minds and hearts, the cause of which needs investigating. It is called Doubt, and whoever is surrounded by it fails to see the glory of God's Word and works. The fog obscures landscape and sky, and narrows a man's vision to one depressing spectacle. One condition of fog is a chilled atmosphere. There can be no fog until the temperature has been lowered. This is very suggestive. The doubt and uncertainty which prevail amongst men to-day are due, primarily, to a chilled spiritual atmosphere. There is no doubt when love is warm. The doubt in churches will soon disappear when the spiritual temperature rises.

Bodies or Souls. An article in the current number of the Edinburgh Review, under the title of "The Past and Future of Factory Legislation," gives some prominence to the fallacious argument of the political economists that the wealth of a nation and its progress are based upon the low and purely material ground of the mere economic efficiency of the people. The writer, in fact, dignifies that asset as one "of priceless value," and would make out that upon its enhancement alone the future of Britain depends; and that our prosperity is not a question of happy hearts and noble if humble lives, but of stunted bodies just strong enough for the labour of making calico. It is, however, as true of a nation as of an individual that the whole world may be gained at the cost of the loss of the soul.

A Use for Cranks!

THERE was a fine deep true tone ringing through the meetings of the Free Church Council assembly at Brighton last week. During the sermon by Rev. R. J. Campbell on Prayer, the Spirit of God seemed to sweep over the audience as wind through a forest of trees. It was a humbling yet inspiring time, and if a tenth of its promise finds issue in performance, many of the churches in the land will feel its power. Similarly, Dr. Horton's sermon on being crucified with Christ showed the fundamentals of true missionary effort; and that from Rev. John McNeill, upon the carrying of the palsied man to Jesus, drove home, in his own inimitable way, the essentials of all successful soul-winning, which is the real business of the Church on earth.

At succeeding sessions, the Education Question loomed large, and was strenuously treated; and the relation of the masses to religion was a problem faced boldly and with a sense of urgent responsibility. In a word, spiritual force and practical application were combined in a degree seldom if ever attained before at these annual gatherings, human effort and Divine grace being presented throughout in their only right proportion.

We hope that Rev. J. Brierley's masterly plea that the church should be regarded as a house of spiritual business, as well as a means of grace, will be taken seriously, not only by ministers but by their congregations. It will be a calamity (with which we are not quite unfamiliar), for ministers inspired by these utterances to find in their officers or people an obstacle to work on the lines suggested. And after all, it remains for the churches to say yea or nay to their operation. On the other hand, it is equally possible for the pulpit to be obdurate in regard to similar proposals from the pew.

Yet in every church, probably, there are some, at least, whose hearts are stirred by the indifference of the masses to religion (and in many places the indifference of the Church to them). Let the earnest minority make their influence felt. Let them band themselves together to support their minister in any reasonable change of method conducive to the salvation of men. They may be superciliously called "cranks," but cranks move things; and it is time something revolutionary was done, and that such splendid meetings should not end in mere devout verbosity.

Now that "old traditions" are at a discount and the demand is rife in so many churches for "up-to-date" theology—for a Gospel which alas, is too often not a Gospel at all—congregations need to be urged, on the ground of consistency, if on no other, to forego the "old traditions" as to forms of service, so that the instant requirements of the times may be fully and effectively met. Many church members are hard enough to move, but the power of God is more than equal to even such a task as this (Dan. iv. 35).

Sunday Goods Trains.—At the recent half-yearly meeting of the Midland Railway at Derby, Rev. Conoly T. Porter, D.D., vicar of All Saints, Southport, presented a protest from nearly 2,700 of the company's stockholders against the continuance of needless Sunday traffic. He had official information from Alsace-Lorraine that 1,222 goods trains ran every day on the lines of that German province, but that, except a few trains connected with the international traffic, all these were suppressed on Sundays. The chairman, Sir George Ernest Paget, declared that owing to fogs 50 per cent. fewer engines had been out on Sundays in 1901 than in 1900, and 50 per cent. fewer in 1902 than in 1901. But dividends kept up!

The Riches of Restriction.

By NORA C. USHER.

TO many minds, loneliness and inactivity seem to necessitate uselessness. There are countless people scattered over the world, in large towns as well as in remote and unfrequented districts, whose hearts are being eaten out with bitterness because of the apparent aimlessness and waste of the best part of their lives.

Day succeeds day, year after year goes by in the same monotonous round, the same trivial occupations, the same restricted circle. There seems no outlet for the love that wells up in the overflowing heart; no scope for the enthusiasm that dreams of great and noble deeds; no answer to the fettered spirit when it cries for life—life in the fullest and freest sense.

Many are tied and bound by the chain of trivialities (I use the word comparatively; from one point of view nothing is trivial) to the day of their death, and are content to be so; but there are others whose souls seek a wider range than that comprised in the question, "What shall we eat, and what shall we drink, and wherewithal shall we be clothed?" To these the bonds unfelt by others are such a constant burden that life becomes almost unendurable.

There is one sweet thought specially meet for the consideration of those cut off from closest human fellowship, and hedged in by trying circumstances. Since it is certain that God has placed you where you are for some definite purpose, may it not be that your heart is emptied of earth's gladness in order that He may fill it to overflowing with His love?

> If loving hearts were never lonely,
> If all we wished could always be,
> Accepting what we looked for only—
> We might be glad—but not in Thee.

Why is it that the most loving hearts are often the most lonely? It is that their love, like the box of precious ointment, may be poured at the feet of the Saviour.

Once this truth is grasped, our whole lives become radiant. No need for depression, for fretfulness, or worry, if we walk in the light of the King's countenance. "His blessed service"—We hear a great deal about this in connection with missions, conventions, preaching, teaching, and other active work for the Master; but are not the simple duties of everyday life, aye, and the simple suffering of everyday pain, "His blessed service" also? "They also serve, who only stand and wait."

Looked at in the right light, the very silence and solitude of our lives will be helps and not hindrances. When we are walking alone there is more opportunity for "Jesus Himself" to draw near and go with us.

> The light of Heaven more brightly shines
> When earth's illusions flee.

Even should your life be so empty that there is no opportunity for so much as the "cup of loving service," you may still say with the Psalmist, "on Thee do I wait all the day."

O lonely, aching, weary heart, your life need be no failure unless you may make it so. Your sacrifice may be even fuller and more complete than that of those who enjoy the praise of men and the honour that the world can give. The humble flower that blooms and withers unseen; the lark's sweet song unheard by mortal ear; the patient, devoted, Christ-like life, unnoticed by any save the King of heaven, are not wasted.

The Lack of Domestics.—In the current number of The World's Work, Miss O'Connor Eccles urges the view that domestic servants dislike service because they have not been trained beforehand for its duties, and that mistresses have neither time or patience to train them. In support of this theory, she states that there is always an abundant supply of children's nurses. The article is singularly valuable, however, by reason of the interesting account which the writer gives of the Vienna School for training girls for domestic service, an institution which last year found places for 1,837 qualified girls who had been properly instructed within its walls. Such a result certainly points to the desirability of a similar experiment being tried in London and elsewhere.

The Oracles of God.

DR. PIERSON ON THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE ATONEMENT.

LAST Friday, Exeter Hall was filled again, as Dr. Pierson continued his consideration of the Atonement, dealing with the philosophy of the subject, and pointing out some of the indications to be found in Scripture of God's plan in the great work.

Referring to three rules for Scripture study which are of immense importance and consequence—(1) search, (2) meditate, (3) compare—Dr. Pierson placed special emphasis on the third. The Bible does not present truth in a system, but in substance. Truth is not found like a structure, but like stones in a quarry, hewn and shapen—ready to be carried to the site of the building, and then put together without the sound of axe or any iron tool to chip the stones which God has made ready to be put in their places. The value of collating and comparing spiritual things in the Scripture is that we discover unsuspected mutual adaptations in the truth, so that we are enabled to build up a system from Biblical materials.

The speaker examined the problems with which God was confronted regarding man's redemption, and pointed out the scriptures which show how these requirements have been met. (1) Sin is transgression, and transgression demands penalty—1 Peter ii. 24; Romans iii 25. (2) Sin is guilt, and guilt demands expiation—1 John i. 7. (3) Sin is character, and character demands renewal—John iii. 3; 2 Cor. v. 17. (4) Sin is slavery, and slavery demands emancipation—Romans viii. 2; Galatians v. 1. (5) Slavery is ruin, and ruin demands rebuilding—1 John iii. 8. (6) Sin is war against Almighty God, and God must vindicate His own honour and holiness; and there must be no complicity with sin in a loose or lax fashion of pardoning—Romans iii. 26. God declares that all the great needs set forth in redemption are fulfilled in His plan.

SUBSTITUTION, REPRESENTATION, REGENERATION, IDENTIFICATION.

In an examination of the conception which lies at the foundation of redemption, it was shown that (1) it is a satisfaction to a broken law. There was a death penalty attached to sin from the beginning—Ezekiel xviii. 4, 20. The law of God must be kept. (2) Redemption by substitution. There is no redemption taught in the Bible if not by substitution—the penalty borne by the innocent to vindicate law and justice, the guilty escaping through substitution. This was traced through Abel, the Paschal lamb, and the Day of Atonement. (3) Redemption by representation, which is something in advance of substitution—Exodus xxviii. 38, 43. He who takes refuge in Jesus Christ is accepted in the Beloved, and the holiness of Jesus Christ is the perpetual pledge of his perpetual acceptance. (4) Redemption by regeneration. The Holy Spirit supplements and complements the atoning work of Jesus Christ on the cross: Christ expiating sin and cleansing guilt, the Holy Spirit changing the nature. (5) Redemption ends in eternal identification: Christ communicating the Divine nature to us, that we may be sharers of His holiness and happiness, for it is character that makes condition in the end.

The Biblical teaching on the subject was shown to include a clear belief that the moral ends of punishment are met in the Atonement, and that the principles of substitution, representation, and identification are exemplified in daily life.

Christian Instruction Society and Deaconess Mission.—A meeting was held recently at Brixton Independent Church, under the chairmanship of Rev. J. Bernard Snell, on behalf of the work of this Society, which is engaged in providing deaconesses and organizing the work of Christian women in the homes of the poor. The scope of the Society was explained by Mr. S. Cecil Searle, of Clapham, and Dr. Richards, of Browning Settlement, Walworth; and two of the deaconesses gave interesting particulars of their work. The Society has now been in existence nearly eighty years.

Mythology and Revelation.

IT is well that there should be an outcry against assertions such as those recently made in Germany, but we often hear the same sort of theories in this country about the Babylonian or Egyptian origin of the religion of Israel.

Why should we be startled or afraid of discoveries showing analogies and points of resemblance between the Babylonian religion and Bible revelation? Does not the study of Scripture rather lead us to expect them? It should not be considered strange that the Babylonians kept a Sabbath. We are not told that it was first instituted at Sinai. On the contrary, the wording of the Fourth Commandment suggests that its revival, not its inauguration, was enjoined. The children of Israel were charged to "remember" what had been forgotten in Egypt. It is very suggestive that during the flood Noah sent out the dove at intervals of seven days (Gen. viii. 10-12).

Why should we be surprised that the Babylonians offered sacrifices also, when we learn that immediately after the Fall man was taught the need of an offering? The Bible nowhere asserts that at the confusion of tongues, at Babel, the sons of men entirely lost their memories! May we not rather conclude that the founders of nations, when scattered throughout the earth, carried with them the broken fragments of God's revelation to their fathers?

God spake "of old time . . . . by divers portions and in divers manners." He revealed Himself to Adam, Enoch, Noah, and later to Abraham and Moses. The memory of what He taught them was handed down to their descendants, but became corrupted by them. In almost every case the pure stream of one revelation had been thus polluted before the fresh one was given, and the further we travel from the fountain head, the more impossible is it to measure how much is pure and how much flows from corrupt human or devilish springs. Abraham was probably himself an idolater among idolaters, till God appeared to him. Apart from this revelation, we know of only one place at that time where the true God was worshipped, and that was Jerusalem, where the great typical king priest Melchizedek served the Most High God. Thus early it was God's chosen centre, while Babylon has been and will be the metropolis of Satan.

THE MOTHER AND CHILD.

It is argued that because there are points of resemblance between the polytheistic worship of Babylon, and the revealed worship of Jehovah, the latter must have been derived from the former. As well might we try to prove from the bits of dry sea-weed found on the shore when the tide has gone down, that the ocean receives its supply of sea-weed from these fragments cast up on the sands. Were we to start such a theory, we should not expect to be believed by those who have seen "the works of the Lord and His wonders in the deep," but the children who build castles in the sand would probably be easily deceived. The absurdity of such reasoning may be illustrated by referring similar arguments to a more modern, but quite as ancient an object of worship, viz., the Mother and Child. Is the adoration of the virgin and child derived from—(1) Divine revelation, (2) Satanic ingenuity, (3) Pagan superstition, or (4) Historical fact?

It would be impossible to account for it from any one of these sources alone, for it probably may be traced in varying measure to all the four:—

(1) There was the Divine Revelation as recorded in Gen iii. of the promised seed of the woman; repeated again to Isaiah, who prophesied that a virgin should conceive and bear a son (vii. 14). As we have been so forcibly shown by Dr. Pierson at Exeter Hall, Gen. iii. 15 contains the germ of almost all the Messianic predictions. It also contains the germ of a very large portion of heathen mythology. The mother and child, the hero and the serpent, the combat and the victory, are found almost universally.

(2) In these we probably have secondly, Satanic Ingenuity. God's announcement to Adam and Eve was overheard by the serpent. He was present when his doom was foretold, and henceforth his great object was to defeat and to counterfeit its fulfilment. He tried to defeat it when he sought to destroy the seed of the woman in the time of Pharaoh, Athaliah, and Herod. He has counterfeited it in all the countries where, for six thousand years, in different forms and under various names, the woman and child have been made objects of worship.

(3) There is abundant evidence of this Pagan Superstition in many lands. (See "The Two Babylons," by A. Hislop.) We can find examples in the British Museum, e.g., in the Grecian Galleries there are statuettes dated about 300 B.C. which would do well for Romish images of the virgin and child. The picture, by Long, of "The Descent into Egypt," most strikingly brings before us the false and the true. In the foreground the artist represents Mary with the infant Saviour in her arms, seated upon an ass, which is being led by Joseph. In the distance, and approaching this simple group, there winds a gorgeous heathen procession, at the head of which is borne aloft by the priests an image of Isis and her son Osiris. Just such an incident might have happened, bringing face to face the Pagan superstition and (4) the Historical Fact. The prophecy spoken so long before was at last fulfilled. The promised seed of the woman had been born. The virgin had brought forth her son, and the angel had hailed her as "highly favoured" and "blessed among women."

ROMANISM AND THE GOSPEL.

Something of Divine revelation, together with the historical fact of the Incarnation, having been mixed by Satanic ingenuity with a large quantity of Pagan superstition, has resulted in the Romish worship of the Virgin Mary. We do not, however, doubt the Incarnation because of this. To argue that because the Mother and Child were worshipped in Babylon, Egypt, Greece, and other lands, there was therefore no real Virgin Mary, who brought forth her firstborn son and laid him in the manger at Bethlehem, would be exceedingly foolish. It is just as foolish to say that because there were Sabbaths observed and sacrifices offered in Babylon there was no revelation of Levitical ritual to Moses.

We may be quite sure that the Babylonian religion contained some relics of Divine revelation, mixed with superstition and doctrines of demons; but in either case it is quite impossible to define exactly the proportion in which they have been derived from these various sources. As well might we try to separate the leaven from the meal when the whole has been leavened.

For us who believe the Bible the question of the origin of the worship of Jehovah has been settled once for all; but the origin of Babylonian and other heathen idolatry is quite a different question, and though impossible to solve, will give plenty of scope for the theories of scholars.

Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society. —This Society, which was founded in 1860 by a few naval officers (among whom was the late Admiral Sir Cooper Key), finds its means are no longer equal to the task before it. It is the boast of the Admiralty that within the last twenty years they have doubled the personnel of the navy. This, of course, doubles the work of the Society. The Prince of Wales has become patron of a proposed Million Shilling Fund. There are 244 ships in commission, of which only about one third, i.e., ninety, carry chaplains. Address—112, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

FREE CHURCHMEN AT BRIGHTON.

BY the time the new President (Rev. James Travis) had completed his inaugural address at the opening session on Tuesday (mention of which was made in last week's issue), no doubt was entertained by those present, either as to his fitness for the office, or the spirit in which he was being received on entering upon the duties before him. Passage after passage of his discourse was vigorously applauded, and it was not without some effort that the audience, enthused by his forceful utterances, was able to settle down to more prosaic business—the formal welcome of the Council to Brighton. Mr. J. Compton Rickett and Rev. R. J. Campbell voiced the greetings of local councils and the Sussex Federation, while the civic authorities were represented by the Lord Mayor.

DR. PARKER'S LAST MESSAGE.

These generous expressions having been reciprocated by the Chairman, the assembly gave eager attention to what would have been the presidential address (on "Early Training: its Effect on Thought and Habit") had Dr. Parker been spared to fulfil his intentions in the office to which he had been elected. This was read by Dr. Vaughan Price. But above the voice of the reader was the unmistakable accent of the writer, so that the characteristics of the great preacher appeared again and again. Emphasizing how much in controversy depends on standpoints, and the danger there is of Nonconformists becoming popes, while in the very act of claiming to be Protestants, Dr. Parker submitted that their especial training gave them their best standpoint. Our own bringing up as Free Churchmen is responsible for much. Our training as Dissenters was a rough and hard training, and has left its deep mark upon us. We were not reared in kings' houses.

CRITICISM AND SANCTIFIED CREDULITY.

Dwelling on some aspects of this training, the departed writer declared: We were brought up among simple, unsuspecting believers. They told us that the Bible was all true. They called it the "Holy Bible," and held it to be such. They told us that Eden was a real place, with real trees and a real serpent. They told us that a four-branched river rolled through the sunny paradise. We thought that Adam bathed in Hiddekel, and that the gold that coloured the Pison stream was solid, yellow, and marketable. We never doubted it. The place on the map was pointed out, with the assurance that if Eden was not there, it was somewhere thereabouts. Some people believe it still; and, in its highest, deepest, grandest meaning, I myself believe it! "Our mothers are responsible for a good deal. They were not literal grammarians, but they were gigantic believers. They used to read to us the story of Joseph and cry over it, and made much of the coat of many colours; and when we came to 'Your father, the old man of whom ye spake: is he well?' our brawny fathers sobbed and pretended to be only coughing. If anyone had told us then, what some people are telling us now, that there was no Joseph, no old man, no coat of many colours, no life in Egypt, no forgiving brethren, no family reconciliation; that it is all a dream, a fantasy, an illusion in colour, I know not in what terms he would have been denounced, and with what horror he would have been shunned. Some of us still believe in the history of Joseph; and, when all other short stories have run out, this story of Joseph will exact its tribute of tears from the eyes of far-off generations."

Scathing references to the spirit of modern criticism were followed by an equally passionate plea for the Word of God to be received into its wonted and rightful position in the affection of men. "We are told (continued the writer) that the Bible has been given back to us by the critics, a better book. Some of us cannot yet receive this saying, for we are suffering from a sense of grievous loss. It is not to be wondered at that some still cling to the Bible after the illiterate and traditional manner of our fathers, and mothers, and pastors. Blame our training if you will; but the Bible has helped us when father died, and there was neither coal in the grate nor bread in the cupboard. It sanctified our poverty, our struggles, our desolation. It turned the grave into a garden-plot, and put heart into us when all else failed."

In a touching appeal Dr. Parker exhorted his younger brethren in the ministry to revere those who had secured for them the privileges they now enjoy. "Do not mock the old men who have won your liberties. We may not be so learned as you, but we made learning of the highest kind possible to you. If we do not bear the Oxford or Cambridge brand, you know why; and you will neither mock us nor permit us to be mocked. Spare us. We cannot be here long now, and the next generation may do better. Learning should not divide, but unite. I pray God for the tongue of the learned that knows how to be a word in season to him that is weary. That is the great learning—the learning of bitter sorrow, of sharp pain, of lonely Gethsemane."

HONOURING THE DEAD.

Following the address came a number of affectionate tributes to Dr. Parker and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. The right note for a memorial service was struck by Dr. Clifford, who reminded all that while they missed their president-elect and mourned the loss to the Church, they did not sorrow as those without hope, but rather as those who had received the Gospel which abolished death and brought life and immortality to light. Deep pathos, as well as irresistible force characterized all his utterances from the pulpit; and his ministry, while being Evangelical and Biblical always, based itself upon the experiences of the soul. God removes workers, but carries on His work. Rev. Charles H. Kelly followed in a graceful strain; and the further gap in the ranks caused by the home-call of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes was similarly lamented by Dr. Guinness Rogers, Dr. Lunn, and Mr. Percy Bunting. Naturally the occasion was one of great solemnity.

THE STORY OF THE YEAR.

Breaking away from the usual routine, Rev. Thomas Law (organizing secretary) asked the Council in the afternoon to accept the annual report as read, in order that the speakers might have more freedom in the matter of time. Incidentally he mentioned that the past year had been one of exceptional stress, and indeed had involved the heaviest work in the history of the movement. In speaking to the report, Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon aroused the enthusiasm of the audience by his allusions to the Federation's attitude towards the Education Act, and gave approval to the pledge that there should be no submission.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare said that the work of the year must be tested by how far it had advanced the interests of the Evangelical Free Churches, and made more real, effective, and absolute that oneness which is necessary if the problems confronting Nonconformity are to be faced. Particular mention was made of the Free Church Girls' Guild, which pledges itself to stand by every Nonconformist young woman both for counsel and instruction. Mr. Shakespeare went on to support the Federation's denunciation of the Education Act, and closed an eloquent protest against the measure by suggesting an epitaph for its ignominous grave —"Killed in infancy by the Free Church Council!"

The strain of the session was here relieved by the saving sense of humour of Rev. John McNeill. He considered that their evangelistic work linked itself on to this topic. He felt that he must hang his Scotch head in shame over the Act. A characteristic and breezy peroration was closed with a happy and telling illustration. It had been discovered that earthworks make the best fortifications, in which the heaviest artillery helplessly buries its shot; and he ventured to think that it was against the earthworks of the village—the village Hampdens, the mute but not inglorious Miltons, with their rooted antipathy to Pope and Popery—in the hour of trial they would find that all this bearing down, in its insulting might, would break to pieces. Alderman Evan Spicer having presented the financial statement, Mr. W. P. Hartley spoke in plain terms to prosperous Free Churchmen concerning their financial responsibility towards the Council.

SABBATH DESECRATION.

The Council listened with interest in the afternoon to Rev. C. Silvester Horne's striking rebuke of "The Modern Misuse of the Lord's Day." In looking for the cause of the decline in church attendance during the last ten years, the speaker found it in the fact that the old reasons and motives for the religious observance of Sunday have ceased to be authoritative, and have not yet been replaced by others of equal weight. He recalled the historic testimony of our fathers on the question, the rebellion by the early Puritans against the law which compelled all citizens to attend church on the Sunday, and their attitude towards the Declaration of Sports. While he had little faith in "making men Christians by law," he urged every possible restriction of Sunday labour by legislation, so that a man may be free to obey the highest instincts of his nature if he will. He objected strongly to the privilege conferred by law upon the drink trade, which is the greatest enemy of our moral and spiritual national life. The State will also have to deal drastically with the great railway companies, among whom the keenest competition seems to be as to which can run the most popular Sunday excursions. If Christians are to counteract the modern tendency, they must set forth the highest ideal of worship.

THE PROPHET IN PRAYER.

The service of Tuesday evening will be memorable in the annals of the Federation, for it was undoubtedly the most impressive of the Brighton gatherings. In delivering the Council sermon, Rev. R. J. Campbell struck a deeply solemn note, as in the light of God's demands and the world's needs he dealt with some of the essential features which are lacking in the ministry of to-day. His theme was "The Prophet in Prayer," and was presented from two passages—Gen. xxxii. 26 and 1 Sam xii. 23. In these utterances of patriarch and prophet, Mr. Campbell found a subject for much heart-searching, inasmuch as the two strongly contrasted crises are the experience of the servant of God in all times, to whom souls are committed in trust. Venturing to speak to his brother ministers, he affirmed that the preacher must be Jacob before he can be Samuel, and pray the prayer of penitence of the man who has got as low as he can, in pleading with God for his own soul, before he can pray the prayer of the prophet who stands between God and the souls of other men as mediator. The greatest need of the present day is the need for stewards of the mysteries of God. We have ministers, faithful, honest and true, in abundance; but we have not many stewards of the deep things. We have practical men, public servants, leaders of thought, champions of the faith, but not many men with a vision of things unseen. Regarding the apathy of the few, Mr. Campbell was convinced that its cause lay in the fact that in the message of the preacher to-day people miss the accent of conviction, the note of authority, and the sense of communion.

CRUCIFIED WITH CHRIST.

On Wednesday morning, Dr. Horton preached the missionary sermon, and in spite of the early hour (9 a.m.) some 3,000 persons gathered to listen.

A powerful and earnest discourse was based on Gal. ii. 20. The age demands, the world needs, and the Church should pray for a multitude of men and women who can exemplify this ideal. There are faint gleams of resemblance to it in our experience, but in their entirety the words seem to be in another region. Looking down the details of the crucifixion, we may well ask ourselves, What part have we in things like these? This statement—Christ liveth in me—do we realize it as experience? Speaking of himself, Dr. Horton said, "Can I say, 'Yet not I live'? I find it is all 'I.' On every page of my life history there is the ominous letter—the upright beam without the transfixed section of the cross." He prayed that as a great union of churches and ministers they might be able to use the words as Paul did, without any exaggeration or insincerity.

Turning to the context, he pointed out that the crucifixion of which Paul spoke was the nailing to the cross of the law, the old man, the flesh, the world, and himself. Following the paradox of the text, step by step, the mystery of being crucified yet living, he placed before the Council this portrait, luminous of a great personal experience, and pleaded in tones of earnest concern that it should be the experience of hearers and speaker. Are we ready to do our part in this crucifixion of self? Who is to raise our cross and nail us thereon? Surely in this grave task God, the world, and we, must co-operate. God will do His part. If it pleased Him to see His well-beloved Son on the cross, He greatly desires to see us there with Him. The world, too, will do its part, for it will always join a procession to Calvary. It still has its cup of bitterness, its contempts, and its crown of thorns to offer. But are we willing to do our part? "For neither God nor the world can crucify me with Christ unless I choose to be crucified. The question is whether I, with God and the world, will take part in the crucifixion of me." Only thus can we influence the world at home and abroad.

THE EDUCATION ACT.

It was a sudden and in a sense a painful change to pass down from these lofty heights of meditation into the arena of conflict and the Education Act. There was one application of these great truths that many could not help making—that the way of resistance to the injustice and spiritual parts of this Act lies in the direction of self-sacrifice and suffering. If the "passive resistance" policy means anything more than an empty cry, it will involve considerable distress and loss to those who are pledged to follow it, and will derive all its ethical value and appeal from this fact.

The proceedings consisted of a series of resolutions outlining the policy of the Free Church Council in the endeavour to minimise the evils, and secure the repeal of the Act. Dr. Clifford led off with one of his trumpet calls, condemning the Act on the ground that it was without mandate, and that it outraged the conscience of the Free Churches, as evidenced by their feeling constrained to refuse to pay the rate, rather than submit to an unrighteous law. He pointed out that it was not only an outrage to the conscience of those outside the Anglican Church, but to many within it. The Bishop of Hereford did not stand alone. The measure was saturated with sectarianism.

"PASSIVE RESISTANCE."

The children of freemen would never be compelled to conform to endow Romanism. If they were called conspirators for this resistance they were in good company, for Oliver Cromwell, John Knox, and John Bunyan were treated as conspirators. It was a question of conscience, and in defence of it some of them too were willing, if necessary, to go to gaol.

Dr. Robertson Nicoll reminded the assembly that out of 489 councils, 412 had declared in favour of passive resistance, and echoed Dr. Fairbairn's statement to Mr. Balfour, that "to this Act they would not submit."

The second resolution was of a more political character, the three cardinal points of policy in it, as explained by Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., being the abolition of sectarian tests for teachers, the absolute popular control of all popularly-supported schools, and the giving of plain Bible-instruction by the teachers in opposition to sectarian religious instruction. Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson seconded this resolution.

Mr. Robert Whyte, in proposing the third resolution, urged the formation of a Vigilance Committee in every Council area, to watch the administration of the test in the interests of educational efficiency and religious equality; Rev. J. Hirst Hollowell seconding in a terse and telling speech. A dramatic interest was given to this discussion by a speech from Rev. E. H. Ellis, of the East London Tabernacle, who told the story of the attempt of a Board School teacher, who was a Catholic, to proselytize a child from among her scholars who happened to be a member of his own (Baptist) congregation. If such things were possible under the London School Board, what might be possible under the proposed Bill for London, when control would become so indirect and inefficient? Mr. Lloyd-George received a great reception as he rose to speak. His amusing and satirical exposition of the method of dealing with the present Act which was being organized in Wales covered a very serious and deliberate purpose. Dr. Massie followed, and said that Wales was likely to show England the way out of this iniquitous measure. The fourth resolution outlined the future education policy of the Council, and affirmed that no system of education could ever be acceptable in England as national which was not under complete and effective popular control, unsectarian in its sectarian teaching, and

ENTIRELY FREE FROM THEOLOGICAL TESTS.

This was entrusted to Alderman Snape and Rev. James Pickett.

The series of education resolutions was completed by a proposal by Rev. J. Scott Lidgett, that the same strenuous opposition should be offered to any proposal to extend to London the principles embodied in the Education Act of 1902; seconded by Mr. Geo. White, M.P., who affirmed that they were not fighting merely as Nonconformists, but as citizens. A resolution on the question of Disestablishment brought to an end the proceedings of this momentous session of the Congress.

No written report could possibly do justice to the impulse and energy and unanimity of this vast and representative gathering. Whatever its critics might think of it, there is no doubt that the policy outlined in so comprehensive and definite a manner embodied the settled convictions of millions of Free Churchmen, and cannot but have an enormous influence in shaping the future policy of the country.

OVERLAPPING IN VILLAGES AND TOWNS.

The spirit of combat that had filled the air and animated the proceedings of the morning session was allayed when the Federation reassembled in the afternoon. The first paper dealt with the subject of denominational overlapping, and was given by Dr. Alfred Rowland. His strong condemnation of misapplied sectarian zeal received general approval. A stern rebuke was administered to denominations who sought to outdo each other, building one chapel because of the existence of another, adding a preacher here because of a preacher there. The commercial element should not be introduced into Church work. He advocated the affiliation and union of the Free Churches, with a clear recognition of the evils to which the present state of things bears witness.

Offering some suggestions as to how the Councils could best promote aggressive religious work in the countryside, Rev. Charles Joseph at first painted a pathetic picture of the depleted English village of to-day; and detailed three enterprises which were undertaken by the Free Church Councils of the borough and county of Cambridge, where denominationalism had failed to meet the prime needs of the situation. Feeble and struggling missions had been induced to unite, with the result that in these three instances the Nonconformists of each village now work and worship unitedly. There were hundreds of villages where unification was needed, and where it was possible if only brotherly love continued and prevailed.

The same question as it affects the towns was dealt with by Rev. C. A. Fellowes. His contribution took the form of an allegory. A revolution took place in "Blanktown" as a result of united missions, theatre services, slum efforts, the labours of the Sisters, organized by the Free Church Council. The narrative was based on fact, observation, and meditation, and its useful suggestiveness was unmistakable. What Free Church Councils might do in the future was not to be limited by what they had done in the past. They were very far from having exhausted their latent possibilities, and what is prophecy to-day may become history to-morrow.

A PLEA FOR METHODIST UNITY.

Discussion having been invited, Rev. J. Odell remarked that there is something greater than denominationalism, and that was the direction of evangelization in the land. He confessed as a Primitive Methodist that the greatest difficulty in the matter of overlapping in the villages arose very largely from the divisions in Methodism. There were three or four scattered companies of worshippers where the spiritual atmosphere and true momentum of Christian work would be more than tripled were there one congregation instead of four. Rev. F. W. Bourne also pleaded for the union of the Methodist Churches on fair and equitable terms.

WOMEN AND THE WORK.

A thoughtful address on Wednesday afternoon, by Mrs. W. S. Caine, answered the question, "What is the place of women in this movement?" She held that the place of women in Free Church Council work is "everywhere," since they formed the majority in almost every congregation of Christian people. The matters dealt with by the Federation affected ultimately the home life of the people, and to exclude the "Mothers of Israel" from active co-operation was folly indeed. "Women and men hand-in-hand in God's service will conquer the world; either without the other is doomed to hopeless failure." A somewhat lively discussion followed, led by Mrs. Louise B. Swann, of Bristol, who briefly touched upon the privileges which women enjoyed as members of the Society of Friends; and urged that if this system were adopted in the Free Churches, women would automatically come into their proper place. She felt that woman largely owed her discovery in many of the churches to the chapel debt, and that thousands of women honestly wished that Dorcas had never been born!

YOUNG PEOPLE'S RALLY.

Long before the time for commencing the young people's meeting in the evening, the Dome was crowded even to the gangways, and the capacious building resounded for half an hour with inspiring melodies of praise. Unfortunately, however, the "young people" had been conspicuously crowded out, or at best relegated to the gallery by hundreds, to whom by no stretch of courtesy could that term be applied. Hence the chairman, Mr. Albert Spicer, found it necessary to address himself to "their representatives." Another year it is to be hoped that the area will be properly reserved. Mr. Spicer urged upon his imaginary audience that there was no reason to apologise for being Free Church people. The empire would be poorer were it not for what Nonconformity had done. Having enumerated the many directions in which the Free Church Federation had used its influence to good effect, he maintained that if the movement is to extend and develop as it should, it could only be through the influence of young people in Nonconformist churches; the rising generation of to-day will be the men and women of to-morrow.

A stirring address was given by Dr. George Hanson, in which man's greatness, according to the Bible, was set over against the view of a prominent naturalist of the day. The only answer to the question, Why is man here? was furnished by the Book of books. The Bible represented man as being essentially equal the wide world over. To know the value that God set upon the human race, a look must be taken at the cross of Christ.

Rev. S. Chadwick followed on Free Churchmanship and its duty. He alluded to the extent to which the little Dissenting chapels have contributed towards the building up of the nation and empire. Tracing the history of the two currents of Nonconformist Church life—Methodists and Independents—he found in the amalgamation brought about by the Federation, that the result of these two mighty forces coming together had been that the Independents had caught the evangelistic fire and passion, and that the Methodist was beginning to discover that which he had lacked, a civic conscience. Their work was twofold—to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ to perishing souls, and to apply the principles of righteousness as set forth in that Gospel to the civic, social, and economic conditions of the time.

An ovation awaited Gipsy Smith, and only subsided when he was joined by his daughter, and the two sang together "We walk by faith." In a racy and characteristic talk on the value of child life, the Gipsy made a moving appeal to his hearers to use every endeavour to win the children. "Do not look lightly on child conversion, for if you save an old man you save a unit; but if you save a boy, you save a multiplication table!"

TAKING EASE IN ZION.

Thursday morning saw an exceptionally large congregation in the Dome for Mr. McNeill's sermon. The day had opened bright and clear, and delegates might have felt justified in enjoying for a while the genial sunshine flooding the Front. But Mr. McNeill's earnestness and eloquent humour attract an audience under all circumstances. Taking for his subject the raising of one sick of the palsy—particularly that part of the narrative setting forth the dogged determination of the four individuals who carried the man to the Saviour—Mr. McNeill uttered a vigorous denunciation of the spirit of ease which marks the life of so many Christian churches. He prayed that their members might have the royal faith exhibited by these four men. As to the dreary statistics of churchgoers, he contended that Christ is still the greatest draw, and to enforce this point quoted the words of Mr. Moody—"If the Gospel is dead, it is the liveliest corpse I ever saw." Deploring the "kid-glove daintiness" and "shop-walker smile" prevailing in so many churches, he affirmed that if the lapsed are ever to be reached, Christians must bend their backs and lift! Let them take hold of the individual sinner in all his lapsedness, and God would take him into His own capacious hands, from which he would never slip.

"THE MAN IN THE STREET."

How to reach the outside masses was trenchantly treated by Rev. J. Brierley. The question was one of life or death, not only to the nation, but to the Church of God. The recent census was a fearful revelation, showing that unless the churches speedily and radically alter their methods, we shall ere long cease as a nation to be a worshipping people. Was there a man present who could be satisfied with the present state of things? With a steadily-increasing population the churches were equally steadily dropping in the rear, and at the present rate would soon be out of sight. It was not a time, however, to sound the knell of a dying cause, but rather to organize victory. The man in the street was not devoid of religious interest, and it is high time that the churches united to win him to Christ. It is a question of efficiency. We read much of John Bull and his commerce; criticism is rife as to his methods of seizing his opportunities abroad and placing his goods on the market. The Church must face its position. "It has a priceless article to offer, but is a perfect fool at putting it on the market! She must give up the worship of convention, and take to the business of saving souls." He paid an earnest tribute, from this point of view, to the sensible and practical efforts of the Wesleyans in Manchester and elsewhere, with their forward movements, and pleaded for an extension of such means in the churches generally. Let them be put where they are wanted, and built in a suitable twentieth-century style.

Then, again, ministers are in "the slough of a rotten system" of having to prepare three sermons a week, where, by a wise interchange of pulpits, and more resultant freedom to come into touch with the needs of men, they would become better preachers, and have more to preach about. This was how Dickens and Thackeray attained success in their special work; this is how the Church is to reach the masses—by contact with human nature, with human life, and above all with the living God. If we heed the modern cry for "efficiency" and apply it to Christian service, we shall in the future meet to discuss, not despairing statistics, but the evidences of the grandest revival the Church of Christ has ever known.

A paper from Dr. J. S. Banks (president of the Wesleyan Conference) was read by Rev. Enoch Salt, which emphasized the value of "lay" work in Nonconformist bodies, the preaching of the Word of God, and the spiritual conception of religion and Christian life. These are sources of strength which must always be kept to the front.

Are we losing our young men? This question was treated by Rev. W. J. Dawson, who pleaded earnestly for adaptation of methods suited to the spirit of the age.

A profitable discussion followed, in which elements of weakness were frankly pointed out, and foundations were laid which ought to lead to very practical results.

At this stage the sudden decease on the previous day of Rev. W. J. Woods, secretary of the Congregational Union, was announced by Rev. Thomas Law; and Dr. Townsend moved a resolution of sorrow and sympathy. This was seconded by Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, and received in solemn silence by the audience, who rose to signify their sad acceptance. Then came

THE LICENSING QUESTION.

Rev. W. Redfern (president of the United Methodist Free Church) moved a resolution of approval of the measures taken by the Government and magistrates, and called upon Free Church councils to put forth every effort intelligently to organize and secure the proper enforcement of the Act. The tyranny of the trade is one of the greatest menaces to the nation, which, as Lord Rosebery has said, must either throttle it or be throttled by it.

The weak point in the Act, as revealed by the seconder, Mr. George Tomlinson, M.P., is that it punishes but it does not cure. Therefore individuals must be saved one by one, and here the Church's opportunity comes in. The great power of personal abstinence, and the great protest of personal habit, must be laid before the Church as its duty, and as a stand against the growing luxuriousness of the age.

The fraudulent demand for compensation was demolished by Mr. W. Crossfield, M.P. As a licensing magistrate he gave details of the efforts of the Liverpool Bench, which had anticipated the Act by abolishing in twelve years no fewer than 420 licences without compensation, and 84 more since the Act came into operation. He advocated the dealing with licences by areas, and suggested a wide application of this principle. Mr. Adam Adams, J.P., of Lowestoft, accepted the measure as a first instalment of further reform to come.

Atrocities on the Congo, Forced Labour in South Africa, and Betting and Gambling were other subjects on which the assembly expressed its voice in no measured terms.

Rev. F. B. Meyer was then declared to be the President-elect of the National Free Church Council for 1904-5; and the invitation to hold next year's gatherings at Bristol was received with unanimous support.

FAMILY WORSHIP AND PERSONAL RELIGION.

The afternoon was taken up by the devotional session, and was a peaceful and solemn service. Two papers were read—one by Rev. J. H. Batt on "The Revival of Family Worship," and another by Dr. Forsyth on "The Need for a Revival of Personal Religion." The chief point emphasized by Mr. Batt was that personal piety lay behind family worship, and that attendance at worship on the Lord's Day was largely dependent on the spiritual character of the home life. Dr. Forsyth's treatment of his subject was marked by all the characteristics of a devout scholar, deeply in earnest concerning the greatest need of church and people—a revival of personal religion. His main contention was that we are suffering to-day from triviality, uncertainty, and self-satisfaction. To cure these maladies, the Gospel prescribes (1) for our triviality, a new note of greatness in our creed; (2) for our uncertainty, a new note of wrestling and reality in our prayer; and (3) for our complacency, a new note of judgment in our salvation. Dealing with these vices of the Christian life at length, the speaker went on to affirm that the remedy for triviality—the realization of the soul's greatness—could not be fed on philosophies, psychologies, or heroisms, but could only be sustained on the soul redeemed. With regard to the second vice, the Church has less need, for the hour, of sanctity than of certainty. Its first need to-day is certainty, out of which sound sanctity grows. For the ill of self-satisfaction there is but one cure—a deeper daily sense, not only of our own unworthiness, but of our perdition except for the mercy of Christ.

THE LOSS OF THE SUPERNATURAL.

Nothing could have been more fitting than the arrangement for Dr. Forsyth's discourse to precede the communion service. His words had touched the depths of feeling and conscience, and prepared all hearts for Dr. Pierson's brief address and the observance of the Sacrament that followed. In a similar train of thought Dr. Pierson lamented the loss of the sense of the supernatural, which he felt to be the source of all the ills existing in Church and ministry. There is a touch that brings supernatural consciousness and power, and another touch by which that consciousness departs—contact with the carnal and worldly. The secret to the great mystery of prayer is the touch that evokes virtue. It is the same with preaching. True preaching is simply the result of the Holy Spirit's working upon the human soul, and without it the ministry is shorn of its power, its authority, and efficiency. He feared that in this superficial age we are in danger of getting out of contact with God. If we do but claim of God the supernatural touch, we shall find the antidote for unreality, spiritual conceit, and egotism. Christ will become related to us, and Heaven will open before us new glimpses of the things that shall be hereafter.

CLOSING DEMONSTRATIONS.

The mass meeting at Hove Town Hall in the evening was chiefly attended by the general public, and was a striking testimony to the strength of Nonconformity in Brighton's West End. The chair was taken by Mr. W. Runciman, M.P., who gave evidence of a whole-hearted sympathy with the forces of Nonconformity to secure liberty and justice from the hands of the Government. He enforced the fact, however, that the first interest of the Free Churches is the spiritualizing of England.

Rev. Joseph Hocking, in vivid and impressive terms spoke on the decline of Atheism in this country. On the Continent it is also dying out, and has tears in its eyes and a sob in its throat. He pictured what the world would be if Christ were wiped off the slate of national life, and rejoiced that from the back of man's brain, and from the depths of his soul, there comes the demand for God.

A FALLEN ALTAR.

The audience wore a look of eager expectancy as Rev. John McNeill rose to speak. Needless to say, there was no disappointment, for while announcing a somewhat sober topic for his address—"Church-going and Public Worship"—the subject was dealt with as he alone could handle it. It was not all humour, however, for the audience was deeply moved as the speaker recited a passage from the "Cottar's Saturday Night," and recalled the simplicity of the family worship of a Scotch peasant, and his own boyhood days. Emphasizing the fact that the family devotions help public worship, he pleaded with his hearers to seek grace to re-erect the fallen family altar, which will bring back the church attendance. If people are to be got to church, Christians must be natural and drop the "Sunday mask." It would be no use taking their Sunday face anywhere else, for no one would have it! A plain word was spoken by Mr. McNeill to preachers: If you have anything to say, say it naturally, even though it has not three heads and an application!

The simultaneous meeting in the Dome may, from every point of view, be described as "great." Mr. Compton Rickett, M.P., as chairman, reiterated a note that had been heard at previous sessions, namely, that in spite of decreased attendance at places of worship, the very air seemed charged with interest in religion. It is freely discussed in the secular papers and magazines, and even in omnibus, train and tram. If the churches are comparatively empty, it points to wrong methods, and a wrong spirit in the conduct of religious service, and this is the question to be faced.

Rev. Geo. Jackson (Edinburgh), after deploring the absence of Methodist leaders at these meetings, hoped that the exigencies of the day arising out of the Education Act would bring men of all shades into line, for in all the history of Nonconformity there had never been a struggle on which they had entered that they had not won.

With practically unlimited time at his disposal, Dr. Clifford gave free scope to his burning oratory for over an hour on the subject of "Organized Religion in England in 1903." The present he considered to be a great crisis in the religious life of the country, such as we have not had to face since the Puritan revolution. The churches are not the measure of the religion of Christ, but His religion is the measure of the churches. This is the touchstone and standard of true religion and of what the Christian Church should be. We are told to "hear the Church." This he, for one, was quite willing to do; but it must be examined and weighed by the standard of the Spirit of Christ. He recognised the many and great qualities possessed by the Church of England, and especially in its missionary enterprise; but he found in it also a great danger to English Protestantism. It was far more of a "clergy church" than half a century ago, and the Roman movement was infinitely more aggressive. This is to render such service to the country as it had done in days gone by. In the matter of sittings and the attendance of Sunday scholars and communicants, the Free Churches enormously outnumbered those represented by the Establishment.

Of course the eloquent doctor soon led his audience into hot opposition to the Education Act, which he described as an Ecclesiastical Act framed to endow Romanism inside the Established Church, and laying down the principle that religion must be taught authoritatively only by the ordained priest. After critically examining a copy of "The Catechism for Catholics in England," Dr. Clifford enumerated four things which he said ought to be found in connection with any Church that claimed to be derived from Christ. It must be unpriestly. Jesus Christ did not belong to the priesthood; He was a layman, brought up as a carpenter. It must be a Church that was not exclusive, and priesthood was exclusive. It should be independent of Parliamentary irritation, dictation, control, and patronage. It was the fact that they had a State Church that made this Ecclesiastical Act possible, and as long as that union between Church and State continued so long would such Acts be possible. Then there must be a true brotherhood; there must not be any caste; the rich and poor men's places must be side by side; they must work together harmoniously. The last thing was the predominancy of the spiritual in the Church, which must be the one great outstanding distinguishing feature.

A MIDNIGHT MEETING.

Inspired by Gipsy Smith, a gigantic demonstration was held on Wednesday night after the evening meeting in the Dome. After prayer at the headquarters of the Salvation Army, some thousands of persons formed a procession, with two bands, and passed through some of the less known thoroughfares. Prior to this the public-houses had been visited by groups of workers, who invited the occupants to an evangelistic service in the Dome at 11 p.m. As the procession marched along it swelled enormously, until a countless throng poured into the building, and hundreds upon hundreds failed of entrance.

The scene within was remarkable. A strong representation of the moral "undesirables" were scattered through the audience, though it is to be feared that the seats were filled too hurriedly by others for whom the meeting was not intended. Had it commenced a quarter of an hour later, it is probable that more of the "outsiders" would have been brought in. Admission by ticket would have obviated in a large measure this disappointment.

Earnest addresses were delivered by the Council's missioners—Rev. J. Tolfree Parr, Mr. W. R. Lane, and Gipsy Smith—and in the result the hour of midnight found a considerable number of anxious ones upon their feet seeking the Friend of sinners. An after-meeting lasting till a quarter to one gave opportunity of personal dealing with these, and many were believed to have taken Christ as their Saviour.

IN NEIGHBOURING TOWNS.

On Thursday night some scores of ministers were dispersed throughout the neighbouring Sussex towns, addressing meetings that had been organized in connection with the Free Church movement. Thus the flame of interest was spread, and concluded the immediate efforts of perhaps the most notable Nonconformist gatherings of modern times.

From Our Readers.

LOTTERY CIRCULARS.

DEAR SIR,—These are again being widely circulated through the post. If every one interested in the putting down of the gambling spirit would post such circulars to the Postmaster-General, with a letter of protest, I believe he would be influenced by the many communications to bring before Parliament a Bill to permit of the examination of letters suspected of containing lottery circulars, with a view to the suppression of such.

I would at least suggest that your readers should try such action when they receive these circulars, and hope the day may soon come when these temptations to gambling may no longer be so easily brought into our homes.—Yours truly, John A. Boardman.

"THAT THE WORLD MAY KNOW."

DEAR SIR,—How are we to understand John xvii. 20, 21, R.V., "Neither for these only do I pray (margin Gr., 'make request'), but for them also that believe on Me through their word: that they may all be one; even as Thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee, that they also may be in us: that the world may believe that Thou didst send Me." It is not that the world may be "converted," but "believe" that "Thou didst send Me." Yet for centuries, and in our days, and even in Protestant lands, it is unbelief in the fact that the Father has sent His Son to be the Saviour of the world (John iv. 14) which is spreading, and not belief in it. Again, John xvii. 22, 23, "And the glory which Thou hast given Me I have given unto them, that they may be one, even as we are one; I in them and Thou in Me, that they may be perfected into one; that the world may know" (it is not now "believe," but "know," a step in advance) "that Thou didst send Me, and lovedst them, even as Thou lovedst me." Where does the world "know" and "see" this?

What is preventing the present realization of such glorious things? Is it the lack of oneness among Christians which is preventing the answer to the prayer of Jesus? or the unbelief of the Church of God? If there were a visible oneness in Christian lands, and this oneness were carried out, and made visible in missionary work in heathen (and especially in Roman Catholic) lands, would there not be a manifestation of the Holy Ghost in great power and in abundant blessing? What God commands, what Jesus Christ prayed for, must be possible for Christians to obey. Yet a sad fact strikes the world, and the world publishes it. The followers of Jesus do not manifest before us their oneness in Him. So the world justifies itself in the unbelief in the great fact, 1 John iv. 14, "We bear witness that the Father hath sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world."

Mrs. Spurgeon's Book Fund.

FRIENDS near and far away will be glad to find from the booklet, just issued by Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster, that the widow of the late great preacher is still able to continue the much-needed work of distributing books to poor pastors who cannot afford to buy them. Although the enterprise is not so extensive as it once was, the cash income for the two years ending December 31 last was £1,113, while the expenditure for the same period was £1,130. "The first thing which will strike those who know anything of the past history of my Book Fund is its decline and poverty, this latter fact being wholly responsible for the former," remarks Mrs. Spurgeon, who then shows that the applicants are as numerous and eager as ever. It is then added: "Very grievous has it been to me during the last year or so to decrease the number of books in the grants, or to refuse help for the present altogether.

"Loss of many generous helpers by death, the untoward influence of troublous times in the nation, a serious subsidence in my own resources, all these have conspired together to bring the Book Fund very low, and cause me grave discomfort. But the Lord rules and reigns. I am every day looking out for and expecting to see his hand outstretched for my deliverance." The number of volumes sent out in grants during the two years has been 10,113, besides great numbers of Spurgeon's sermons in English and other languages, tracts, magazines, pamphlets, &c. For the most part the books selected have been Mr. Spurgeon's own works, the "Treasury of David" alone having supplied 1,362 volumes. The number of grants in the two years has been 480, the recipients being of many denominations, including thirty-eight clergymen of the Established Church. The Auxiliary Book Fund, which gives to evangelists, &c., has also made 169 grants. The number of volumes distributed during twenty-seven years now shows the striking total of 199,315.

Mrs. Spurgeon says that the book distribution is "much more needful than many people dream of," and that the supplies have to be repeated. This remark applies with equal force to the grants of money and clothing from the Pastor's Aid Fund. "One grant of books is a great boon to a pastor thirsting for mental food and refreshment but . the very past makes him ravenous for more! You may rig out his large family with warm and suitable garments, but these soon wear out and get past mending, and must be replenished. The cares of ministerial poverty which are constantly met with are sufficiently touching, as are also the letters received acknowledging gifts received." Mrs. Spurgeon has many helpers who assist in their own way. Thus one will regularly supply the men of the London Fire Brigade with the weekly sermons; another will give a quantity of tea for enclosure in the parcels for the country.

Yesterday, To-day, and To-morrow.

"Live as if Christ had died yesterday, had risen to-day, and were coming to-morrow."—Luther.

Live thou as if but yesterday
Were seen earth's greatest wonder,
When Christ, the Victim-Lamb, expired
Amid Golgotha's thunder.
Live as if yesterday He died
To woo thee to His riven side.

Live, too, as if this very morn
He rose from death victorious,
And captive led captivity
In resurrection glorious—
As if thy Lord, this very day,
Stood where the stone was rolled away.

And live as if the coming dawn
Would see the Lord descending,
Ten thousand thousand angels fair
His Majesty attending.
Yea, live as if to-morrow's light
Would bring Him to Love's longing sight.

Tracts at Work in China.*

By Rev. Dr. GRIFFITH JOHN.

I AM glad to report an encouraging distribution of books made at the Triennial Examination held in Changsha in September last. The thought struck me at the beginning of the year that such a distribution might be possible. When, in June, Mr. Sparham and I called on the officials of the Bureau of Foreign Affairs at Changsha, we brought the matter up. The idea was altogether new to them; but, after a few words of explanation and persuasion, they expressed their willingness that the distribution should be made, and assured us that they could, and would, protect the missionaries engaged in the work. I must confess that the heartiness of the reply took me by surprise; but I felt sure that they spoke in good faith, and that they would keep their word unless something came in to make it impossible. The thought that tens of thousands of Christian books are now in the hands of the foremost scholars of Hunan ought to fill our hearts with gratitude and hope. I know enough of the scholars of Hunan to be assured that these books will be read and discussed. Let us earnestly pray that many among them may find, in the reading of these books, that knowledge of God in Christ which they so much need.

Our tracts are finding their way into every part of the Empire, and even to regions beyond the Empire. They are read by thousands, and tens of thousands of people. I find that even the officials are beginning to read them. Of late I have been coming into close contact with a good many officials, both in Hupeh and Hunan. With hardly an exception I have found them very friendly, and ready to listen to anything I may have to say about Christianity and its claims. Among the officials I have come across, there are not a few who have been reading our Scriptures and tracts.

There was a time when the officials would not condescend to look at books of this description; but that day is gone, and it is for us to take advantage of the change, and see to it that our best and most helpful books are placed in their hands. How many have been influenced by our books we cannot say; but that multitudes have been influenced by them, more or less, there can be no doubt whatever. We know that the publications of this Society have been owned of God in a very remarkable manner. They have been the means of salvation to many souls. Instrumentally they have given to the Church in China many converts, and not a few preachers and evangelists. There are even churches in China to-day that owe their origin to the reading of tracts sent forth by this Society.

THE NATIVE CHURCH OF CHINA.

What clothes this tract work with deep interest to my mind is its relation to the momentous work of building up a Christian Church in China. When I came to China, nearly fifty years ago, I had one great ambition above all things, to be the means in God's hands of doing something real towards building up a Church of Christ in the land. I believed then, and I believe now, that it is God's plan to save China through the Church, and by it the regeneration of this great people is to be achieved. I have no other hope of uplifting this people.

The first aim of the Church is to make the Chinese good, and by making them good, and through making them good, to make them strong. And this is the aim of the Society. Strength, apart from goodness, is destructive. You go on making the Chinese strong, without attempting to make them good, and within twenty years the yellow peril, so much talked about, and so much dreaded by some, will be more than a dream. But build up a strong Church in China, and the yellow peril will become an impossibility.

Thank God for the Church in China. The Church of about 300 members, which I found in China on my arrival, has grown into a Church of 100,000 communicants at least, not counting many adherents. Ere long these hundreds of thousands will become a million, and the million will become ten millions, and so on, with accelerated speed, till the Christian Church shall have become a mighty factor among the forces which shape the national life, and the principles of the Christian religion shall dominate the land.

The day will come when we shall have in China a strong Church, and a Church far more perfect in type than we have at present. But let us not despise the day of small things. Let us not despise the Church of the present. It is the Church of the living God, and is very dear to His heart. In the Church of the present we have the pledge and promise of the Church that is to be. With all its weakness and imperfections, it is

THE GRANDEST THING IN CHINA TO-DAY.

The main reason why I feel so deep an interest in this tract work is that I see in it a powerful instrument with which to build up the Church of God in China. Soon after I arrived in Shanghai, in 1855, I began distributing Christian books, and continued to do so all the six years I was there. I was a colporteur long before I became a preacher. No sooner did I reach Hankow than I began the work of book distribution here, and have stuck to it all these long years. I love the work, because its direct aim is to make known to men the way of salvation, to lead men to God through Jesus Christ, to deliver men from sin, and lift them into a life of holiness. I love it because of the glorious fruits it has borne in the past, and because of the still more glorious fruits it is destined to bear in the future. In the Church of the future these Religious Tract Societies will not be forgotten. They will be looked back upon as among the most potent agencies employed by the Church in chasing out the darkness and bringing in the Kingdom of our God.

Christian Unity in Poona.

FOUNDED in the year 1891, the Indian Christian Association, Poona, has had the support of evangelical missionaries, and has in some measure achieved the object for which it was inaugurated. By numerous lectures, conventions, &c., it has been the means of placing before the community its duties and responsibilities, and the possibilities of realizing oneness in Christ. Through Rev. J. Small, the Free Church Mission kindly placed their hall at the disposal of the Association. Besides being used as a reading-room, it has served the purpose of a common meeting ground for Christians of all denominations.

The United Free Church Mission having now sold the hall, the Association is deprived of its meeting place. In 1899 Rev. J. Small, veteran missionary, died, and the Association decided to perpetuate his memory by starting a memorial fund, and if possible to build a hall. The idea, however, was not then carried into effect owing to the number of conflicting memorials; but in view of the urgent need, the committee has decided to make fresh efforts to carry it out.

At least 3,000rs. are needed for a plain hall, and it is hoped that friends and well-wishers of the community will enable the committee to attain the object. Major G. W. Palin, Lynwood, Elm Grove Road, Salisbury, will be glad to hear from friends interested.

New Testaments for Hotels Abroad.—For some years past a great many of the hotels abroad have been provided with large-type Testaments for their bedrooms. These have been highly appreciated by the landlords; but though much has been done, a great deal remains still to be done. There are several hotels waiting to receive copies of the Word of God. Help towards supplying the need will be welcomed by Lady Macrae, 45, Moray Place, Edinburgh.

Demill Ladies' College.

A USEFUL purpose is served by the Demill Ladies' College at St. Catherine's, Ontario, in competing with the many convent schools. Rev. A. B. Demill, the esteemed founder, has devoted his life to the cause of education, conducted on Protestant principles. In placing high-class educational advantages within the reach of persons of moderate means, his aim has been to prevent the sending of Protestant girls to be trained by Roman Catholics at convents, which is frequently done from a mere sense of economy. Mr. Demill has had many difficulties and much opposition to encounter, but his enterprise has won general confidence among Protestant believers. It has the earnest commendation of the leading ministers of the various Evangelical denominations. "The moral and religious influence is excellent, and the teachers are well fitted for the work of literary and religious instruction." So wrote Rev. N. J. Perry, of St. Thomas' Church at St. Catherine's. "Every person interested in the well-being of young ladies," wrote Pastor C. E. Bolton, of the Congregational Church in the same city, "will be gratified to learn that the College can open its doors to people of limited means, and thus keep pupils under the influence of the Protestant Churches."

It will be remembered that the first college premises were destroyed by fire in 1896, causing great loss. The present building is an admirably suitable location for the work, but is encumbered by a debt of £4,000. Payments are in arrears, and the loss of the property, which would inevitably give great satisfaction to the Romanists, is feared. At the present time Mr. Demill is in England seeking to make known the need of the institution, and to secure help in conserving it for Protestant educational purposes. Friends who desire to co-operate may address him at 22, Clayton Park Square, Jesmond, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Paris City Mission.

THE latest report of the Paris City Mission shows that during the year several families have been led to frequent places of worship, many children, both Romanist and Protestant, brought under religious instruction; several persons have legalized their union as husband and wife, and many others have been received as Church members, so that by God's grace another year of good work has been accomplished.

At Clichy the work among the "chiffonniers" (rag-pickers), directed by Pastor Lorriaux, is most cheering. Many young men have signed the temperance pledge, and have become sober and seriously inclined. This is indeed an encouraging result, considering the class of persons influenced, as they are daily in contact with vice and temptation.

The number of missionaries now employed is ten, and it is greatly to be desired that two should be added to the number without delay. The secretary in England is Mr. Lockie, 21, Ballater Road, Brixton.

Port Said Sailors' Rest.

FRIENDS of the work done at the Sailors' Rest, Port Said, will hear with regret that its continuance is seriously jeopardised through lack of support. Through the recent visit of Mr. Lockie to England the debt on the building was decreased, but simultaneously there has been a reduction of income wherewith to meet current expenses. Mr. W. C. Thorp (13, Bonham Road, Brixton Hi S.W.), who knows the work, writes to us:—

"The lack of practical interest surprises me, especially considering the number of the Lord's people who visit Port Said en passant yearly. Without funds we cannot get any fresh supplies of literature to distribute, and we find ourselves in the peculiar position of having a new building promised us, the generous gift of Mr. John Cory (the plans are now on their way out), but no funds wherewith to meet present expenses! Unless help is soon forthcoming, we shall, I am afraid, have to take it as an indication to give up the work."

A Stirring Story.

THE LATE MRS. MARILLA B. INGALLS.

THE death of Mrs. Marilla Baker Ingalls at her mission station, Thonzé, on the evening of December 17, brought to its close a long and useful life, of which fifty-one years have been given to the evangelization of the people of Burma.

The following picturesque description, from the pen of Grace Mitchel Everts, of the beginning of the career of devotion which has just terminated, and of how Mrs. Ingalls in her earliest years learned to care for the heathen, may well be inserted here :—

"It was a Sunday morning, more than sixty years ago, in the town of Westerlo, N.Y. Here and there along the country roads the farmers' teams were coming to town bringing their Sabbath loads. On this particular day a minister was to be in the chapel who would show them a god from Burma. Down among the children sat a little nine-year-old lass, whose eyes were brimming as she listened to the story told of the distant people; and during the short recess between the morning and afternoon services, she mustered courage to go up and touch the little white god; and afterward, when they all went out and sat down by the country waggons to eat their dough-nuts and apples, she told some of the children that if she were grown up she would go and tell these people that the image was not God.

"When she did grow up into a sweet, merry girlhood, with a love for stories, she would sit at night in her room with her father's big Bible on her lap, looking long at the pictures of heathen idols; and would bow her head and pray with tears when she came to the Buddha of Burma. Finally, in 1851, when the good ship Marcellus sailed away to the East, it bore among its passengers a returning missionary, Mr. Ingalls; and by his side stood the slender figure of the little lass, whose heart had been so stirred at sight of the idol from Burma."

Only six years later the good missionary was called to his rest, and his brave young widow, instead of returning home at the call of loving hearts in her own land, listened to the plaintive appeal of her poor Burman friends: "Will the ma'ma leave us too? What shall we do now that our teacher has gone? Will not the ma'ma stay and teach us as he has done?" And she remained at her post.

A SUCCOURER OF MANY.

Mrs. Ingalls chose for her future home the jungle village of Thonzé. There were then but two or three Christians in the village, but twenty years later the converts were counted by hundreds, and many neighbouring schools had been started. From among the heathen men who first heard the story of the Gospel from her lips, a strong corps of native pastors has been trained, and she has been specially successful in winning Buddhist priests to accept Christ.

Her position was a unique one. Ever keeping herself in the background, she was unparalleled as a trainer of others; and would give a quaint description of the manner in which she instructed the earliest of the native pastors as to how to conduct the marriage service, pointing to two young trees growing in the compound to exemplify the relative positions of husband and wife.

These first years at Thonzé were years of great privation. In the rainy season, five days of travel were necessary before friends or medical help could be reached. Neither beef nor bread could be had; and rice, the chief food of the natives, she could not eat! For fifty years this brave woman has endured untold hardships, yet no one ever saw her discouraged. Many times has her faith been sorely tested; twice was her house burnt down, and the mission premises destroyed.

During the Dacoit troubles, great rewards were offered for her head. Well do we recall an account, given in her own vivacious way, of a visit of the Dacoits. Hearing of their desire to capture her, she quaintly remarked, "They would have found me a pretty good weight to carry away; but if I did have to go, it might not be a bad thing after all, as then I could get a chance of preaching to them!" The day she was surprised by a visit from these alarming neighbours, she was determined not to show the "white feather," though she confessed to inward tremors. She produced her revolver, which she kept but never used, and bade them put up a mark for her, to show what she could do with so deadly a weapon. With a prayer, that God would direct her hand, she hit the mark many succeeding times, much to the amazement of her visitors. Smiting their mouths, after the manner of natives, they left her and her deadly weapon unmolested!

Describing a tour down the river made with her preachers, she wrote: "I wished to visit a certain village; but the preachers objected, saying that they had been driven out of it last year. Nevertheless I persisted. Taking some of the party with me, and instructing them to be silent and obey me, I directed my steps to the idol temple, where I found ten figures of Guatama, each ten feet high, plastered and gilded. I saluted them, and asked if they were well and happy. But they made no reply. I then proceeded to scream at them, since they were apparently deaf! By this time I looked around and saw that more than a hundred men, women, and children had collected. Some, compassionating my ignorance, came forward and informed me that they could neither see nor hear, and that Guatama was dead, and had long ceased to exist. This made for me a good text! A god who was deaf, dead, and non-existent! The poor people listened with intense interest; they tore off the outside mats that the crowds could be better able to listen. For three days and nights we had hundreds of hearers, and presents of food were lavishly given to us!" A school was established, and among the converts were two priests, who became good jungle preachers.

A friend had presented Mrs. Ingalls with a large cast-iron dog, which she placed in front of the mission house, and from this animal she preached many a sermon on the folly of idolatry, impotent as it was to help or harm.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S GIFT.

Our late beloved Queen, being interested in her work, sent by her a handsomely bound English Bible to the Queen of Burma, with an inscription signed by her own hand. After the war of annexation, this Bible strangely found its way back to Mrs. Ingalls.

When the railways to Prome and Toungoo were started, with her usual large-heartedness Mrs. Ingalls interested herself in the railway employés. Two circulating libraries and reading-rooms remain as monuments of her loving interest in the community, by whom she will long be sincerely mourned.

Mrs. Ingalls' health had been gradually failing for nearly a year, but no great alarm was felt by her friends until within a few weeks of her death. Only about thirty-eight hours before she passed away, in her delirium she was planning to go and spend the day at Lepadan to preach. Her last conscious words were, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil."

This very imperfect sketch of a remarkable life may be fittingly closed by the tribute of Rev. John Cummings, as it appears in the American Baptist News, a recent number of which is devoted almost exclusively to reminiscences of Mrs. Ingalls. He writes :—

"By a forced march on the night of December 17 I managed to get across to Thonzé in time to attend the funeral of our revered Mrs. Ingalls. I shall never forget the awful hush in the dead of night, and her solemn lying-in-state in the great hall.

"I did not know till I reached Thonzé that she had passed away. She was laid out on a couch in front of the sacred desk of the 'church that is in their house,' at peace and rest; with native Christians and school-girls, weary with watching, and heavy with sleep, lying all about her on mats on the floor, while one alone kept vigil. Rich and poor, young and old, heathen, Christian, Mussulman, Hindu, and Buddhist, who had known and respected her, filed into the hush of her presence, and seemed unable to keep away. Even in death her mute lips had not lost their power to fascinate, and compel attention to the deep things of life, death, and eternity. She was buried at sunset among her own people in Thonzé, in an unfenced, uncared-for burial-ground. She refused to be buried elsewhere."

Who shall estimate the power of her long life for good! All the way along, from the Viceroy (for she had been entertained at Government House, Calcutta) to the humblest peasant, she touched life helpfully. Into remotest jungle villages, where no other white woman has ever ventured, she penetrated, carrying the Word of Life.

A great and noble life has ended. Let our sympathy and prayers go out to those who worked with her, and who feel her loss most acutely—especially to Miss Evans, her co-worker, who is bereaved indeed since the loss of her sister-friend! M. H

Enter Now.

To-day is the day of salvation!
"Come unto Me,"
Jesus still tenderly calleth,
Sinner, to thee.

To-day is the day of decision!
Nor will it last;
Long ere the hour of life's sunset
It may be past.

Enter thou into the kingdom.
There is a place
For whoso will, and a welcome—
Marvellous grace!

To-day is the day of probation!
Watch unto prayer;
Keep thou the words of the Master,
Ever beware.

This is the day of His service!
Here, here alone,
Work can be wrought that, eternal,
Winneth a crown.

This is the day of confession!
Now, midst the foe.
Who can the recompense measure
Christ shall bestow—

When at the dawn of to-morrow
His voice shall say:
"Enter thou into My glory,
Enter to-day."

Swedish Missionary Society.—In addition to the work on the Congo and in North Africa, the representatives in China of the Swedish Missionary Society have during recent months been meeting with much encouragement at Wuchang, Shasi, Sungpu, and Ichang, while aggressive effort has been pushed into Central Asia as far as Kashgar and Yarkend. In Southern Russia missionaries are labouring at Baku, Schemascha, Tiflis, Batoum, and Konstanzia. Further north the centres are St. Petersburg and Kronstadt. Swedes in England are ministered to at Sunderland and in the West End of London. Next June will be held the semi-jubilee of the Society.

A Prosperous Pastorate.

Rev. WILLIAM WILLIAMS, of Upton Chapel.

FOR a pastor to have completed a quarter of a century of continuous labour in such a sphere as that of Upton Chapel, Lambeth Road, is a fine testimony to his vocation and character. During many years Mr. Williams had C. H. Spurgeon on one side and Newman Hall on the other, both being only a very short distance away; but notwithstanding such counter-attractions, Upton Chapel, its pastor, and its people continued to flourish. Speaking of Mr. Williams in 1885, Mr. Spurgeon said: "I do not wonder that so many go to hear him; I would go myself if I could. His doctrine is sound and his spirit is fervent." Rowland Hill said of the first minister of the congregation: "I have a complaint to make against Mr. Upton, for he runs away with my chickens, and turns them into ducks."

The people had their first meeting-place in a street out of the Blackfriars Road, the pastor being James Upton, who came from Waltham Abbey. Mr. Upton died in 1834, and as the old site was taken by the Charing Cross Railway, the present chapel was put up in 1863, and named after him. When the late Mr. James Stiff presided at the centenary celebration, in March, 1885, he said: "I have known the church for fifty-nine years out of the hundred, and during that time many social changes have taken place, but a new way to heaven has not been discovered, and Mr. Williams preaches the same old Gospel that was proclaimed by Mr. Upton."

The manner of Mr. Williams' coming to Upton Chapel would appear to have been providential. He was the only son of his parents, who had a farm in the cheese-manufacturing village of Christleton, near Chester, in which town Spurgeon's early friend, Richard Knill, was then labouring. The family belonged to the Calvinistic Methodist Church, and could count up a long Christian ancestry. As an infant, young Williams was baptized by Mr. Knill. When he grew up, he showed a liking for study while he engaged in Christian work. It was proposed that he should enter the college which Welsh Methodists maintained at Bala; but such was the influence of Mr. Spurgeon's works on his mind, that he preferred the training of the Pastors' College, to which accordingly he applied. He was then, in the summer of 1872, twenty years of age, and Mr. Spurgeon said to him, "The only objection that I can see is that you are too young; but you will soon get over that. Come into the college, and God bless you."

After going through the two years' curriculum—which in general was far too short for adequate training—Mr. Williams accepted a pastorate in the coal-mining district of Clay Cross, Derbyshire. There he remained for three years, the result being a harvest of many conversions, some being men who had been very bad characters. It was on Mr. Spurgeon's advice that he settled there, and the revival of spiritual religion which followed was a rich reward. Urged to take another pastorate in the North of England, he gave preference to a call to Upton Chapel, and settled there over twenty-five years ago.

We need not wonder that shrewd friends who wished the young preacher well had many misgivings in regard to the wisdom of this decision. Like so many other once flourishing congregations in the near suburbs, that at Upton already showed symptoms of "going down" through those who made up the best households removing into more attractive neighbourhoods. In addition to this, it seemed impossible to such plain-spoken but kindly advisers that so young a preacher could hold his own when he had for near neighbours such celebrities as C. H. Spurgeon and Newman Hall. The result soon justified Mr. Williams' choice, however, for a tide of prosperity set in which has continued until this day. The work is well organized, and all the agencies of the church are in good order.

Mr. Williams really completed twenty-five years of active, continuous service in August last. In a general way, during that long period, he has enjoyed splendid health. One Upton pastorate alone, that of Mr. Upton himself, which extended through forty-eight years, has been of longer duration. Pastor and people have to be congratulated on the fact that, throughout the whole period, there has been a continuous stream of converts brought in from the world. In the vestry of Upton Chapel Mr. Williams has had interviews with upwards of 3,000 persons successively. The old members of the church and congregation are now found scattered over many countries.

Of course, the difficulty of keeping up the congregation tends rather to increase as years pass by. During a quarter of a century the neighbourhood has greatly changed; and what was once a residential district near the City for the well-to-do middle classes, is now densely packed with artizans and more humble work-people. It is indeed a good sign when people belonging to one congregation, and who are so widely separated, are still found to be so strongly united. Another promising symptom is that the people have contributed liberally to outside agencies; and they have dispensed hospitality on a large scale when occasion to do so has offered. There seem to be no members of the church on whose devoted affection the pastor cannot count.

Until the time of the great preacher's last illness, Mr. Williams enjoyed the privilege of Mr. Spurgeon for a friend. The two would go into the country together; while the Upton Chapel pastor was one of the favoured few who could join the Saturday afternoon receptions at Clapham, and afterwards at Westwood. His ministerial retrospect of twenty-five years is a pleasant one, inspiring gratitude for the past, affording encouragement for the future.

Another Invasion of Wales.—A further body of the Benedictine monks expelled from France have now acquired Glyn Abbey, near Kidwelly, with many acres of grounds and farm land, and it is stated that several other bodies of monks have purchased estates in North Wales. As scientific agriculture is the chief qualification of these immigrants, the Welsh farmers will have to face the competition of these capitalised and rent-free intruders, who will doubtless give practical illustration of the aptness of President Loubet's designation of them as "trading communities masquerading under the name of religion."

London's Child-Wastrels.

WHEN the late Lord Shaftesbury first set his hand to the great work of his life, nearly sixty years ago, it was estimated that there were about a hundred thousand juvenile street-arabs roving about London, untaught and uncared for. Since that day the Capital has grown enormously, countless slums have been "improved" away, the air has been sweetened, national education has been introduced; but, notwithstanding, we are still confronted with the fact that there are even now a hundred thousand children in London whose lives are running to waste because they are living quite outside every Christian and home civilizing influence. The removal of squalid tenements, with their disease-breeding environment, has in no sense done away with the need of child reclamation.

What came to be called ragged-schools, practically represented Lord Shaftesbury's chief life-work; and during his later years of failing strength, he would find consolation in telling how, in little more than a third of a century, 300,000 children had been saved from lapsing into criminal ways by this one agency alone. It was in the summer of 1901 that the council of the Ragged School Union commenced to give more earnest attention to children of the wastrel class. During the winter months special efforts are made to deal with such children, who have the particular care of the Drift Committee.

Some are disposed to ask, "What do you mean by drift children? Are they of the old ragged-school class?" To a certain extent the new departure may be a return to first principles. In some directions there may have been a tendency to confer benefit on children higher socially than the ragged and unwashed arabs of the streets, to whom Lord Shaftesbury and Dr. Guthrie were moved to hold out a helping hand. There are schools associated with the Union which have developed into admirable centres of secondary education. Cooking, dressmaking, languages, shorthand, music, singing, as well as divers arts and crafts, such as help young people to rise in the world, are very efficiently taught. This general advance shows how great has been the development of the ragged-schools since 1844; but in a vast city, where one-room life is so common, there will inevitably be a residuum of child life overwhelmed by squalor and its consequent degradation, which sends forth a pathetic appeal. To this the action of the Ragged School Union on behalf of drift children is a most befitting response.

Mr. John Kirk, secretary of the Ragged School Union, assures us that there is still "much land to be possessed." Sunday-schools are not increasing as they should do, while vast numbers of children, having no better rearing than that of heathens, are escaping from the oversight of those who would benefit them, probably not a few eluding our elementary educationalists altogether. It is from such that recruits for the ranks of crime are enlisted, while, if turned to good account, the human material is of sterling value. This work is fraught with boundless possibilities; its efficiency is only a question of adequate means.

At a conference on the subject, recently held, it was felt that the new departure on behalf of these drift children has associated with it immense possibilities for good. Youth, with its morning freshness, seems to be more amenable to good influences than is the case with later age. The new departure is a most thorough revival of ragged-school work on the lines followed by the original pioneers. The volunteers who are engaged in gathering classes in all quarters of London all alike bear testimony to the striking way in which the children have accorded them their confidence.

SUNDAY, March 22. Nehemiah viii.

TWELVE years had passed since Ezra's first arrival at Jerusalem. Seemingly, when Nehemiah arrived, the good scribe retired into seclusion, and devoted all his time and attention towards producing a complete edition of the canonical Scriptures. It is to his hands that we owe our possession of the Old Testament in its present form. This revival of love for the Word of God was the symptom of a great revival, and a cause of yet more religious fervour. Nothing so greatly promotes the moral and religious tone of national and individual character as the widespread reading of the Bible. An old Christian was once asked how he came to know the Bible so well, and he replied: "The whole secret is to read it, read it continuously from end to end, read it repeatedly, read it independently, read it prayerfully."

It is of no avail to weight the mind with such overwhelming grief as to render it incapable of performing its life-work. On the whole, a joyful heart, which is joyful "in the Lord," in His pardoning grace and ever-present help, is the strongest to do or suffer. Nor should we keep our joy to ourselves; it should flow over to those around us. We should go through the world as a band of music down the street, making all hearts gladder for our presence (Deut. xvi. 11-14). A further condition of the joyful heart consists in obedience; and the re-establishment of the Feast of Tabernacles in response to the words of the law gave a new incentive to the national gladness (17). Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I said, Rejoice.

MONDAY, March 23. Nehemiah ix.

The Feast of Tabernacles began on the 14th day and terminated on the 22nd (Lev. xxiii.). As soon as it was over, the seed of Israel separated themselves from all strangers (2).

The Word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, dividing. . . In this way we are brought face to face with God's ideals; and as we reach out towards them, we are naturally led to separate from all that hinders their realization in our lives. From the first chapter of Genesis, where we find that God divided day from night, the land from the sea, the waters above from those beneath, to the last chapter of Revelation, the Bible is full of the discriminating and dividing processes of God's Holy Spirit. Take, for instance, the life of Abraham, dividing from his land, his people, his nephew, the King of Sodom, from Hagar, and even from Isaac. We must come out and be separate. The work of separation from the women of the land had begun under Ezra, but had fallen into disuse; hence the need for this further effort at reform.

Several scaffolds or pulpits were placed for the Levites at convenient distances, so that they might lead the people in confession, without interfering with each other. Apparently the form of prayer had been drawn up beforehand by Ezra, so that there was a unity in their deep confessions of sin, and their recognition of God's great goodness to Israel.

Note several expressions in this prayer. Has God found thy heart faithful in the repeated trials to which He exposes thee (8)? God sees and knows our affliction (9, 10). We may grieve God's good Spirit, but He does not depart from us; nay, He instructs us (20). God subdues our enemies (24). All our history, with its rebellions, only serves to bring out more conspicuously God's covenanted mercy (32). It is good to have solemn days of covenant-making (38).

TUESDAY, March 24. Nehemiah x.

The particular points enumerated in this national covenant were: 1st, that the signatories bound themselves to abstain from marriage alliances with the heathen; 2nd, that they would carefully observe the Sabbath; 3rd, that they would let the land rest every seventh year, and remit debts; 4th, that they would contribute to the maintenance of the Temple service. The law required every individual to contribute half a shekel to the support of the sanctuary, but this was reduced in consequence of the general poverty to the third part of a shekel (32).

The feelings of deep repentance and sorrow by which the whole congregation had been moved, the sharp pain to which many of them had been subjected in tearing themselves away from women whom they may have sincerely loved, together with the fresh veneration for the law of God, seem to have led to a very high state of religious earnestness, the climax of which is recorded in the closing words of this chapter, "We will not forsake the house of our God."

So the heart of man assures itself, but how often its fond anticipations are deceived! The good it wills, it does not, and the evil that it wills not, it does. Only God can keep us steadfast. A friend of mine once wrote a covenant against sin in blood drawn from his arm, but he went back to his old ways. Only God can keep us true, by His Holy Spirit.

WEDNESDAY, March 25. Nehemiah xi.

The plottings of the Samaritans and others against Jerusalem, made it necessary that it should become more thickly peopled; but life within the city walls was much more arduous and perilous than in the open country or the provincial towns. It was against the Holy City that the whole frenzy and malice of foes were concentrated; therefore the unselfish courage and devotion of those who willingly offered to dwell there, was more highly appreciated. The post of danger is always the post of honour. How good it would be, if, in these modern days, more godly people would emulate this olden example, and come back to live in the cities, where the great populations gather, and where the salt is needed to arrest the festering corruption!

From verses 3 and 4, we learn that Israel—i.e., the returned exiles who belonged to the ten tribes—settled in the villages and country, whilst the tribes of Judah and Benjamin peopled the city. The children of Solomon's servants, also, were relegated to the country districts, because of their mixed descent (1 Kings ix, 20-22).

In verse 16 we have the outlook of the sanctuary; in verse 17 its inward economy of worship. Notice the careful provision on the part of the Persian monarch for the singers (23). Doubtless he realized that a man cannot sing unless his heart and mind are at ease. The heart is most vocal with music when life is happy, and the stream flows in translucent sweeps to the sea. Sing, O heart of mine, even in the darkest hours, for God will make a sure provision for thee as each day requires.

THURSDAY, March 26. Nehemiah xii.

As we walk through these ancient crypts, and notice the names of the deceased high priests, we are reminded by force of contrast of the repeated lesson of the Epistle to the Hebrews, that our Lord is a Priest for ever, and abideth a priest continually. To know Jesus as dying in the distant past is not enough; you must come to know Him as your daily Safeguard, Keeper, and Supply.

How carefully the record was kept, not only of priests, but of those who were over the thanksgiving, and of those who kept ward at the gates. Nothing is unimportant, which is done for God. Do not undervalue your office, and do not depreciate yourself. It is better to be a great soul in a small house, than a little soul in a great house. A philosopher boasted that he had the largest garden in the town, and when someone reminded him that it was a very ordinary size, he replied, "It is not a question of how many square feet it covers, but what you can put on it."

The wall was dedicated with great joy, with thanksgiving and with singing, with cymbals, psalteries, and harps. "And the singers sang loud." Evidently there was a great outburst of religious song in Jerusalem at this time, to which we must attribute many of the Psalms, especially the fifth book, or last division. A revived church is a singing church. Luther's hymns spread the Reformation throughout Germany. Wesley's hymns and Sankey's songs were born out of great revivals. When God brings again our captivity, our mouth is filled with singing. The very children rejoiced that day (43). And you will notice that the joy had a practical expression in the arrangements which were made for the maintenance of the order and beauty of God's House (44-47). Emotion without some act of self-denial is hurtful to our best life.

FRIDAY, March 27. Nehemiah xiii.

After exercising the office of governor for twelve years, the good Nehemiah repaired again to his duties in the Persian Court; but hearing of the great irregularities which had crept into the government of the Holy City, he seems to have obtained a renewal of his commission, and returned. In four particulars he exercised a most salutary influence.

1. As to Tobiah. The High Priest had greatly abused his position as guardian of the Temple, by allowing Tobiah, the Ammonite, to make use of one of its spacious and magnificent chambers on the occasions of his visits to Jerusalem; and thus, notwithstanding the distinct provisions of the Law (1, 2), Nehemiah had recourse to a most drastic remedy, by casting forth his household stuff. Oh that we could be as resolute in dealing with the evils of our own hearts and of the Church!

2. As to the service of the Temple. It had fallen into sad disorder. The dues of the Levites had not been paid them, and they had been compelled to support their families by the culture of their lands. This wrong was also righted, with strong words to the rulers who should have exercised better care for God's House. Be sure and maintain the holy habits of the devout life for yourself and household!

3. As to the Sabbath. Nehemiah had the city gates closed, that no burden should be brought in, setting his servants to keep the gates, and threatening the Tyrian merchants with violence if they persisted. Let us be equally rigorous to maintain a perpetual Sabbath-keeping in our heart, refusing to admit burdens.

4. As to intermarriages. Surely there is ample scope for a Nehemiah in our own time, for professing Christians too easily intermarry with those who have no part with Jesus Christ.

Notice his repeated appeals to be remembered (14, 22, 29, 31).

SATURDAY, March 28. Esther i.

This book has been ascribed to Ezra, or Mordecai. It is interesting because it accounts for the feast of Purim, and also because the name of God is not once mentioned in its chapters. But, it may be said, on the other hand, that there is no book in the Bible that gives greater evidence of the way in which Jehovah, whilst standing in the shadow, is ever "keeping watch above His own."

The Ahasuerus of this chapter is probably the well-known Xerxes, who invaded Greece, bridging the Hellespont with boats. The banquet which he is here described as giving, is disgusting to our modern taste for its prolonged and excessive gratification of the lowest passions of our nature. The redeeming features, however, were, first, that no man should be compelled to drink beyond his will (8), and, secondly, that the Queen had sufficient self-respect to dare to refuse obedience to her drunken husband—at least so some interpret.

The council that followed certainly sets men in the worst light. It must be remembered, however, that their minds were beclouded by the drink they had consumed. But their decision was lamentable. It would be a miserable state of things if a husband could not maintain his position, as the head of his family by the quality of his manhood, by the worth of his character, and by that unselfish devotion to wife and child, which is the true road to lordship. If men cannot do it thus, they will certainly never do it by force. Ah, what unspeakable indignities and sorrows women have suffered at the hands of men! Christ alone has put woman in her right place, and taught us, as His knights, to treat her with uttermost purity and chivalry. F. B. M.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

SECOND WEEK OF MEETINGS IN GLASGOW.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.)

As the meetings go on the tide of human interest, spiritual influence, and Divine power is rising, and on the bosom of the rising tide many precious souls are being floated into the kingdom of God. The human interest, to begin with at least, centres itself in the brethren who are the chief outstanding figures in the movement; and to those who "creep along canny," as many in North Britain do, the pace of the evangelists is surprising, interesting, and refreshing. There is a go-aheadness, and a push-on style about them, that is positively exhilarating to those who yield themselves to it; but the quickness of their pace is far in excess of the generally-slow Scotch methods in vogue.

If some of the slow-going precentors and leaders of praise in country districts had Mr. Alexander among them for a little he would well nigh take their breath away. "You people, don't drag," he will say, "Keep time. Don't be singing away back in the middle of last week. Now, then, come along!" And under his rebuke, which is always covered with a pleasant smile, the people put their music into the best marching order they can, and move along in splendid style. Then his colleague is not one whit behind him in strenuousness and push. Again and again he sings out the words, "You Christians, go to work!" and the words, "Go to work!" are spoken with such impetuosity that at times it seems as if by some linguistic feat the three words were compressed into one syllable.

EVIDENCE OF SPIRITUAL QUICKENING.

Beyond all question a spiritual quickening is going on, and people are being stirred up to sing, and speak, and work, in a way they have not been accustomed to. Some are becoming a wonder to themselves and to others, in the way they are casting aside their reserve and diffidence, and speaking out about salvation. The slow, measured, leisurely gait is being abandoned in favour of a greatly accelerated pace, and this is having an influence for good on those who have been merely lookers-on.

The meetings during the second week have largely increased in the matter of attendance, though the proportion of unconverted attending has not been so large as those most keenly interested desire to see. Of those who come, however, numbers are finding their way to the Saviour, and entering into possession of the life that is life indeed. Dr. Torrey's addresses, containing, as they always do, clearly-stated points, on which he hangs as pegs the details of anecdote, illustration, and exegetical comment which he marshals for enlightening the mind, and creating faith among his hearers, are easily followed. When he deals with various phases of unbelief, such as Universalism, Agnosticism, Theosophy, Materialism, Christian Science, and so on, his strong convictions show themselves, and his own attitude towards such doctrines is made quite clear. He leaves no doubt in the minds of his hearers as to what his own position is, and this greatly helps to strengthen his ministry.

CONDEMNATION OF DRINK AND DRUGS.

In regard to intoxicants, narcotics, and soporifics, he speaks with no uncertain sound. As that which is ruining multitudes, he is opposed to drink in every shape and form. Tobacco he abhors; while morphia, opium, chloral, and cocaine, which are debasing many, he vigorously condemns. His convictions are matured, and having believed he speaks, and speaks with emphasis and assuredness. He has not pleased everybody, and it is not likely that he would be of much use if he did. His trenchant invectives against sin and evil habits may have hit hard the man, who on being personally spoken to at the close of one of the addresses about salvation, said to the worker, "Do you know me?" "I do not," was the answer. "Well, I don't want to know you," was the cutting retort; to which the kindly reply was made, "But I want you to know the Saviour."

A NOTEWORTHY COINCIDENCE.

Some cheering cases of conversion may be noted here. On the second Sabbath of the mission, at the mass men's meeting held at night, one young man among others came out to the front seat. He was personally conversed with by Mr. W. M. Oatts, who discovered that the young man attends the same church as himself. When, after some conversation, he had professed to trust the Saviour, Mr. Oatts said, "Will you confess Christ at home?" "That will not be hard to do," he said, "my father is here." Both of them rose and went back to where the father was sitting, and he received the tidings of his son's faith with great joy. Then opening his Bible, the father showed to Mr. Oatts the date of his own conversion written on the flyleaf of it. Singularly enough it was Sabbath, March 8, 1874, he being one of the converts of the Moody and Sankey mission of that time; and now on Sabbath, March 8, 1903, twenty-nine years later, his son is converted in the Torrey-Alexander mission, the coincidence in the matter of date being a very pleasing and striking one.

Another case was that of a woman whose little boy took her home a ticket announcing the women's meeting on Sabbath afternoon. She came to the meeting, heard Dr. Torrey preach on the text, "A Man shall be an hiding-place," and ere she left sought shelter by faith in the Hiding-place. On the very next day she made a good commencement by leading a precious soul to Jesus.

MINISTERS' MEETING.

One of the specially interesting services of the week was the ministers' meeting, which was held in the Christian Institute, on Tuesday forenoon, at eleven o'clock. An invitation had been given to ministers, missionaries, and evangelists, and over 500 responded, though among the audience there was a sprinkling of business men, among others Mr. R. Hunter Craig, M.P., the well-known temperance advocate. Dr. Torrey said the sight that confronted him was one of the most inspiring he had ever looked on in his life, though he had looked forward to that meeting with shrinking, for what was he that he should preach to preachers? But whatever his fears or feelings had been, or were, he certainly is worthy of credit for using great plainness of speech; yet it was plainness of speech that no exception could be taken to, because everything he said was said in a kindly way.

The business of the ministry was summed up under three heads—first, to seek to save souls; second, to feed the flock; third, to set others to work; and to these three points the attention of his audience was directed. He confessed that in the early days of his ministry he had preached wrong doctrine, and in so doing had poisoned the flock. He did not willingly give poison to the flock. What he preached was preached honestly and with all sincerity, but the doctrine was poison all the same. His plea for training church members to work was admirably put, and ought to have a beneficial practical outcome.

AMONG BUSINESS MEN.

The meetings for business men which were commenced on Wednesday, the 11th, in Renfield Street U.F. Church had from the very first day the promise of success. Six hundred people or thereby were present at the opening service, at which Dr. Torrey gave an address on "Why I believe the Bible to be the Word of God." It was a timely and a valuable utterance; and the reasons adduced for believing the Bible to be the Word of God were such as could not be questioned, related as they were to the Person of our Lord Jesus Christ. His signature, it was argued, stands good for all time, supported as it is by His beautiful life, His wonderful words, His miracles, His influence on history, and His resurrection from the dead. The speaker was in "good fettle," and his various points, as they were driven home, elicited the manifested approbation of his hearers.

VISITORS FROM MANY QUARTERS.

The afternoon meetings at St. Andrew's Hall have afforded Dr. Torrey and his colleague great opportunities for making their influence felt over a wider area than their voices can reach, not reckoning the Press reports, as from many towns, within an hour's distance of the City by rail, workers have been coming to share in the good things provided; and these, carrying back a sense of the gracious influences at work in the meetings, will in turn aid in fertilizing fields miles away from the voices of the evangelists. From as far north as Aberdeenshire and Inverness-shire, and from as far south as Dumfriesshire, workers have been coming to tarry for a day or two, to see the workings of God in the saving of men, and to obtain refreshment for themselves. The presence of Christian workers from so many different places shows the spirit of expectancy that exists, and surely betokens something more than can yet be registered.

Each afternoon Mr. Alexander has made the first part of the meeting one of song and testimony combined. Though three o'clock is the advertised time for starting, the steam is always turned on and the wheels set in motion ten or fifteen minutes in advance of time; and while the address is looked forward to by many as the staple part of the service, Mr. Alexander's leadership of his part is greatly enjoyed. One day he gave testimony himself about a man that was put right in his soul through the "get right with God" card, thousands of which he expected would soon be scattered throughout Glasgow; and on another day he read a letter received from Stornoway, telling of a good work that had been started there among the fishermen through the singing of the "Glory song." He also calls on others to give reports, sometimes naming those he wishes to speak, and at other times throwing the meeting open for anyone, if they have "anything good to tell."

A "WAKE-UP" DEMONSTRATION.

Mr. R. Logan, of the Tent Hall, gave a report on one of the days of a great "wake-up" demonstration which took place on Saturday, 7th inst., in which thirty of the workers acted as sandwich-men, carrying large boards with striking texts pasted on them. Each man carried a double board, so that whether they were looked at from behind or before, some startling word faced the eye of the onlooker. Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander were both much interested in the report of the demonstration. Mr. D. J. Findlay on the same day told of the cheering results that were being met with from day to day as the mission went forward; and Mr. John Morrison, of the Seamen's Chapel, has also on different days had something encouraging to tell of the signs and tokens of God's working that he meets with in moving about.

A TYPICAL EVENING.

In the evening services there is an interest that does not attach itself to the other meetings held during the day, as at them the Gospel is preached with the aim of winning the unconverted, and in the second part of the meeting the watchers for souls get to work to gather to the Saviour the wandering and the weary. Taking Tuesday, for instance, as an example, the congregation, numbering between 2,500 and 3,000, was the largest that had been present on any week-night from the commencement of the mission.

Mr. Alexander gave out in the early part of the meeting the familiar hymn, greatly loved by many, "Oh! happy day that fixed my choice," &c., a hymn which, on being sung, revived tender memories in the minds of not a few.

Pastor Findlay led in prayer, thanking God that they were tracing the marks of His footsteps as the days went by. After the notices had been given out by Mr. Oatts, came the sermon founded on Acts iv., 12; "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other Name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." The points of the address were: Every man needs salvation; Jesus is the Saviour; there is no other Saviour. When the sermon was finished, those who were willing to trust the Saviour were asked to stand up. Several did, but not many. This was followed by a sweet solo from Mr. Alexander, and then an opportunity was given to any others to stand up who had not before done so. Then all who had stood up were asked to come forward.

Next, every one present professing to be saved was asked to stand, which the bulk of the great meeting did. All were requested to remain standing, and in giving out a hymn, Dr. Torrey requested, as is his usual, that no one should leave during the singing of the first verse. By this time, the workers, with their badges on to distinguish them, were busy among the halting and wavering, who were urged to make the great decision. When one hymn had been sung through, another was given out, those of the congregation who had remained, numbering probably a third of the whole, standing all the while. This was continued for twenty-five minutes, during which time one and another of those who, through personal dealing, had been "altogether persuaded" were led to the front.

Among others who took their place on the "decision seat" in front of the platform was a fine, handsome looking soldier arrayed in white tunic and tartan kilt, who came down from the gallery by himself without any worker attending him, and bravely stepped forward. To him Dr. Torrey's heart evidently particularly warmed, as he reached down his hand from the platform and gave him a special handshake. The result of the evening meeting was that forty-nine inquirers' cards were filled up.

WHISKY AND THE BIBLE.

Thursday was a dripping day, and the afternoon meeting suffered in consequence; but there was no diminution in the size of the audience at either the business men's meeting or the evening gathering. At the former, at which arrangements were now made for the presence of ladies in the gallery, the second address on Reasons for Believing the Bible to be the Word of God was delivered, and the plaudits with which the audience punctuated its delivery showed how highly it was appreciated. Friday's meeting was a bit larger, and in the course of the third address on Reason for Believing in the Bible, some practical home-thrusts were made. Believing as he does that many men turn from the Bible when they turn into sin, Dr. Torrey depicted a man going into a public-house with a Bible in his hand, laying it down on the counter and asking for a glass of whisky. The surprise of the attendant at the bar at seeing the Bible would likely lead him to say, "Beg pardon, sir; what was it you asked for?" By this illustration, the incongruity of the situation was enforced and clearly apprehended.

The same afternoon Mrs. Torrey gave a quiet talk to a company of about eighty sailors in the hall of the Brown Street Seamen's Chapel on "The Snares of Satan." Snares such as drunkenness, pernicious reading, and bad company were instanced, and at the close of the address some were conversed with personally about salvation. In the evening, Mr. Morrison, the seamen's missionary, with the aid of his helpers, managed to gather together a contingent of about forty sailors, and escorted them to St. Andrew's Hall, where seats were found for them in the balcony, to the right of the speaker, right opposite a number of soldiers who occupy seats nightly on the other side.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. Alexander has, on many nights during the mission, been getting the soldier lads to sing a chorus by themselves, and on the first night of their appearing he got the sailors to do likewise. All such arrangements, however little they may seem, contribute items of interest, and add to the success of the meetings more than a mere superficial observer might suppose; and, in carrying on the mission towards a successful issue, Mr. Alexander's musical tact is manifestly an important factor, as it helps to dispose of the freezy attitude so prevalent in religious meetings. By his sanctified skill, the atmosphere of Christian thought and feeling is warmed up, making it impossible for the unsaved to remain unaffected and unimpressed by the conditions created around them.

Dr. Torrey's Thursday evening address was on the text, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest" (Matt. xi. 28). The burdened were graciously invited to the Saviour, and over forty names were taken of those who made profession of laying their burden of guilt down at Jesus' feet.

Friday evening's text was: "These are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that, believing, ye might have life through His Name" (John xx. 31), the title being: "How to obtain Eternal Life." The attendance was the largest week-night attendance to that point, probably over 3,000 being present. As usual quite a number of precious souls inquiring the way of life either came or were led forward at the close, all being individually dealt with. That many were deeply and seriously moved was shown both by the tears that fell, and the earnest attention paid to all the counsel imparted. When "What must I do to be saved?" becomes the uppermost and foremost question in the mind of any one, the marks of the Spirit's inward working soon reveal themselves in the deportment and bearing of the individual concerned. As all workers of wide experience know, anxiety is sometimes feigned when monetary help is desired; but real, genuine anxiety is a quality of soul easily discerned, whether with or without tears, by every Spirit-filled believer. At the close of the after-meeting Dr. Howie, Moderator of the United Free Church, led in prayer on behalf of one and all, and then the curtain fell on the second week of the mission.

COUNSEL FOR WORKERS.

At 9.30 on Sabbath morning nearly 1,200 assembled in St. Andrew's Hall to hear Dr. Torrey give an address on "How to Win Souls to Christ," and such an assemblage furnished the preacher with a grand opportunity for presenting the theme he had been announced to speak on. In the course of his excellent address he referred to the composition of the meeting, and said that he considered it to be "a picked audience," which was certainly a correct description, as there were very many there personally known to us who are pre-eminently winners of souls. But for others who have never tasted the joy and shared in the luxury of leading men and women to the Saviour, the truths spoken were certain to prove an incentive. His words were: "Be thoroughly converted yourself; which means, put away all sin out of your life. Make absolute surrender to God. Rest in Christ and in Him alone for victory over sin. Have the assurance of your own acceptance with God. Know what to tell inquirers to do. Have love. Pray. Have the power of the Holy Ghost. Know the Word of God." On each of these points some practical comment was made.

When the meeting had closed, and the people were dispersing, one could hear such remarks as, "That was grand, wasn't it?" and so on; indicating that an appreciative hearing on the part of many had been given to the word spoken. A supply of the "Get right with God" cards was distributed throughout the meeting prior to the delivery of the address, and the workers were asked to "sow the town down with them." "By all means save some" is the Apostolic motto, and the silent messengers will most assuredly not go their rounds in vain.

A BUSY AND FRUITFUL DAY.

A great flood of interest swept through the afternoon and evening meetings. The dimensions of the audience at the 2.30 p.m. meeting, which was for women only, surpassed that of the preceding Sabbath, in that more of the aisle space was occupied by those who, if they wished to hear the Word, had to stand right through the service. More than four thousand women were inside the building, and Dr. Torrey preached on "What it costs not to be a Christian." The things sacrificed were as follows:—Peace, joy, hope, true womanhood, God's favour, Christ's acknowledgment in the world to come, eternal life. Fifty-eight cards were handed in by the workers at the close of the inquiry meeting which followed the address, containing the names of those who had professed to receive Christ as their Saviour and Lord, and other three were received later—an encouraging number truly.

The great hall at night was crowded in every corner with men, and was an impressive and a magnificent sight to look upon. After all the seats available had been filled with the numbers that streamed in, hundreds had to rest satisfied with maintaining a perpendicular position throughout. The meeting was a genuinely representative one of true, honest labour. The horny-handed sons of toil were there en masse, in their best clothes, and, with all the grime and marks of daily toil conspicuous by absence, they looked a handsome, healthy, decent set of men. To see such a crowd of men flock together to hear about salvation is something that every lover of souls, and every person interested in the public weal, should be thankful for in this unthinking age, when multitudes distinguish themselves by their apathy and unconcern as to their souls' interest.

125 INQUIRERS' CARDS.

The address, which ran on the same lines as that delivered in the afternoon, was urgently pressed home; and in the second meeting the growing interest rose to a high pitch as one and another made straight tracks for the penitent form. The workers were kept busy for a long time thereafter. Some among the penitents were backsliders, men who had known the Lord, but had gone back from Him; others had been resting satisfied with a formal profession, but were now convinced they needed a life to which they had boen strangers; and then there were those who had never made any profession, but now, by the grace of God, were determined to believe in and receive Jesus as their Saviour.

Mr. Alexander's very suitable and appropriate solo, given at the close of Dr. Torrey's earnest address, was effectively rendered, and could not but aid in bringing to the yielding point some of the results afterwards manifested. The refrain was:—

Will you believe and Jesus receive,
For He is standing here?

The hush that fell on the meeting in the moments that intervened in the singing of the last line, and ere the last word—"here"—dropped from his lips, were moments pregnant with great issues. The silence was deeply and fruitfully impressive, and only when the "Books" are opened will the fruit of those moments be fully known. Sixty-four cards were filled up with the names of men who had professedly accepted Christ, making a total of 125 names chronicled for the day; but who will venture to say that there was no more beyond?

Claremont Mission, Cricklewood. — Friends who are familiar with the circumstances under which this work originated among the Midland Railway Company's employés will welcome the third annual report just issued. It is a record of fruitful endeavour. Cottages have been visited with a view to dealing with young and old, as God has opened the way. The workers have experienced much joy in their labours, and the efforts have been abundantly used by the Spirit, and souls have been won to Christ. The Gospel services are well attended, as also the Sunday-school. The different branches of the mission are undertaken by the helpers in a spirit of persevering devotion.

Other Evangelists at Work.

Rev. F. C. Spurr and Dr. Harry Guinness in Edinburgh.

Dr. Harry Guinness had a long-standing arrangement to give missionary lectures in the Synod Hall, Edinburgh, on several days of last week; but, hearing that the United Mission begun by Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander was to be continued by Rev. F. C. Spurr, he at once put the hall at the services of the committee, and on the invitation of Mr. Spurr joined heartily in the work now going on in the city. The arrangement has proved a very happy and also a very fortunate one, as Dr. Guinness was able to take up the work when Mr. Spurr, for a day or so, was incapacitated through a cold.

Last week opened with the usual services in the Empire Palace Theatre, on Sabbath afternoon, for women only, and in the evening for men only. Both meetings were crowded. Dr. Guinness addressed the women and Mr. Spurr the men, and Dr. Guinness also spoke to a crowded audience in the Synod Hall at the same hour that Mr. Spurr was speaking to the great gathering in the theatre. Many inquirers were dealt with at all the meetings. Only the Day will declare the full result.

The noon meeting so long held in the hall of Carrubbers Close Mission, High Street, has been transferred to the new town, and is now being held in the Gartshore Hall, George Street. The hour also is altered from 1.5 p.m. to 1.50 p.m. Dr. Guinness conducted the meeting every day last week. Each time it was largely attended, and it is hoped that the change in place and hour may continue to prove advantageous in securing a good meeting. Mr. Spurr takes the meeting this week.

On Monday there was a division of labour at the Synod Hall. Dr. Guinness gave the address at three and Mr. Spurr at eight. On Tuesday the order was reversed. On Wednesday Mr. Spurr was suffering from loss of voice owing to a cold contracted at the theatre service on Sunday. Dr. Guinness took the afternoon, and Rev. John Smith, D.D., took the evening meeting. On Thursday, Mr. Spurr took both services. On Friday Dr. Guinness, being free, took the evening service to give Mr. Spurr's voice every chance for his heavy labours on Sabbath.

The meetings have shown a steady increase in attendance, and the interest deepens. Every evening there are large numbers coming out definitely for Christ. On Sunday, March 15, when the Empire Theatre was not available, having been engaged for a Sunday concert, the usual women's meeting was held in the Synod Hall, and the men's meeting in the Lyceum Theatre. Both were large gatherings, and over twenty on each occasion made profession of having accepted Christ.

Rev. John McNeill at the "Edinburgh Castle, E."

The missions held from time to time in London by Rev. John McNeill always awaken keen interest among those who are deeply stirred by the prevalent neglect, by the masses of the people, of the claims of the Lord Jesus Christ. Moreover, the rousing news of his recent mission at Bristol had drawn attention to the fact that the evangelist was in the south country, and that a remarkable awakening was occurring in connection with his labours, so that his coming to London was eagerly looked for.

To reach the people of Limehouse and the East London dock district, it would be difficult to find a more suitable centre than Dr. Barnardo's capacious mission church, the "Edinburgh Castle," and here Mr. McNeill commenced a mission on Saturday evening last, when he received a most cordial greeting at tea by a large company of ministers and other workers in the Lord's vineyard. East London bristles with problems, both spiritual and social; but here and there, amid the desert of general neglect of things Divine, there are to be found encouraging undertakings in church, chapel, and mission, that make for the enlightenment of the people, and where the glorious Gospel of the blessed God is faithfully preached. Many of these were represented at the gathering.

Mr. Walter Notman, superintendent of the "Castle," in the course of a letter which breathes praise to God for the blessing already given says: "Later in the evening a large audience assembled to pray for blessing on the mission, as at this meeting Mr. McNeill gave a telling address on 1 Chron. xii. 22. For over an hour the evangelist held his audience in rapt attention as he brought home some practical truths springing from the thought of believers being 'helpers of God.' It was a message full of stimulating lessons.

"The Lord's Day broke bright and hopeful; the children of God were full of expectancy, and they were not disappointed. There is a large body of earnest people in membership at the 'Castle,' and by their prayers and fervent sympathy the preacher was much helped. Each message, morning, afternoon, and evening, was laden with precious truth, handled and proclaimed in Mr. McNeill's unique way, and telling upon the audiences in a convincing manner. Truly the Lord spoke to the thousands who were gathered. It was an encouraging sight to see this large hall filled with an eager throng of people, all listening earnestly to the words of life as they fell from the preacher's lips, and to watch with what deftness he was enabled, by the help of God, to handle the great crowd. We are full of praise to our God for the gracious tokens of His presence already given in these opening services. Will readers pray for this work, that the Lord may be greatly glorified in the salvation of souls?"

In the afternoon (on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the P.S.A.) Mr. McNeill's address was of a deeply interesting autobiographical character. In a series of charming pictures of his early life, the preacher enforced the advantages of home religion. "It is good," said the evangelist, "in the early, plastic years to instil an instinctive reverence for the Day of God, the Book of God, and the Man of God." Family worship, the association of Christianity and cheerfulness, the practice of abstinence from intoxicating liquors, were in turn dwelt upon by the speaker, who showed that much depends upon home training as upon the pulpit. He referred to the Daily News statistics of church attendance, and asked his hearers to be concerned about them. "God help us to keep up the dear old processions—the processions of the whole family to the Lord's House on Sundays. We believe in better houses for the people, and we also believe in better people for the houses." Mr. McNeill's fresh and happy treatment of the subject captured the attention of the great audience.

The mission will be continued throughout this week, each night at eight o'clock (excepting Saturday), also next Sunday at three (for men), and in the evening at seven o'clock.

Mr. Josiah Nix at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

On Sunday, March 1, Mr. Josiah Nix commenced a ten-days' Mission in the Dilston Road Wesleyan Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Careful and thorough organization, and a week of special prayer under the guidance of the beloved superintendent, Rev. J. Denholm Brash, prepared the way. From the first a lively interest was manifested and was fully maintained. Crowds came to every service, and on two occasions the doors had to be closed and hundreds turned away. The last three days, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, the congregations were almost too large to be efficiently dealt with.

The holy influence experienced on the first Sunday intensified as the week went on, and at an all-night Consecration Meeting, at which we found ourselves in the midst of a glorious old fashioned revival, the Church members were quickened and greatly blessed, and were then ready for every kind of work. Bible readings were well attended; the Mission Band, 100 strong, paraded the streets before every service; and crowds came to see, the whole neighbourhood being roused. No fewer than 328 persons passed through the inquiry rooms, and 482 temperance pledges were taken.

Never in the history of our Church has such power and blessing been felt, and many to-day are church members, rejoicing to the full in a new-found salvation, and being fully determined to make their lives more useful in saving their fellows, "saved to work as well as saved for heaven." C.

Mr. Charles Inglis in America.

The missions conducted by Mr. Charles Inglis in connection with the "Twentieth Century Gospel Campaign" are being wonderfully owned by God. During the past two months he has been holding union meetings in some of the largest cities. Recently he was holding special services in the city of Brooklyn, and perhaps never since the days of Mr. Moody's visit has there been such a widespread interest and such a wonderful work of grace. The last Sunday that he was in that city, over 7,000 people listened to the Gospel from his lips, and hundreds of people professed to receive blessing. In Warren, Pa., the whole city seemed to be greatly stirred, so much so that crowds of people flocked to his services, though he preached sixteen times a week. The largest buildings were filled to overflowing, and the auditorium of the Y.M.C.A. was crowded to his afternoon Bible lectures. He has recently paid a return visit to Providence, R.I., and has been holding services in that city three times a day. The Opera House has been crowded with all classes of people, and the last day of Mr. Inglis in the city will not easily be forgotten. Many were deeply anxious about their souls, and in one service over fifty decided for Christ.

It has been my privilege to know Mr. Inglis for a good number of years, and I think never has he preached with greater power and acceptance than during the last five months he has visited our shores.

Many of your readers will be delighted to know that the Fulton Street Noon Prayer Meeting still goes on with unabated interest, and it is a cheering sight in this city of hurry and rush to see numbers attending this gathering daily. Perhaps never was there such a stream of prayer ascending to God from this sacred and hallowed place as now, and perhaps never were there so many remarkable answers to prayer as we are privileged to receive. F. H. Jacobs.

Mr. Newton Jones at Southampton.

Mr. Newton Jones, the Sunday-school Union missioner, has just concluded a very helpful mission at the Albion Congregational Church, Southampton, of which Rev. Henry J. Perkins is pastor. There is a large Sunday-school connected with this church, numbering over 700 scholars, and there are a great many young people in the congregation, so that there was ample material to work upon. The officers and teachers, under the leadership of the pastor, made good preparation for the mission, so that when Mr. Jones came upon the scene he found all in readiness for his labours. The mission opened on Sunday the 1st, when services were held in the afternoon and evening. During the week the evangelist conducted four services for children, and his admirable addresses will never be forgotten, either by the children or the workers. On two occasions he used his "flag signals;" on another occasion held a "Museum service," the young people bringing objects mentioned in the Bible, with texts attached, and the address was entirely based on the objects brought; another address was a "Chalk Talk"—the blackboard being used with excellent effect.

At the services for young men and women, Mr. Jones took two "panorama" subjects, and gave his address on "Rags to Paper," all of which were very impressive. On the Saturday night there was a limelight lecture, "Is Life Worth Living?"

On the second Sunday Mr. Jones had a meeting for boys at 9.30 a.m., and secured nearly seventy members for the Anti-Cigarette League. At 3 p.m., there was a large service for young people, and at 6.30 the church, seating over 1,000, was crowded in every part, when the subject was "The Gospel Feast." It was an impressive service, and many decisions for Christ were the result. On Monday and Tuesday there were Bible readings in the afternoons, which were well attended, and services in the evening. Mr. Jones gave "The Story of My Life" at the closing service, when there was a large and deeply interested audience.

A very large number of young people and many older friends came out boldly on the Lord's side, so that the workers are greatly cheered and will go on with their work with renewed zeal and consecration. At the closing service the pastor remarked that Mr. Jones' visit had been as great a blessing to Christians as to others. They all felt that there had been "a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." P.

Mr. Henry Varley in Rutlandshire.

When asked whether I would go and preach at the opening of a new chapel at Morcott in Rutlandshire, I said "Yes." A small village in the smallest county in England had a large attraction. A young man named John Swift came to me when in business at Notting Hill. While in my employ the Lord used me to apprehend him for higher service, and his heart and life were given to Christ Jesus. Surely the memory of those days is precious. My dear friend John Swift left me in one sense; he went into the Pastors' College, and in due course became an efficient and devoted pastor at Loughborough Junction, where for many years he successfully laboured. Health giving way, he was advised to return to native conditions at Morcott, and for some years now slow but sure progress has been made.

My chief reason for writing these details is to encourage any brother who may have to desist from public ministry from similar causes. My esteemed fellow-labourer has done what he could, and when I went to Morcott on Monday last, he introduced me to one of the prettiest village churches I ever preached in. Morcott is a small village, and the Baptist church there dates back more than 200 years. The new building, which has cost about £650, is a model for village purposes. All who came, and hundreds assembled from the villages around, were charmed with it, and well they might be. Something like ten of the ministers from the towns and villages came to rejoice with the workers. H. V.

Mr. William Sampson, the Cornish evangelist, has just concluded an effective ten-days' mission at the Wesleyan Church, Ashford. Many scholars were led to experience the love of Jesus. The Society has been greatly helped, and numerous decisions to serve Christ were recorded. The old-time Methodist preaching of Mr. Sampson was greatly blessed in its results.

Practice and Training.

(Hymn.—Sacred Songs and Solos, No. 135.)

I READ in a newspaper recently that a tribe of people had been discovered of whom the following description was given. They were found to live in a marshy district full of water and reeds; their houses were built upon piles about ten feet above the water, and they lived chiefly upon the fish that they caught. They were expert swimmers, and dived in and out among the weeds without ever getting entangled—a difficult performance for persons who are unaccustomed to it, as some of my boy-readers may have found out for themselves while swimming in our own rivers at home.

But the most interesting thing about these people was that they could not walk on dry land. Their legs had become curiously shaped, and the soles of their feet were so soft that to walk on hard ground caused them to bleed! They had become so used to being in the water and upon soft marshy land, that their feet had lost—or never had—the same hardness that your feet and mine have. When I was a little boy, living by the seaside, I often used to walk, not only as many of you do, barefoot on the sand in the summer time, but also for miles along the hard road; which, after a time, I could do, without feeling any pain from the rough surface of the road. But for the first few days of my holidays, when I began to indulge in this foolish freak, it made my feet very sore.

(1) The first thing I want you to learn from this is that if you NEGLECT TO USE and cultivate any good quality that you possess, you are apt by-and-by, to be unable to use it when you want to. There are some places where a stream flows for a distance underground, or where there is a pool a long way back in a dark cave, and the fish living in it are quite blind. Born in the darkness they have never seen the light, and so have lost the power of sight. So it is that if you leave any part of your character unused and undeveloped, it will become dwarfed or useless; but the more you seek by God's grace to "follow that which is good," the more beautiful your life will be. Thus our Lord Jesus said: "For whosoever hath to him shall be given; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath" (Matt. xiii. 12).

(2) But there is another side to this. If we live in the dark caves of sin, or in the marshy, treacherous land of bad habits, we shall not only lose much of our desire for that which is good; we shall more easily FALL INTO SIN. Paul said to his young friend Timothy, "Endure hardness," and this is necessary if we are to become "good soldiers of Jesus Christ (2 Tim. ii. 3). The more weakness you show in yielding to bad suggestions from Satan or undesirable companions, the more easily you will be led astray; but the more firmness you show in resisting them, the less you will be liable to fall. "Each victory will help you some other to win."

I knew a poor crippled half-silly lad who used to sit on the doorstep of his home, trying in vain to resist the unkind attentions of cowardly boys, who used to mock him or hit him as they passed by; and sometimes he would receive some very nasty knocks. Then he would crawl indoors and tell his mother, and she would soon put the invaders to flight! He was visited sometimes by a kind Christian lady to whom he would pour out his tales of woe, One day when she called, he seemed brighter than usual. She asked the reason, and he replied with a cunning smile, "They don't tease me any more, lady!" "How is that, Tom?" "Cos I've got a big stick, and they 'tell mother' now!" He had carried the war into the enemy's camp, and instead of their hurting him, he applied his weapon with such effect that it was their turn to seek a mother's sympathy and help.

I don't suggest that you should adopt Tom's method exactly, but I think you will see what I mean. Let me put it this way. You must first extract the weeds from the garden of your life, and then grow flowers in it. In other words, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good" (Rom. xii. 21).

(3) This needs PERSEVERANCE AND SELF-DENIAL, both to resist evil and to do right. When boys go in for athletic sports at school, they have to give time to practice and training. At first they may find it difficult to run a mile without getting "winded;" but as they persevere day after day their weakness soon disappears. So with the high or long jump; each day's practice adds an inch or more to their record, until when Sports' Day comes, they can make a very decent show. "Endure," that is practice; "hardness," that is training. So in all that you do, in resisting evil and serving Christ, in conquering bad habits and in cultivating the fruit of the Spirit described in Eph. v. 22, 23),

Ask the Saviour to help you,
Comfort strengthen and keep you;
He is willing to aid you,
He will carry you through.

Christ's Teaching About Judging Others (Matt. vii. 1-5, 15-20).

OUR Lord evidently does not, in these words, condemn that honest judgment which, for our own safety and for the good of society, we are compelled to form of men and women with whom we come into contact. Such judgments are inevitable. But He condemns that censorious and uncharitable judgment which is always finding fault, always neglecting the good and dwelling on the bad, as flies on the sore spot on the horse's back, and always spreading unfavourable and uncharitable reports.

These uncharitable and censorious judgments are often founded on very superficial and insufficient grounds. We run off with a false impression, and express our adverse opinion with all the more confidence when we are not quite sure. For instance, the story went round a village that a certain pastor was in the habit of striking his wife. Everybody was discussing the subject unkindly, till one person, as Christian as sensible, resolved to investigate it to its origin, and finally discovered that one evening, on retiring to their bedroom, a wasp had settled on the pastor's wife, to her great consternation; her husband had brushed it off, the candle was behind them, throwing their figures on the white blind; some passer-by had seen the shadow, formed a superficial judgment, which may have been flavoured with a pinch or two of ill-will—hence the report, which almost ruined the pastor's character and broke his heart.

How true it is that we are measured by the measure we use for others. There is a remarkable Nemesis in life, which is the judgment-seat of God. The evils we inflict on others, like the Australian boomerang, which becomes almost a speck in the sky, come back to ourselves. If you are generous in your estimate of others, you will be estimated generously. If you are mean and stingy, others will treat you in the same spirit.

We are all would-be oculists. Nothing pleases us better than to try our hand at recovering motes of sawdust, as well as splints, from the eyes of others, while we are indifferent to the beams of timber which obstruct our own vision. The Lord is always saying to us, "Cast out the filthiness from the holy place;" and, as His light falls deeper and deeper into our nature, it must reveal deeper evils which need to be put away. "Let us be true to the inner light, and then with tender and chastened spirits, from which all consciousness of superiority has departed, we shall help others to be rid of their own obstructions."

In the second passage our Lord gives us the infallible test. He suggests that in every age there will be those who care for the fleece more than for the flock, and come into the fold under a most winsome and bewitching guise. They are apparently sheep, but in reality ravening wolves. Beware, young Christians, of such people! They profess great reverence for Scripture, great devotion to Christ and His Church, great sweetness of speech, which accosts everyone as "dear." I have often heard the most unkind things said of the very persons whose name has never been mentioned without the prefix "dear." You may be always a little afraid when people call you "dear," and specially when they speak of ministers as "dear Mr. ——." This is the sheep's clothing, it is very soft and woolly.

Judge these people, not by their doctrine, for orthodoxy in doctrine is a very inadequate test (the devil is the most orthodox theologian in the world, and could split a hair in argument—"I know Thee, who Thou art, the Holy One of God"), but by their characters and lives. "By their fruits, ye shall know them:" and for fruit, let us turn to the enumeration of Gal. v. 22, 23.

What we believe has a most important bearing on what we are; but a man's belief is often hindered, by some twist in his conscience, from affecting his life, as it ought. Therefore you cannot certainly judge what a man is by hearing him repeat a creed; but as you observe his character, his disposition, his behaviour, not in public, but in private, not for a day, but a year, you can come to an almost certain judgment of him—whether God or self be the ruling consideration of his inner being.

C.E. NOTES.

Among the many achievements of Christian Endeavour throughout the wide world, one of the most notable has been the bringing home to young people the realization of a personal relationship to Christ. Another aim has been to stimulate interest in missionary enterprise. Both these features of C.E. will receive due consideration at the London Convention at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Good Friday, the subject for the afternoon being "For Christ," and the evening "For the Church."

Review Lesson.

Golden Text—Matt. xxviii. 20.

OUR characters are:—Paul the pioneer, missionary of the Gospel of Christ to Europe, A.D. 50, and His companions in service—Silas, Timotheus, and Luke. These were called to their field of labour by a vision; guided by the Holy Spirit, they obeyed promptly, but waited in faith when circumstances looked adverse (Acts xvi. 6-13).

I. Philippi. A Roman colony, heathen and superstitious, there being no synagogue. Paul preached the "way of salvation" at a place of prayer by the river-side. Result—to Paul and Silas: "stripes and imprisonment," but buoyant "joy in the Lord," and a miraculous release. To the city: light of the Gospel shone out in the heathen darkness. To his Master—souls won for His Kingdom and the standard of the Cross planted in Europe.

II. Thessalonica. A great commercial centre, whose mixed and changing population would carry the new teaching into distant lands. Paul preached in the synagogue; his message was Christ crucified, risen, and exalted (xvii. 3). Results—1 Thess. i. 5 and a strong church established. To the Apostles: persecution with violence, and escape by night.

III. Berea. A synagogue and diligent Bible searchers. Message, "the Word of God." Results—"many believed." Persecution from outsiders.

IV. Athens. The city of 3,000 idols and the chief seat of learning. The place of Stoics, Epicureans, and the court of the Grecian philosophers. Paul preached in the Synagogue, Market-place, and on Mars Hill, Jesus Christ, "the Resurrection and Life," "ordained of God to be judge of quick and dead." (x. 42, 43). Results, "some believed." One Greek philosopher but (1 Cor. 1-26). "Some mocked," ridiculed or politely postponed. (1 Cor. ii. 4).

V. Corinth. The city of politics and commerce. Centre of traffic for three continents. Busy, wealthy, superstitious, wicked. Paul entered sick, sad, and alone. The Lord strengthened him (xviii. 9, 10). He preached in the synagogue and the house of Justus, "Jesus Christ, and Him crucified" (1 Cor. ii. 2). Results—a rich harvest from unlikely ground (1 Cor. vi. 11). The Jews blasphemed, but the ruler of the synagogue was baptized by Paul.

VI. Ephesus in Asia Minor. The chief of a cluster of commercial cities. The Temple of Diana, idolatry, superstition, witchcraft. Believers already there received the Holy Ghost by "the laying on of hands" for miraculous power (xix. 6). Paul preached in the synagogue, "the Kingdom of God," and the schoolroom, "the Word of Jesus." Miracles were wrought. Results—"the Word of God grew and prevailed." Persecution with violence followed (Eph. iii. 14-21).

Helpers mentioned as gathered from these cities. (1) Philippi—Clement, Euodias, Epaphroditus, Lydia, and the jailor (Acts xvi. 15, 33-39; Phil. ii. 25); (2) Thessalonica—Aristarchus, Gaius (Acts xix. 29, xxvii. 2); (3) Berea—Sopater (xx. 4); (4) Athens—Dionysius and Damaris; (5) Corinth—Aquilla, Priscilla, Phœbe, Stephanas, Crispus, Gaius, Erastus, and others (1 Cor. i. 14, xvi. 15; Rom. xvi. 1, 22).

Lesson from the Epistles.

To the Philippians "joy in the Lord" was the keynote. Songs in the prison cell, called "the prison song," written while in captivity at Rome.

To the Thessalonians. Rejoice, pray, praise. Teaching on the resurrection, and the Lord's second coming. Warning against the special form of sin in their time.

To the Corinthians. Self control and love.

To the Ephesians. "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. vi. 23).

SUFFERING FOR CHRIST.

John Rogers, vicar of St. Sepulchre and reader at St. Paul's, was the first martyr to suffer in the reign of Queen Mary. For preaching at St. Paul's Cross in favour of the reformed religion, John Rogers was removed to Newgate, and there remained imprisoned among thieves for a long period. When he was warned to prepare himself for the stake, he craved to be allowed to speak to his wife, but the petition was refused with scorn. He was brought to Smithfield, and the sheriff asked if he would revoke his abominable doctrines. John Rogers replied, "That which I have preached I will seal with my blood." The sheriff informed his prisoner that he would never pray for him. "But I will pray for you," replied the reformer. Then as the fire was kindled he washed his hands in the flames as though they had been cold water, and lifting his arms to heaven, the happy martyr yielded up his spirit to God. Paul and Silas were similarly willing to suffer and to die at Philippi, and we should be ready at all times and in all circumstances to display a similar spirit. (Paul and Silas at Philippi.)

TURNING A LIFE UPSIDE DOWN.

A City missionary has written of a man who had jumped into the Thames on a very dark night. He was miraculously saved, and afterwards sentenced to fourteen days' imprisonment, because he could not produce a security to be of good behaviour for six months. As soon as the sad intelligence reached the City missionary he went to try to bail him out, and had great difficulties, because he did not know the man's name. At the prison the warder said the would-be suicide was in his cell reading the Bible. When the poor fellow was told that someone had come to bail him out, he said, "It is surely a mistake; there is nobody who cares for me—nobody loves me." But when he came out of the cell and saw the missionary he fell on his knees and said, "I do thank God I have a friend, and now I do believe God cares for me and loves me." The man afterwards attended the Gospel meetings held by the City missionary, and it led to his conversion, he testifying before all the audience of the great things God had done for his soul. Christianity turned the world upside down for the poor man, tired of life; and the preaching of Paul had a similar effect on the Thessalonians, even, as the critics said in their derision. (Paul at Thessalonica and Berea.)

THE GOSPEL SEARCHLIGHT.

Not long since an examination was made by means of the X-rays, and the search revealed more than was expected. A scrap of metal being embedded in the flesh of a lady's hand, the light apparatus was used to locate the foreign substance. The rays, playing on the hand, showed, not only the exact position of the trouble, but disclosed as well the fact that a supposed valuable diamond ring upon the lady's finger, was studded with imitation rather than with real stones. The X-rays at once discover if a ring is set with real or paste diamonds, and in the instance mentioned the counterfeit was laid bare to the astonished possessor. So the Jews at Ephesus, who had not the real religion of Christ, proved themselves to be but counterfeits, when the searching light of the Gospel was turned upon their lives and actions. (Paul at Ephesus.

GODLINESS IN BUSINESS.

When Dr. Adam Clarke was a youth his father sent him to a relative, a linen merchant in Coleraine, who had offered to take Adam into his employ. While there an incident occurred which strikingly illustrated the youth's inflexible integrity. On one occasion a piece of cloth was deficient in length. "Oh," said the merchant, "we will soon remedy that," and seizing one end he bade Adam take hold of the other. "Pull, Adam, pull," he cried. But the youth stood as still as a statue. "Why don't you pull?" inquired his employer. "Because I do not think it right," was the reply. It was urged that it was the custom of the trade; but Adam stood firm, and would not consent to stretch the cloth a single inch. May God give us the grace to carry our Christianity into our business! Where there are ungodly gains, as at Ephesus, they must go if we are to expect the blessing of God to rest upon us. (The Riot at Ephesus.)

Christian Union for Social Service.—The Christian Union for Social Service has (as you are doubtless aware) labour colonies and homes for epileptic children in Surrey and Westmoreland. There is being gradually developed in connection with these an order of Christian workers known as House Brothers, who devote themselves to the social salvation of the men and the care of the children, and who will, it is hoped, take up work in our prisons, workhouses, and asylums for Christ's sake, and as a direct dedication of themselves in this way to the Master's service. We should be glad if you would allow us to make it known through your columns that there are openings for such men, preferably those with some gift of management and accustomed to work. Particulars may be had of the Secretary, Training Colony, Lingfield, Surrey.—J. L. Brooks, Director.

Mrs. Penn-Lewis in Madras.—This honoured servant of God arrived in Madras on February 10 last. God in His own good way led her to give most of her time and attention to the Indian Christians. On Saturday morning, February 14, she spoke to a large company of Indian workers in the Christian College Church. Her subject was "God revealing Himself to Paul," and it was a word in season. In the evening she met a large and influential party of Indian clergy and laity. God worked mightily. Many returned to their homes determined to abandon themselves wholly to God and to His service. On Sunday, the 15th, Mrs. Penn-Lewis delivered a powerful address. The Christian College Church was again filled with Indian Christians of all denominations. On three evenings our friend addressed native Christians in the College Church, and morning Bible readings were held in the Y.W.C.A.—G. I.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

DUNDEE.

NOT for twenty years has Dundee been so moved in the holy cause of Gospel Temperance as was the case last week, when Dr. Henry and his singing colleague, Mr. Armon Jones, visited the city, and conducted a mission of a week's duration; which, now that it has closed, is considered by the thousands who attended to have been all too short. As Bailie Martin, the Chairman of one of the meetings, said, "These two men have come, have seen, and have conquered." During the mission 1,766 pledges were taken, and an impetus was given to Temperance work which will be felt for many days to come. The meetings were held in the largest hall in the city. On the Sunday it was literally filled to the ceiling, and people were turned away; and on the week evenings as many as 2,000 assembled. One of the most striking and gratifying features of the Mission was the great preponderance of men in the meetings; they seemed to be in the majority at some of the largest meetings.

Great things were expected from the missioners, and they abundantly justified the highest expectations. The eloquence of Dr. Henry, like the rush of a torrent, carried his audience many a time away, while many thrilling, passionate and moving sentences went home to heart and conscience. His kindliness and gentleness won all with whom he came into contact, and have left behind the memory of a great and noble soul. The singing of Mr. Armon Jones was quite a feature of the campaign, and the people sat spellbound beneath the power of his song.

The spiritual tone of the services throughout demands special notice. These missioners are not merely Temperance reformers, who make sobriety an end in itself, but they are men who for Jesus' sake and in His name, and for the eternal salvation of their fellows, have consecrated their high endowments and noble gifts upon the altar of God.

Ever ready to work, without sparing themselves, they gave an extra service at the noonday prayer meeting on one day, when there was a large audience, and also at the Y.M.C.A. Young Men's Bible Class on the Sunday afternoon, when over 700 young men gathered to hear them. Councillor Henderson, the president of the Y.M.C.A., under whose auspices the campaign was conducted, presided on two occasions, while among other gentlemen who did so was the Hon. J. C. Higgins, U.S. Consul in Dundee. The Y.M.C.A. choir, under the leadership of Mr. James Nichol, rendered effective service at all the meetings, and was on more than one occasion complimented by Dr. Henry. On the concluding night of the mission it was intimated that Dr. Henry and Mr. Jones would return to Dundee for another such crusade in the first week of November, and this intimation was hailed with the utmost enthusiasm.

Wm. Stewart,
Secretary, Y.M.C.A., Dundee.

Rescue Work in Portsmouth.—The Rescue Band of the Bethesda Town Mission recently made a series of special efforts to reach the young women on the streets of Portsmouth by arranging late gatherings in different chapels near the promenades of this class. Between ten and eleven o'clock the workers met for prayer, afterwards going forth in couples, carrying invitations for a social gathering, accompanied by a searching Gospel message. From the first the meetings were well attended, and the words of entreaty and warning and offers of help were received with touching appreciation. A solemn spirit pervaded the gatherings, and many expressed a desire for newness of life. Mr. Wilson McCree, of the London Midnight Meeting Movement, superintended the work.

In The Port of London.

THE Seamen's Mission is about to celebrate its fifty-ninth anniversary. A serious defect in the accommodation was remedied by the erection of the Queen Victoria Rest (which it will be remembered, was opened in November last), and it is gratifying to know that the excellent provision in the Port of London for seamen of all ranks is being taken advantage of to its full extent. The men show their confidence in Rev. David Roe and his staff of helpers by consulting them on every conceivable subject, and by depositing their money with them while in port. Already many tragic and pathetic instances of social redemption have consecrated the new building. Hundreds of men are under the influence of the workers daily. The dispensary meets the needs of the sick in a practical way. Since it was established some 5,000 have received medical treatment free. In many ways the Rest has proved a haven for the tired and tempted.

In reviewing the present position of the work, Mr. Roe writes:—

We have found it possible to establish arrangements with other seamen's missions and societies in various parts of the world, by means of which we are able to follow our sailors from port to port, and have them met and befriended everywhere by Christian men interested in their welfare. There is reasonable ground for desiring such an association for the purpose of saving the men in every port from the sharks, crimps, thieves, and undesirable characters, and we are glad to say that Homes and Missions in all parts of the world have cordially joined hands with us in our endeavours to help, and to save our seamen.

The Queen Victoria Seamen's Rest is being appreciated by men of all nationalities; neither race nor colour is any barrier, and the religious services are such as any worshipper of God may approve. The spirit of the whole is such that reverent men and seekers after truth of every denomination may accept. We keep the Bible and the temperance pledge book side by side; and, knowing the perils of the sea and the dangers to which seamen are subject, we urge upon them an instant and present acceptance of salvation, and I am glad to say that many decide for Christ.

We are now face to face with serious financial embarrassment. After very careful management we regret to say that we have a deficiency of £300 in the ordinary income for the past year. There are still openings we ought to take advantage of, but for lack of funds we dare not at present venture further.

To save expense and to take more direct control of the work on behalf of the seamen of the merchant service, Mrs. Roe and myself have, with the concurrence of my committee, given up our private house, and are living in the Queen Victoria Seamen's Rest. Mrs. Roe has taken charge as lady superintendent, and we are giving our constant personal attention to the management of the work and the care of the mission.

Our work is sufficiently difficult and heart-breaking day by day to stand and listen to pathetic stories of sickness, disaster, and abominable sins of the deepest dye. We have received generous help from many friends in all parts of the country and from the colonies.

Mr. Cory has again come forward in connection with our anniversary effort, and has promised £50 towards the deficit of £300 on the ordinary income on condition that the balance of the money is raised at the anniversary.

Then there is the debt on the Queen Victoria Seamen's Rest. We feel sure that there are many friends and sympathizers who could, without inconvenience furnish us with all we require to wipe out the debt on the current account and the building fund. Are there not thousands who could help to transform this building from a serious burden to the management to a Christian charity, and a temple for Him who always cared for the poor, the weak, the sick, the sinful, and the erring, and called from amongst the sailors some of His own disciples?

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

THE March issue of Immanuel's Witness reports the receipt of a donation of £1,000 from a friend of the work, whereby the debt on the Gordon Calthrop Mission Buildings is all but extinguished. The adjoining land (included in the original bargain) is still vacant, and there is great reluctance to part with it. In view of the growth of the work generally, which may entail the founding of additional institutions for the evangelization and well-being of the growing Jewish population, it is proposed to retain the site for use as an open-air mission ground.

The extent to which Jews are willing to stop their perambulations to listen to religious addresses, has often occasioned surprise. We are assured that open-air gatherings have been times of serious thought and spiritual decision on the part of many people of the Hebrew race—such as would not venture into buildings where "apostates" congregate, but are not averse to hear any message that may be delivered "under the blue sky."

The site is admirably adapted for an open-air preaching ground; and a pulpit could easily be built into the wall of the property. Moreover, at small expense, the land could be covered with asphalte, and opened as a playground for the children of the neighbourhood. Needless to say, this simple use of the site would be greatly appreciated by poor parents, for whose little ones the busy streets afford no safe place of promenade or amusement. The land will cost about £2,500, and to secure it will greatly enhance the value of the Mission property. Copies of the magazine, with other particulars, may be had from Prediger C. T. Lipshytz, Gorringe Park House, Mitcham, Surrey.

Oxford Notes.

TEMPERANCE work amongst the children has always been a feature of Christian effort in the City of Oxford. One society, the Oxford branch of the Sons of Temperance, has just held its annual meeting at St. Aldate's Rectory. The membership numbers 470 — the strongest Temperance Society in the city.

At the annual meeting of the Oxford Sunday-School Union most encouraging statements were made. One new Sunday-school is about to be built. The membership of the International Bible Reading Association has greatly increased, the present membership being 1,730, and the number of branches in Oxford thirty. £35 11s. 11d. had been contributed towards the funds of the Union.

The annual meeting of the Irish Church Missions was held in Oxford last week. Rev. N. F. Duncan, secretary in London of the Society, said that during the past year no fewer than 29,000 various publications had been sold in Ireland, many of them copies of the Scriptures. The Oxford branch had subscribed during the past year the sum of £41 5s. 5d.

Personalia.

Mr. and Mrs. Osborn Howe having been ordered abroad, all letters should be addressed care of T. Cook and Son, Ludgate Circus, London, E.C.

Miss Seton Karr (31, Lingfield Road, Wimbledon) is anxious to meet with a friend willing to carry on, along the present lines, or by opening a different house, the Churchill Home and Restaurant for city workwomen, at 77, Chiswell Street, Finsbury, E.C. The committee are placed in a difficult position through the rise in the value of property. Full particulars will be supplied to any friends interested.

We have pleasure in stating that Miss Mason has so far recovered as to resume the general oversight of the House of Rest, 10, Finchley Road, and hopes to be present during the annual sale of work going on this week. Throughout the whole period of her long illness everything went on as usual, with much of the Divine presence and blessing. All eligible applicants for admission were and are still being received and gladly welcomed as vacancies occur. The prayers of friends are asked that this "open door" for the Lord's weary toilers may long remain, as at present, under her valued personal supervision.

Old Magazines for Fishermen.—Any friends who do not already send away their old magazines and papers may be glad to know that such gifts will be welcomed by Miss Firth, at the Social Institute, Stornoway, N.B. The fishermen are allowed to take the magazines to their boats, and an unlimited number of periodicals can be utilized.

Evangelists at Work.

Three Missions at Doncaster.

Three fruitful missions have been held in Doncaster within the last few months, the first in St. James' Church by Rev. E. J. Kennedy, the second by Rev. Bryan Brown at St. Jude's, and the third by Mr. W. R. Lane in connection with the Free Church Council. On the afternoon of Sunday week it was my privilege to preside at Mr. Lane's meeting for men in the Corn Exchange. For upwards of an hour the speaker held the 600 or 700 men in rapt attention as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come. The subject of purity was dealt with in a masterly manner. It was a noble utterance, strong, unflinching, scathing, and yet tender, loving, and persuasive. It was striking to watch the men's faces; on many was seen the blush of conviction and shame, and not a few tears were seen running down the cheeks unchecked. I am convinced that a purity crusade on these lines, if arranged for Mr. Lane, would be an untold blessing, not only from a medical point of view, but in bringing sinners to the Saviour.

A Village Mission.

Mr. Chas. E. Barraclough has just concluded a helpful mission at Burnt Mill, Essex. Work for God in a village has its peculiar difficulties, and the trouble here for some time has been to get the people inside the building. This was evidently realized by the evangelist as he confronted a handful of people on the first Sabbath evening. From that moment he set about the difficult business of filling the empty benches. On one occasion he borrowed a pony-trap, to which he attached a large poster announcing the services. Then, arming himself with a large hand-bell and plenty of cards, he made a tour of all the surrounding villages, accompanied by two helpers, and announcing the services and leaving a card at each house. As the friends thus journeyed from village to village, those travelling on the road read the poster on the trap, and carried the news all through the district. The efforts were blessedly owned of God, for next evening our place of worship was packed with just that class of hearer we desired to reach, and ere the mission closed souls believed on the Lord Jesus, and openly confessed Him. A. W. Hartley.

Mr. J. A. Vicary's Work.

The annual circular issued by Mr. J. A. Vicary, of Bristol, in connection with his Gospel tent and Bible carriage work, is always interesting reading. In the one just issued, Mr. Vicary is again able to tell of fruitful labours. "We commenced the season by pitching our No. 1 village tent at Whitchurch (about four miles from Bristol). Previously, I visited this neighbourhood, calling on the rector and others, who lamented the indifference of the people. The leaders of the chapel and the mission band voluntarily closed their buildings and threw their interest and sympathy into the tent mission during the three weeks of happy saint-reviving and soul-winning work. The No. 2 large tent was erected in a very populous neighbourhood, including Warmley, North Common, and Oldland Common. This proved a fruitful centre for evangelizing, as several factories and coal mines were in the vicinity. From the first the tent was well filled, and the power of God was manifestly present to awaken, convict and convert precious souls."

After seventeen years of use the village Bible carriage is unfitted for further service, but Mr. Vicary hopes to secure another.

St. Polycarp's Church, Liverpool.

A ten-days' mission was commenced here recently by Mr. R. McLean. On the first night the evangelist met the workers and spoke on the work of the Holy Spirit. All were filled with faith and expectancy. On the Saturday evening, when the first public service was held, the place was full, and it was crowded out at every subsequent service. As soon as the inquiry room was opened so many sought guidance that a second large room had to be used, and it was needed every other evening also. The joy of harvest is in the hearts of all God's people. Afternoon meetings were held in the Parish Room; these also were well attended, as were the children's services before the usual week-night meeting. On the afternoon of Sunday week Mr. McLean addressed a meeting of the men and women's Bible class in the church, when the building was packed. In the evening the vicar (Rev. Stanton Jones) preached in the church, while the evangelist preached at the same hour in the hall. A second service was held at eight o'clock in the hall, when many were impressed. At all the services many sought to be pointed to Christ. So great was the interest that the evangelist continued four nights longer—all the time he was able to give. W. D.

The meetings for women which Mrs. Stephen J. Alexander is conducting every Sunday afternoon, at the Town Hall, Ilford, are being well attended, with visible signs of God's blessing.

Messrs. Gray, Alexander, Parker, and Pullinger, of the Open-Air Mission, have during the past fortnight conducted services in the Gospel Hall at Newport, Shropshire, and also in the streets and the surrounding villages. Numbers were attracted, and much blessing resulted. T. G. W.

It is with grateful hearts that we record the blessing attending the mission of Mr. Noakes at Coleford. Many of our Sunday-school scholars have decided for Christ. The "Old, Old Story" was faithfully preached, and the power of God rested upon the meetings, Our Holcombe friends came over in large numbers and helped us, and scores of souls have been won. John Hancock.

Mr. T. A. Vann, describing meetings at Southport, writes: "Our seaside services are very encouraging. We commenced the season last Sunday with a forty-minute service on the shore, and shall probably continue until towards November. There has been great blessing; many have sought the Saviour, and Christians have been stirred up. In the summer we have three services, and they occupy about six hours of the day."

On Friday last Miss Glover, of Edinburgh, concluded a three-weeks' mission in Duns. She had the sympathy and support of the ministers of the town, Established and United Free, and her meetings were attended by large and ever-increasing numbers. Her addresses were greatly appreciated and bore fruit in several professing to decide for Christ. The closing meetings were specially solemn and impressive. J. M.

Mr. J. Henry Brunton has been holding, in the Gospel Hall, Didsbury, Manchester, an eight-days' mission, extending from March 1 to 8. It has been attended with much blessing in the awakening of the unconverted, and in the renewing and deepening of the spiritual life of believers. From the opening the attendance was good, and ended in crowded meetings. Mr. Brunton preached with power, and sinners, led to forsake their evil way, professed to pass from death unto life.

Mr. Joseph Johnson writes from Daubhill, Bolton:—"We have just ended a fifteen-days' mission conducted by Mr. T. Goudie, of the Evangelization Society, which has been most encouraging. A large number yielded to Christ. Out of some homes father, mother, and several members of the family have been brought to Christ. The missioner's powerful discourses were listened to by crowds of people night after night. Not only have sinners been saved, but the church throughout has been blessed."

The Gospel in its fulness and freeness has been preached with power by Mr. F. Holmes, of the Evangelization Society, at a three weeks' united mission just closed at Freshwater, Isle of Wight. Several professed conversion, but the day of the Lord alone will reveal the blessing that has attended the meetings. The Lord's own people have been greatly blessed, and the much-needed word of reproof has been given. The afternoon Bible-readings were very helpful, as also were the meetings for children. To God be the glory! A. H.

Rev. James Sprunt has been holding some remarkable meetings in Wilts and Somerset, since the beginning of February. He has visited Bath, Bathford, Limpley-Stoke, Atworth, Corsham, and Westbury. In every place the mission services were largely attended, and many persons are now rejoicing in Christ as their newly-found Saviour. Mr. Sprunt's lantern lecture on "Bunyan and his Book" has been most instructive and helpful, especially to young Christians. Mr. Sprunt is now conducting a mission in the Methodist Chapel, Hay Lane, Swindon.

In connection with the Baptist Church at Netherfield, Mr. Henry Thorne has just concluded an eleven-days' Mission. The meetings have included a special service for Children and Young People, and a meeting for Men. Bible readings were given daily and proved helpful. The Gospel meetings were fairly well attended. The chapel, on the two Sunday evenings, was well filled. Several good cases of decision and a quickening of the spiritual life of the Church have been realised. During the mission Mr. Thorne delivered his lectures "From the Stage to the Cross," and "After the Stage." The concluding service was a Praise service. G.

Rev. J. Vine has just concluded an encouraging mission in the Baptist Church, Rayleigh, Essex. Many souls have been convicted of sin under the stirring words so faithfully spoken by the evangelist. Several have definitely professed conversion. The church has greatly appreciated the earnest services that have been rendered. On each Saturday night during the mission a service of praise and testimony has been conducted by the Stratford male choir.

A three weeks' united mission has just been brought to a close in Stranraer, conducted by Mr. F. McLennan. From the beginning the blessing of God has rested upon the efforts, and over 200 persons were dealt with in the inquiry room. The prayer meetings and open-air marches have been the largest we have had here for many years. The largest hall in the town was engaged, and during some of the week nights was completely filled, while on the Sabbath evenings it was crowded to its utmost capacity. A feature of the mission has been the large number of young men attending, many of whom have taken a decided stand for God. J. M.

Pastor T. L. Johnson, the coloured evangelist and ex-slave has recently concluded an encouraging eight-days' mission at Wycliffe Church, Reading. The meetings throughout the week were largely attended, and on the two Sunday evenings many were unable to gain admission. The services, while free from all undue excitement, were marked by much spiritual power and blessing. All who worked with Mr. Johnson parted from him with great regret, and will follow his future work with prayerful interest. A. B.

A very helpful mission was concluded recently at St. Paul's, Southport, of which Rev. F. Sinker is the vicar. The missioner was Rev. F. E. Rogers, vicar of Littleport. Altogether there were thirty-seven meetings at which he took part; and although the Saturday should have been a rest day for him, he at night spoke to a large gathering held chiefly for working men. Notwithstanding the large number of meetings, the church was on every occasion well filled, and, indeed, sometimes packed. During his eight days' work Mr. Rogers was the means of bringing a vast number of persons forward to bear testimony to their faith, and to acknowledge a quickening of their spiritual life.

Mr. W. H. Jude, the preacher-musician, paid his first visit to the West End of Newcastle-on-Tyne last week, when he conducted three services of Gospel song on the Saturday and Sunday, and on the following day gave his "Life Story." So great was the crowd desiring to hear this musician and spiritual teacher that the church proved to be too small, and crowds had to be turned away. The visit was therefore extended to the Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, with similar results. The stirring character of the music, coupled with the sweetness and spiritual fervour of the messages, made a deep impression upon the vast audiences, and many were the testimonies of blessing and help received. Thomas Dodds.

A mission of a most encouraging character has just been concluded at Wellington, Somerset, by Mr. W. Olney, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and Mr. Spencer Johnson. The evangelists commenced their work on Sunday, March 1, and for a week conducted services each evening in either the Rockwell Green or South Street Baptist Chapels, with crowded congregations. Although much preparation had been made for this mission by public and private prayer and house-to-house visitation, the results are altogether beyond expectation, and call for great thankfulness and praise to God. Nearly 200 persons (excluding children, among whom a good work has been done) have declared their acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. Owing to other engagements Mr. Olney was obliged to return to London after the sixth day, leaving the good work in the hands of Mr. Johnson and Pastor Sydney J. Jones. On Tuesday, March 10, Mr. Johnson gave his "life story" to a record attendance of 1,000 people in the South Street Chapel, and sought at the same time to preach Christ and Him crucified. At the close a large number sought further instruction in the plan of salvation.

Mr. Andrew Stewart writes from Brisbane to friends in Edinburgh: "In the tent here there has been marvellous blessing. Hundreds, we believe, have been won for Christ, and the whole city has been stirred in preparation for the work in the centre. About fifty congregations are united in the central movement, and the ministers seem quite in sympathy, some of them are enthusiastic. We have a prayer meeting at noon in the Y.M.C.A. every day, and every Saturday we have 150 to 200 young Christians and others meeting for prayer and Bible reading. All this is preparatory. We have printed 1,000 prayer-cards, and almost all are in the hands of Christians. Another 4,000 are being printed, and will soon be taken up. It is a mighty work, and we trust may extend all through the State. Ask all friends to pray earnestly about it. We shall be commencing just about the time this arrives." While Mr. Stewart would be holding the meetings in Brisbane, his younger brother, Mr. U. F. Stewart (well known in Scotland as a voluntary evangelist) began a united mission in Musselburgh. From the opening meeting there was marked blessing, over 100 souls being dealt with in the first week. The movement is largely the outcome of the Torrey-Alexander mission in Edinburgh.

About Books.

MR. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P.

THE life-story of a Christian statesman may well command many readers. In the volume which Mr. Samuel Smith has written*, we have a record of the career of one who deserves a more ample description. Here we have a Christian statesman whose Christianity has been as pronounced as his statesmanship; a man who has combined intellectual pursuits with business life, and carried great enterprises to a successful issue; a man in whose philanthropy generosity and action have gone hand in hand; a man whose influence and help, alike in Parliament and society, has been assured to schemes and measures for the good of oppressed classes and for the moral as well as material well-being of the community.

Those who know Mr. Smith will not require to be informed that his book is written in a singularly unostentatious spirit. During a season of retirement, through breakdown in health, he undertook a review of his public work; and in doing so he has put the rising generation under a great obligation; for a perusal of his pages serves as an introduction to the history of wholesome thought and earnest work, along many lines, during the generation just passing away.

The opening pages tell the story of a Scottish farmer's son, born just before the "Disruption." From his earliest years he was instructed in Christian truth, and passed from a local academy to Edinburgh University before he was sixteen. The business career of the young man, first in a Liverpool office, and then as a cotton broker on his own account, is outlined with modesty, and makes good reading for other young men entering upon life. Mr. Smith writes with freedom of his religious life and opinions; these latter may not receive assent on the part of every reader, but the candour of the writer will be admired, and his reverent spirit will save him from harsh judgment.

Five-sixths of the book remain for the story of varied and strenuous endeavour. Travel in America, Europe, and Asia; political activity in Parliament and throughout the constituencies; the discussion of public questions—commercial, educational, social, ecclesiastical. Some of the most useful passages of his set speeches in Parliament, also excerpts from his pamphlets and other writings, are given. The topics include: Indian problems—famine and opium; stage plays and their supervision; and the advance of Romanism in the Established Church.

The Protestant and Evangelical principles of the author are not alone in distinguishing him as worthy of esteem above and beyond merely party circles; Parliament sadly wants more men like him at the present time. The illustrations are not only numerous, but of a high order, recalling scenes that strike the observant traveller in many lands.

Charming Scripture birthday booklets, with hand-painted and silver-blocked silk covers, have been published by E. Kaufmann (6d., 9d., and 1s. each).

A handsome folded card, With Easter Greetings, has been prepared by Miss C. Maud Battersby. The verses, founded on great words of Scripture, are such as Miss Battersby's pen has given us before. (1s. 1d. per dozen, post free. The Author, Cromlyn, Rathowen, Westmeath, Ireland.)

The simple and attractive style of More Bible Stories Without Names, by Harry Smith (1s. 6d. Oliphant), will make it welcome to parents who are puzzled to impart freshness to religious instruction. It will provide many hours of pleasant and profitable occupation in the family circle.

A Book of Illustrations. By John Robertson, LL.D. (1s. 6d. Arthur H. Stockwell.) A good and useful collection of original illustrations drawn from many sources. Biography, history, travel, science, and the home life are all laid under tribute. Preachers and teachers will find the book useful.

Dr. Torrey's stirring and instructive books have attained a wide circulation, but the issue of cheap editions of How to Pray and How to Bring Men to Christ will extend the influence of those stimulating treatises, which are so full of Bible truth, and of sage counsels to Christians. (6d. net. Nisbet.)

The narrative of missionary experience in the Kienning prefecture, of the Fuh-kien province (China), given by Mary E. Darley in The Light of the Morning (2s. 6d. Church of England Zenana Missionary Society), brings the reader into living touch with the individual men and women to whom the Gospel was carried. The warm sympathy of the writer comes out in every page, so that others cannot fail to have aroused within them a similar yearning to save the perishing.

* My Life-work. By Samuel Smith, M.P. Portrait and illustrations. (5s. net. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Life in the Ghetto; or The Jewish Physician. By the author of "Broad Shadows in Life's Pathway." (2s. C. J. Thynne.) A reissue of a very readable story, descriptive of Jewish life in Rome in the days of Pope Pius the Ninth. The pages contain instruction as well as entertainment, both for Jew and Christian.

Rev. B. Senior's booklet, The Gambling Mania, has reached its fourth edition, making 50,000 in circulation. While the sin of gambling continues to be a canker in the life of the nation, so strong an appeal as Mr. Senior's is deserving of even wider acceptance than it has already found. (1d. The Author, Rock Carry, Crescent Road, Ramsgate.)

Heaven's Light our Guide is the title of a little volume (2s. Elliot Stock) of "Truths and Counsels for the Wise Ordering of Life." On questions of a practical order the author gives extracts from good and great writers; and then, having considered God, the earth, and man, he furnishes a digest of the teachings of Christ. This is an unpretending compilation calculated to prove of real service in some directions.

The Revelation Compared with Other Parts of Scripture. A plain work well done. Combining reverence and simplicity, the author, whose name does not appear, compares scripture with scripture. There is no assumption of the prophetic gift, but a helpful elucidation of the inspired Word. Dr. J. McCormick, Canon of Tuam, writes a commendatory preface. (Derby: Francis Garter; London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

The Jewish Herald, the organ of the British Jews Society, is a capital monthly; and the year's parts, bound together, make a volume that is full of instruction regarding God's ancient people and labours among them in lands of their dispersion. Among the contents of the latest annual volume we note a number of historical allusions, recalling "the days of old," when the Saphirs, Sterns, and Salkinsons were witnesses to God's grace among Israel. (Partridge.)

Those in search of sound Protestant literature to circulate or recommend, will have their hand strengthened by the issue of a cheaper edition of Bishop J. C. Ryle's Light from Old Times (2s. 6d. net. C. J. Thynne). The publication is highly opportune. It is of the utmost importance that the mass of our people should know what were the views held by the men who laid the foundations of the Church of England. Here they are lucidly and helpfully stated by one who knew the ground well.

The fresh treatment of the subject in The Coming Kingdom of God, by Rev. John Telfer, will claim for the book many deeply-interested readers. Mr. Telfer's expectation that his setting forth of the doctrine of sanctification will provoke criticism deserves to be realized, and we think he has been unnecessarily dogmatic on one or two other points. But there is displayed throughout a knowledge of, and loyalty to, Scripture which will make the volume welcome to many. (2s. 6d. Marshall Bros.)

The narrative of a life changed by the grace of God is always a useful addition to our Christian evidences; and we welcome Dickey Pike's Conversion, by W. H. Henwood. (7d. post free of the author, 4, Tyndall Road, Easton, Bristol.) It tells the story of a dissipated outcast, over sixty-one years of age, who, on June 28, 1885, was going through an alley in Plymouth to avoid his friends, when he heard the Gospel at an open-air meeting, and three hours later began a life of testimony for God, which continued till his death in 1902.

Wise and weighty words on the matter of personal religion are addressed to young people by Rev. C. Anderson Scott, in The Making of a Christian. (1s. 6d. H. H. Allenson). It is neither a manual of devotion nor a guide for catechumens, but a simple explanation of what is to be looked for as the outcome of a Christian profession. The truth is driven home that righteousness must accompany or precede holiness, but this is not done discouragingly. Kindly and tenderly the pathway of growth in grace and in the nurture and admonition of the Lord is pointed out to youthful pilgrims.

Readers belonging to other communions will be apt to think that in The Church of the New Testament Rev. William Paterson has allowed partizanship to carry him too far. He has, however, much to say and to quote from Scripture in support of his argument that principles similar to those now known as Presbyterian formed the basis of the government of the Jewish synagogue, and that the members of the early church—putting into operation the principles their Master had taught them—established their assemblies on a like foundation. The deduction from Scripture of any sanction for priestly or prelatic organization is disputed at every step; and the book will have a deep interest for many besides those who entirely accept the positions of the author. (3s. 6d. H. R. Allenson.)

How to reach the average working man with a view to bringing him under the influence of the Gospel is a problem ever with us, but happily it has not remained entirely unsolved. A pleasant record of successful endeavour in this direction is Stories of a Men's Bible Class. The power of a deep human sympathy, combined with tact, is clearly illustrated in these narratives, which are told by the men themselves. They are messages from the men in the thick of life's battle to their comrades in the fight, and also indicate what God can accomplish through weak instruments held in His strong hand. (1s. 6d. Drummond Tract Depôt, Stirling.)

Outline Studies in the Acts and Epistles. By William C. Moorehead. (3s. 6d. net. Fleming H. Revell Co.) Having dealt with the books of the Old Testament and the Four Gospels in a most helpful manner, Professor Moorehead now gives his attention to the Book of Acts and the Epistles to the Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, and Ephesians. In the preface he says; "The chief aim has been to point out, as clearly and briefly as possible, what is conceived to be the design and the fundamental truth of these great Scriptures." Not specially critical nor definitely expository, the pages are calculated to serve a very useful purpose in opening up the Word to the careful reader, and in deepening in him the conviction that God speaks in these books. By way of introduction to detailed and extended study, these outlines will prove of particular service.

A History of England, from the Landing of Julius Cæsar to the Present Day. By H. O. Arnold-Forster. (5s. Cassells.) In the fourth edition, revised, this work is admirably up-to-date, with King Edward VII. on the throne. We could hardly conceive a more readable outline of our island story—or, rather, the story of our Empire, and for old and young alike it deserves cordial recommendation. The pages have the interest and animation of a panorama, and the illustrations, some 250 in number, are good for the eye as well as impressive to the mind. Mr. Arnold-Forster's execution has been worthy his noble ideal; he planned a book with a patriotic mission, and the result is an instructive and inspiring piece of work. The young man who has read this book will have made a capital beginning to the study of a great subject, and under the guidance of one who knows the true relation of things—literary, religious, political.

Recent additions to Mr. A. H. Stockwell's list include Byeways of Bible Highways, by Rev. G. Watt Smith (2s. 6d. net), which contains much Scriptural truth, though we cannot agree with the author at every point—for instance even in his definition of conversion. We like better the note of Christ versus Caste (2s. 6d.), in which Evan Cameron deals with the Discourse of the Five Parables in a fashion that will stimulate thought, and supply food for profitable meditation; in an added chapter on the Church and the classes, a number of weak points in Christian effort are frankly yet kindly pointed out. The appearance of a second edition of Jesus is God, by Rev. Frederick C. Spurr (1s. 6d.) enables us once more to call attention to a useful handbook on a subject which demands more and more emphasis as the years pass. Modern denials of our Lord's divinity are brought out in the light of Scripture, and the believing reader will be reassured as he realizes once again the strength of his own position.

The Short Catechism is the title of a booklet giving "The Sum of the Shorter Catechism, prepared for Junior Scholars." The condensation has been judiciously made by Rev. Charles A. Salmond, D.D., of South Morningside, Edinburgh. (Edinburgh: Macniven & Wallace.)

The "Popular Protestant Papers," by Mr. Walter Walsh, to which we have already called attention, may now be had in separate form at 1d, each—(1) Why We Do Not Need the Church of Rome. (2) The British Jesuits. (3) The Confessional in the Church of Rome. (4) Romanism an Idolatrous Religion. (5) How Rome Treats the Dead. (6) How Rome Treats the Bible. (Sonnenschein.)

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.

25, ONSLOW GARDENS,
LONDON, S.W.

March 4th, 1903.

Dear Friends,—

We are approaching the end of the financial year, and, as President of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, I venture to ask your kind attention to this brief statement. I find that a sum of about £800 is required if the accounts are to close on March 31st without a deficit.

In heartily commending the work of this Mission to your generous sympathy, permit me to say that God in His mercy has graciously blessed our efforts. Many of His ancient people have been brought to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, and many more are being almost daily instructed in the way of salvation through Christ alone. Our Mission House in Whitechapel Road is much used. The Reading Room is often crowded with Jews; the daily Bible Class secures the attention of many; the Gospel Service on the Jewish Sabbath is largely attended; and the meetings for Jewish women and children are full of encouragement. Indeed, the Mission House has become, in the short time that it has been opened, a really strong centre of Evangelistic effort.

The outlook is most encouraging both at the Mission Centre and at Mitcham, where we have our Home for Converts. There is only one thing that depresses us, viz., want of funds. We do not like to contemplate the curtailment of any of our work, and if funds fail us now, it would be little short of a calamity.

Do help us for the sake of the Lord, and of those whom He once described as the lost sheep of the House of Israel.

Yours sincerely,
H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE
(President).

Contributions may be sent to me, or to Prediger C. T. Lipshytz, Gorringe Park House, Mitcham; or the Office of The Christian.

Missions to the Jews.—The London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews has founded an annual exhibition of £40, tenable for two years, at Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, and Ridley Hall, Cambridge, to graduates of both universities, to induce them to take up the study of Hebrew and Rabbinic literature, with the view of offering themselves after ordination as missionaries to work amongst the Jews in connection with the society. Further particulars can be obtained from the principals of the two halls. The same society has also offered at Cambridge a prize of £20 for the best essay on "The Jewish Prayer Book considered from the Christian point of view. (Examiners: Rev. A. F. Kirkpatrick, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew and Master of Selwyn College, and Rev. Robert Sinker, D.D., Librarian of Trinity College.) A similar offer will be made to the members of Oxford University next year. Rev. Professor Margoliouth and Rev. C. Grey, Principal of Wycliffe Hall, have kindly undertaken to make the award. These arrangements are indicative of strenuous efforts to awaken more interest in missions to the Jews in both Universities. We cordially wish them every success.

THE NATIONAL BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY

Have several new cases before them, and need immediate help and sympathy. We beg the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, who have so generously aided us in the past, to extend their practical help on behalf of the following case:—

A Man, 60 years of age, formerly employed at the Woolwich Arsenal, has through his affliction been unable to work for 4 years. He and his wife are in great distress, as the woman, being very delicate, can only earn about 6s. a week—this, and 2s. 6d. per week from a son, is all they have to depend on.

Contributions to this deserving case will be thankfully received by the Hon. Sec., Rev. J. PULLEIN THOMPSON, The Vicarage, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.; or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Obituary.

REV. W. J. WOODS.

REV. W. J. WOODS, till lately the secretary of the Congregational Union, has died with painful suddenness. While taking part in a committee meeting on Tuesday week at the Memorial Hall he was taken ill, and, after being conveyed to his residence at Clapton, was found to be suffering from paralysis of the brain. He died on the following evening. In 1874 Mr. Woods went to Leamington as pastor of Spencer Street Church, and in 1881 he accepted a call to be pastor of Cavendish Street Church, Manchester, so long the scene of the labours of Dr. Joseph Parker. He remained there for six years, removing in 1887 to London, as pastor of the church at Clapton Park. This he resigned in 1892, when he was elected secretary of the Congregational Union. He also edited the official Congregational Year Book.

REV. DR. BRADLEY.

The death of Rev. Dr. Bradley, formerly Dean of Westminster, removes an interesting figure from ecclesiastical circles. Although not distinguished as a religious leader, his consistent kindliness, untiring industry, and deep concern in movements that make for the improvement of the spiritual and social condition of the people, had won for him the esteem of all classes. He was appointed to the Deanery on the death of Dean Stanley, whose pupil and friend he had been at Oxford, and of whom he published, in 1883, a volume of "Recollections." At the conference of clergy held in the Jerusalem Chamber during the coal strike of 1893, the Dean's tact and firmness as chairman were displayed to much advantage. He also took great interest in the early closing movement, and presided at a meeting in the Jerusalem Chamber in June, 1899, to protest against the rejection by the House of Lords of the Shop Seats Bill. Dr. Bradley held the deanery for twenty-one years, resigning it, in consequence of failing health, in the latter part of last year.

REV. DR. WALFORD GREEN.

Wesleyan Methodism has sustained a great loss by the death, which occurred on Thursday last, of Rev. Dr. Walford Green, ex-president of Conference, and for the past fifteen years chairman of the Third London District. Dr. Green, who was in his seventy-first year, entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1858. After spending some twenty-seven years in circuit work, mainly in Manchester, Bradford, and London, Dr. Green was elected a member of the Legal Hundred, and appointed officer of Connexional Funds. As treasurer of the Aged Ministers' and Ministers' Widows' Fund he rendered special service, raising by his own efforts a capital fund of £25,000. He also did much to put the Ministers' Children's Fund in an improved financial position. The esteem in which he was held by his ministerial brethren led to his election as president of the conference in 1894. He was greatly esteemed among his brethren for his brotherliness and kindly bearing. He took a lively interest in the London Wesleyan Mission, of which he was one of the treasurers and one of its most generous supporters. He also did much to extend Methodism in connection with the Sussex Mission.

Lambeth Walk Mission.—The visitor to Lambeth Walk on a Sunday finds himself face to face with hundreds of men, women, and children, either buying or selling or otherwise carrying on business, regardless of the Day of Rest. To these the workers of the Lambeth Walk Mission preach the Gospel and distribute the Word of God. An open-air meeting is held in the evening, followed by a service in the Mission Hall, which is usually crowded. During the week there are numerous gatherings. But this centre does not represent the entire work of the mission. The missionaries visit the people in their homes, and services are also held in some neighbouring factories. The missionaries (189, Lambeth Walk, S.E.) are always thankful for gifts of clothing (new or old), books, hospital and dispensary letters, &c., for distribution among the poor of the district.

Church of England.

Rev. Henry Lewis, rector of Bermondsey, reports that in his parish the C.M.S. Medical Mission to Women and Children during 1902 made 5,006 visits to the homes of the patients, and 15,881 patients were seen at the Mission Dispensary. The patients come from all parts of London. A short religious service is held, and a simple loving address is given in the Mission Hall before the medical work begins.

The Bishop of Hull, speaking at a gathering of Church people at Selby, endeavoured to enlist the sympathy of his hearers against the practice of betting and gambling, which he described as a terrible evil whose dreadful influences require stemming. The evil is spreading among women and children, and the increase is going on among the upper, middle, and working classes. The causes are, in the Bishop's opinion, love of excitement, idleness, and covetousness, and he expressed a hope that legislation on the lines of the report of the Betting Commission will be drafted by the Government.

Congregational.

Barbican Church, Hoxton, N. (Rev. George Savary), reports that during the past year the congregations at both morning and evening services have increased, and all the societies are active. Forty-five new members have been received, and there are now 239.

Gospel services, with limelight views, have been held in past summers in a crowded neighbourhood by the friends at the "Pilgrim Fathers'" Church, New Kent Road, S.E. In the hope of renewing the effort Pastor F. Docker seeks help in obtaining new limelight apparatus and slides.

Rev. T. Bagley has entered upon his twenty-fifth year of ministry at Edmonton and Tottenham. During last year thirty-six members were received, raising the total to 507, and £2,360 was raised for all purposes. A city missionary has been engaged by the church to work in the surrounding district.

Rev. J. W. Atkinson's thirty-fourth anniversary of settlement as pastor of Latimer Church, E., was celebrated last week. Large congregations assembled on the Sunday, and at the public meeting on the Thursday a detailed statement was made by Mr. F. Clark, secretary of the church. The various organizations, including Sunday-schools, missions, &c., were reported to be in a healthy condition. About 2,000 members had been received into fellowship of the church during the present pastorate. The pastor's East-London Mission and Relief Fund amounted to £4,000.

Baptist.

Anniversary services have been held at the Baptist Chapel, Totteridge Road, Enfield Highway, Revs. A. W. Welch (Pastor) and J. W. Ewing taking part. At a public meeting Rev. J. Bradford was among the speakers. The church reports another year of steady progress.

A letter received from Rev. W. Cuff reports his arrival at Colombo on his homeward way. He is in good health and spirits, and says "he feels quite himself again." A reception meeting is being prepared at Shoreditch Tabernacle to welcome him on his arrival on or about March 28.

Rev. Thomas Spurgeon is spending a few weeks in the Canary Islands. In Sword and Trowel he contradicts the alarmist rumours that have been current about his health. March always tries him severely, and this year he is going south to escape it. He hopes to be back in his pulpit on the first Sunday in April.

A hearty and enthusiastic gathering of the church and congregation at Upper Holloway, N., took place on Wednesday evening, March 4, to celebrate the twenty-ninth anniversary of settlement of Rev. J. R. Wood. During the past year sixty-four members were added to the church, making the present membership 920, an increase of one over the previous year. The pastor bore grateful testimony to God's faithfulness to him during the twenty-nine years he has been at Upper Holloway, and especially during the past year, when exceptional demands have been made on his time and strength.

Methodist.

Hull Wesleyan Methodism, which has some of the largest and finest churches in the Connexion, will occupy new ground by the erection in Princess Avenue of a church seating 900.

At the quarterly meeting, Chertsey Primitive Methodist Mission reported progress in all departments of the work. The prospects of the station are brighter than they have been for years. There has been a gracious revival at Ashford Common during the past quarter.

Mr. A. R. Kelley, of Manchester, has placed at the disposal of the Wesleyan Home Mission department 40,000 tracts, in ten series of 4,000 each, for use at Mission services. This generous gift, which is highly appreciated by the Executive, will be of immense service in the work done by the Evangelists.

The recent fire at Lichfield Road Church, in the Aston Park Wesleyan circuit, Birmingham, has necessitated extensive restoration works, which will not be completed before the middle of April. During that interval arrangements have been made to hold a series of services on Sunday evenings, and the Theatre Royal, Aston, has been taken for that object. The services there will be carried on under the direction of Rev. A. J. T. Le Gros.

When the Church Census at Bermondsey, S.E., was taken by the Daily News enumerators, the weather was most unfavourable, and greatly affected the attendances. Notwithstanding, the Wesleyan Central Hall attendance, morning and evening only, was 2,905. This places it amongst the most largely attended places of worship in London, though the night-congregation was some hundreds of adults less than usual.

The movement among the minor Methodist Churches towards union continues to progress steadily. The representatives of four Methodist Communions—United Free Church, New Connexion, Bible Christians, and the Wesleyan Reform Union—met last week at the Memorial Hall to advance the movement a step further. Rev. M. J. Birks, President of the Methodist New Connexion, occupied the chair, and a series of resolutions embodying a tentative scheme of federation was adopted, though not without some opposition. This scheme will be laid before the forthcoming Conferences of the bodies concerned.

Presbyterian.

Remarkable progress is being made in the mission school at East India Dock Road, E. The first annual meeting of the congregation since Rev. G. A. Johnson Ross went to St. Columba's Church, Cambridge, was held recently, and the various reports and statements which were read show the church to be energetic in many activities.

At a recent meeting of London Presbytery North, Rev. C. Anderson Scott reported that his congregation (St. John's, Kensington) has undertaken to find the £1,000 which the Presbytery has to raise for the new church at East Ham. The statement was received with great satisfaction, and the Presbytery resolved to convey its heartiest thanks to the friends at Kensington.

Society of Friends.

At the meeting for sufferings, on the 6th inst., the Anti-Slavery Committee mentioned that they are quite out of funds, and overdrawn to their treasurer for the last remittance to Pemba. The expenses of the new building out there ran much higher than was expected, and this has absorbed the whole of their balance.

A meeting arranged by the Friends' Christian Fellowship Union, and largely attended by young Friends, was held recently at Devonshire House, E.C. The subject of "The Message of Quakerism for To-day," was dealt with by Anne Wakefield Richardson, who in the course of her address, said: "We have to meet an atmosphere of indifference, of denial, and of sacerdotalism. I believe there is only one power mightier than these things. That power is the power of spiritual religion. Quakerism is one of the purest and strongest manifestations in history that does affirm the truth, the eternal, and the Divine. We have responsibilities that it would be idle to deny. Our life must all be in a real sense holy, every day our life and conversation must belong to God. Nothing affects human life so much as another human life lived straight. Quakerism should help us to rise into a higher spiritual life than we have yet known. What manner of people ought we to be if we live by the Spirit which the early Quakers proclaimed.

The Weaver Tent Mission Band, which has laboured with acceptance in evangelistic services in various parts of South London, has taken over the hall of the Protestant Mission Church, Queen's Road, S.W. The building will be known in future as the "Tent Mission Hall."

The first annual rally of young people's societies of Penzance took place a few days ago, and proved to be a profitable gathering. No fewer than twelve societies participated, representing Anglican, Wesleyan, Baptist, Methodist, Free Church, Primitive Methodist, Bible Christian, Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., &c. The meeting was most helpful in emphasizing, among young people, the oneness of believers in Jesus Christ.

The anniversary services of Delaval Mission, Benwell-on-Tyne, were held on Saturday and Sunday week. At the public meeting on Saturday evening Mr. Crawford Smith, M.P., presided over a large attendance. The missioner, Mr. Peter Graham, in presenting his report, said that God has blessed the efforts put forth during the year (the first in the new hall). Some who were living lives of sin have been won for the Master. Mr. Graham also told of three young men brought to the Lord since the opening of the mission. Of these one is a candidate for the Primitive Methodist ministry, another a missionary in the home field, and the third a Salvation Army officer. Rev. W. R. Chesterton added words of earnest encouragement. On the Sunday large congregations were addressed—in the morning and afternoon by Mr. Graham, and in the evening by Mr. J. Pattison, of Hexham.

Fallen Asleep.

Mrs. Peel, wife of Rev. W. E. Peel, Congregational minister at Boston Spa. Before her marriage she was a devoted worker at Tower Street Church, West Hartlepool.—Mr. John Diplock, of Emmanuel Baptist Church, Trowbridge, said to be the oldest deacon in the denomination, aged ninety-six.

Brentwood Y.W.C.A.—The report presented at the annual meeting of this association showed that both the spiritual work and social agencies are being maintained, amid many tokens of blessing. The membership has increased by forty-seven. The Warley branch also gives evidence of a deeper vitality and development. The work of both branches is being followed with intense interest, and the objects of the association are being accomplished to a gratifying extent.

Dr. Torrey and the Drink Traffic. The crippling influence of the drink traffic upon the life of this country is being forced on Dr. Torrey, who is anxious to do every wise thing to break its benumbing power. He recently expressed his deep desire that Dr. Henry might follow his evangelistic and soul-winning work in every city, with a Christian Temperance campaign to stimulate the conscience of God's people concerning this monstrous iniquity, and so help to protect the new converts from the persistent peril of the public-house. In introducing Dr. Henry to one of the great audiences in Glasgow, he said he hoped that city would soon inaugurate such a campaign under the leadership of Dr. Henry and his colleague Mr. T. Armon Jones; and added that if half he had heard about the drink in Glasgow was true, he did not know of a city that needed such a campaign more than the second city of the Empire. These sentiments were heartily applauded.

Two Inspiring Books. We should like to ask each of our readers, "Have you read Down in Water Street and Quiet Talks on Power?" (Revell Co.), and to add, "If not, you ought to!" The first is a perfect romance of mission work in New York slums—only it is all fact. The discouraged or jaded worker will find it a better tonic than a week by the sea. The second touches the secret springs of spiritual life, and is invaluable for all who are seeking to win men for Christ. This book tells how to do it; the former shows how it is done.

The Premier and the "Trade." If we were not already accustomed to surprises, we might be astonished at the remarkable declaration made by Lord Halsbury in the House of Lords, and that made by Mr. Balfour to a brewers' deputation, concerning the action of magistrates in reducing the number of licences. Mr. Balfour's attitude is without parallel. He has taken upon himself to rebuke some scores of the wisest administrators of the law in the country; and both he and the Lord Chancellor have gone in the face of a high legal decision—that of the Master of the Rolls in the Farnham Case. We believe the latter judgment is perfectly sound, and that it will stand. What reason has Mr. Balfour to act the part of nursing-mother to the Licensed Victuallers' League? It is an insult to common intelligence for him to tell us that "no persons have a greater interest in the question of sobriety than the liquor trade." It is puerile, also, to inform us that Justices "are the trustees of the past." They are the trustees for the present. Evidently the "Trade" is terrified, and wants to terrify the Government. But justice and the public good must stand first.

The Native and the Mines. The important deputation from some of our most influential missionary societies to Lord Lansdowne, on the subject of "forced labour" in South Africa, did not wait on his lordship one day too soon. From the answer given, we learn that, as "a modest experiment," a thousand coloured men are to be taken from British Central Africa, to work in the mines within the Witwatersrand district of the Transvaal, "within a circumscribed area, where it will be possible to watch carefully the progress of the experiment." They are to be engaged for a year—not including the time it takes them to go to and from the Transvaal—and are to be safeguarded by Proclamations 37 and 38 of the year 1901. A headman will accompany them, to whom they can make any complaints. We think, however, that this statement will be received with deep dissatisfaction in the country. Such dealings with the negro on the part of the white man have a black history and an evil reputation. The Kanaka trade, the Congo outrages, &c., all tell the same tale; and it will be for the country to call upon the Government to discourage any transactions which leave an open door for injustice and oppression. The mines must be worked in some other way than by disguised slave labour.

Commercial Religion. It is not long since, in one of the English monthly reviews, a French contributor called attention to the huge revenues of some of the French Orders who were trading upon the ignorance and superstition of the Romanist population. A remarkable addition to the long list has been made in a recent speech in the French Chamber by M. Barthou, a former minister of the Government. Denouncing the "mock charity" of the Orders, he stated that in the course of a few years the Franciscans had bought £24,000 worth of real estate in Paris alone, with money which had been acquired by what they themselves termed the "Antonian miracles"; in other words, by the traffic in the alleged interference of "Saint Anthony of Padua" in the affairs of daily life. The details of this profitable business reveal an amount of cunning and duplicity on the one hand, and of dense and degraded superstition on the other, almost beyond credence. And yet those to whom it is such a source of gain are the accredited agents of what claims to be "the true Church."

Purchased Prayers. Under the heading of "A Relic of Bigotry," the Catholic Times remarks that one of the most notable features of wills in ancient England was the bequest for masses and prayers for the repose of the soul, "but the Reformation has changed all that." It adds, however:—

> If the Anglican view is vague and puzzling, the law is definite enough. Gifts to priests, not intended for the clergymen themselves, but to ensure prayers for the dead, are void."

The writer warns Catholic readers who desire to bequeath money for masses to take care lest they be foiled in their purpose. The recent decision of Vice-Chancellor Hall in the Chancery Court at Liverpool, upon which our contemporary bases its advice, had reference, however, only to bequests to the Church of England for prayers for the dead. Surely the Catholic Times ought to be aware that the bequests for masses for the souls in purgatory are one of the principal sources of the priest's revenue. A reference to the bi-weekly official Dublin Gazette, in which, according to law, charitable bequests in Ireland must be announced, will show how numerous and great the income is from that source, and how constantly the priest comes between the legatee and the relatives.

Fasting and Feasting. In a remarkable chapter on Christ in society, in his well-known volume, "Imago Christi," Rev. Dr. Stalker emphasizes the remarkable contrast between our Lord and his forerunner John the Baptist. John waited until people came to him, Jesus went to them. "The disciples of John fasted, those of Jesus feasted," and Dr. Stalker remarks:—

> Hospitality affords unrivalled opportunities of conversation, and Jesus made use of these to speak words of eternal life. If you carefully examine His words, you will be surprised to find how many of them are literally table talk—words spoken to His fellow guests at meals. Some of His most priceless sayings, which are now the watchwords of His religion, were uttered in these commonplace circumstances, such as "They that are whole have no need of a physician, but they that are sick," "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost," and many others.

In such simple ways it is possible to dignify life and to find opportunities of imitating the Master, who "went about doing good." The food may be but "barley loaves," but the message may be from God.

The Licence of Opinion. In the course of a little correspondence in the columns of a London daily, evoked by an article dealing with religious questions, we have had placed before us the opinions of one who enjoys a great reputation in many quarters as a Socialist leader. And we call attention to the position he takes up, simply because it is a fair specimen of what is extremely common to-day. It also sheds a light upon the troubled question of the hour—Why do men not go to church? Disavowing belief in materialism, and careful to say that he does not deny God or the soul, Mr. Blatchford protests against what he calls "the superstitions and dogmas of all the forms of religion with which I am acquainted." And all he offers in support of his position is—a mere opinion—"I do not say," "I am of opinion," "I deny," "I do not believe," "I think," "I am inclined to think"—these are the leading words in this manifesto. And they are the words upon the lips of thousands.

Opinion and Fact. To dismiss, as Mr. Blatchford does, such tremendous issues as one's relations to God, the future life with its eternal consequences, the Godhead of our Lord Jesus, the value of prayer, and other truths treated in his letter, upon the ground of an opinion, is a deeply serious matter—serious for the man himself, and more serious for the many to whom his words come. Very much of the unbelief of our time reposes upon nothing else than men's personal opinions. But those who treat the most solemn themes of life in this way would not be allowed so to treat, say, chemical or astronomical facts. Scientists would sharply rebuke the man who opposed mere opinions to established facts. And the things that Mr. Blatchford dismisses so lightly are proven facts, experienced by millions of people. In grateful contrast, stand the assurances of the Apostles—"I am persuaded;" "We know."

Physical Degeneracy. The report of the Royal Commission upon the question of physical training in Scotland is not at all encouraging. Edinburgh comes out badly, the children in that city, so favoured in the matter of education, being far below those of Aberdeen in height and weight. In Aberdeen, the children examined were to the extent of 0·5 per cent. in poor health; in Edinburgh the proportion was 19·17 per cent. To Aberdeen's 8·8 per cent. of mental dulness, Edinburgh responds with a ratio of 12·33 per cent. The usual causes of this degeneracy are noted; bad housing and poor food. Where Aberdeen has three-roomed houses, Edinburgh has only those of two rooms. To these causes we add a third, and one that partially explains the other two; i.e., the terrible prevalence of whisky drinking. It is of no use to ignore this last factor, for it is the greatest of the three. Men have been deaf for long enough to appeals from the higher side; will these revelations of physical degeneracy startle the nation into putting its house in order? Where men fully receive the Gospel, "spirit and soul and body" are "preserved blameless" in Christ; where they reject that Gospel, the body soon comes to share in the shame of the soul.

Weary Children. In "Man in the Making," a series of striking papers in the Fortnightly Review, Mr. W. G. Wells has suggested a number of means which should be employed to improve "the average man of the coming years"—such as improved housing, ethical training, the abolition of the serf taint, &c. Setting aside the greatest of all, to which the writer fails to give prominence, to "seek first the Kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you" (Luke xii. 31), it is open to question if anything is more important than the care and protection of the child by parents and the State. Of late years much has been done by Parliament in the direction of the latter, but much remains to be achieved. It is almost startling to find Sir John Gorst, in a paper in the current number of the Nineteenth Century, after alluding to the failure to carry out the recommendations of the House of Commons Committee upon the overworking of school children, saying:

A substantial number of children, amounting probably to 50,000, were being worked more than 20 hours a week in addition to 27½ at school, and a considerable proportion to 30 or 40, and some even to 50 hours a week, the effect being detrimental to their health, morals, and education.

Is it to be wondered at that in such circumstances there is a falling off in the attendance at our Sunday-schools? A week of unremitting child-labour is far from being a fit preparation for the Sabbath.

The Need for early Training. But there is grave need for another Coleridge to arise and teach the men of this generation the lesson which the philosopher once taught one whose eclectic notions allowed him to despise the idea of teaching children anything definite in religion, on the ground that they should choose for themselves when old enough. Coleridge showed his friend a garden covered with weeds, whose growth was due to the garden being left to itself, and delivered from being "prejudiced" towards fruit and flower. We strongly dissent from the view of Mr. Wells, that a definite religious training of youth is worse than useless. And the singular reason is advanced, that if boys and girls are surrounded by good books—these and the growing soul will do their business without any scholastic control. A healthy atmosphere, he tells us, will make unnecessary any specific ethical teaching—"they will inhale right." This astonishing fallacy entirely ignores the facts of life. If children are abandoned to their own forces, to discover the truth as best they may, there can only be one result. If children have to be directed physically, socially, and mentally, by what law is the process to be suspended when it is a question of their highest nature? It is laxity on the part of parents in the matter of this higher training, that is responsible for so many of the ills of the day.

The Secret of Noble Life. Unhappily it is not often that a daily newspaper holds up a high ideal of the spiritual life, and it would be well if the occasions were more frequent. Surely such a passage as the following, taken from a reference to a lately-deceased author, cannot have failed to reach the heart of some man or woman perhaps but little accustomed to what has finely been termed "the practice of the presence of God:"—

Communion with God is given to those who seek it diligently, not to those who despise it or pass it lightly by; in this respect, it is like all other scientific truth. . . The history of religious thought of the world has conclusively proved that the reception of the ideal of Christ has been the most efficient means of promoting this intimate communion with God. . . . The man who lives consistently and continually in communion with the idea of Christ cannot fail to be very different from the man who does not. However much circumstances may be in his case more unfavourable than in the other, however much he may be himself inferior in strength of purpose and of will, the position he occupies places him upon an incomparably higher platform than the other.

The Pauline Epistles. In a noteworthy article in the current number of the New Liberal Review Rev. J. O. F. Murray, Fellow and Dean of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, ably disposes of the fallacious arguments contained in the notorious articles contributed by Professor van Manen to the "Encyclopædia Biblica." In those papers the writer labours to prove that certain of the Pauline Epistles could not have been, and were not, written by Paul—even the four the authorship of which hitherto has been undoubted. By some of the "higher critics" his arguments have been deemed conclusive. Rev. J. O. Murray exposes their utter weakness and the "suicidal" method of their propounder:—

I am only a college lecturer who has spent the last twenty years in studying the New Testament, and especially in trying to expound the Epistles of St. Paul to a great variety of students (modestly says Mr. Murray); but, at any rate, I can heartily endorse the verdict of the distinguished scholar, who has as great a right to be heard on the subject as any man living.

And that scholar, Professor Deissmann, has deemed the Epistles to be letters of Paul—pieces of his biography, absolutely trustworthy and supremely authoritative as historical records.

The Death of Christ.

SHORTLY after its appearance, we called attention to Dr. Denney's new work on the Atonement.* It is a pleasure now to give some particulars of its substance and method, and to do it a measure of justice as an important contribution to Biblical Theology. The book is worthy of its distinguished author in point of scholarship and clearness of statement; and we would fain hope that it will be influential in correcting some of the erroneous teachings of our day.

Dr. Denney deals, first with the words of Christ regarding His death, then with the early Christian preaching. That is to say, after examining the Gospels, he takes us through the Acts and Epistles. His method does credit to scientific order; and, while pointing out the positive doctrine of Scripture, he is at pains to contrast therewith some of those views whereby, in ancient and modern times, men have made departure from the simplicity of revealed truth. Dr. Denney shows to what little purpose those who are wise above what is written explain away the terms in which the Gospel of God's grace is set forth in the New Testament. He is content with the language of evangelists and apostles; accordingly, he speaks of sacrifice and propitiation, the sufferings, blood, and death of Christ, in a manner agreeable to a Gospel of salvation through eternal redemption, the work of the adorable Son of God, who "was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification."

The concluding chapter, on "The Importance of the Death of Christ in Preaching and in Theology," is a grand statement of sound doctrine. We are grateful to Dr. Denney for a powerful demonstration of Scripture truth, in its own terms, and in its properly authenticated interpretation. The following are timely words:

There is such a thing as preaching in which the death of Christ has no place corresponding to that which it has in the New Testament. There is preaching in which the New Testament interpretation of Christ's death is ignored, or carped at, or exploded. We do not need to argue that no man can preach the Gospel until he has absorbed into his mind and heart the whole significance of Christ's death as the New Testament reveals it; in that case, who could preach at all? But it is not unjust to say that no man will so preach as to leave the impression that he has the Word of God behind him, if he is inwardly at war with the idea of atonement, constantly engaged in minimizing it, maintaining an attitude of reserve, or even of self-defence, in relation to it. We may take it or leave it, but it is idle to attempt to propagate the Christian religion on the basis and with the authority of the New Testament, unless we have welcomed it into our whole heart.

On the subject of Christian assurance, Dr. Denney says some good things:—

The position of the believer is not that of one trembling at the judgment seat, or of one for whom everything remains somehow in a condition of suspense; it is that of one who has the assurance of a Divine love which has gone deeper than all his sins, and has taken on itself the responsibility of them, and the responsibility of delivering him from them. A relation to God in which sin has nothing to say, but which is summed up in Christ and His perfect Atonement for sin—in John Wesley's words, full salvation now—is the burden of the Gospel. . . .

It is this great Gospel—experience of reconciliation through the death of Christ—which is the Gospel to win souls, this message of a sin-bearing, sin-expiating love, which pleads for acceptance, which takes the whole responsibility of the sinner unconditionally, with no preliminaries, if only he abandon himself to it. Only the preaching of full salvation now, as Wesley tells us—and who knew better from experience than he?—has any promise in it of revival.

This work comes out at the right time. We could specially wish for it the earnest attention of those who, in the spirit of present-day refinement, are in the habit of preaching a Gospel in which the death of Christ lacks the important place and sublime interpretation assigned to it in Holy Scripture.

Preaching to Win Souls.

By Rev. T L. CUYLER, D.D.

"HOW far do your chief preachers aim at the conversion of souls?" This question, once addressed to me by that master-workman, Charles H. Spurgeon, is pertinent yet; it showed his estimate of the highest purpose of the Christian ministry.

Certainly, the chief aim of our Divine Master was to seek and to save the lost; His first text of which we read was the word, "Repent!" To win souls to Jesus Christ by the aid of the Holy Spirit was the main purpose of the Apostles. Paul struck the keynote when he declared that he was determined to know nothing but Jesus Christ and Him crucified; and he ceased not to warn sinners night and day with tears. The great Reformation in the sixteenth century was far more than a protest against prevailing errors; it was a direct bringing of souls to the Lord Jesus Christ. When a spiritual famine prevailed in Great Britain, the Wesleys and Whitefield rose at once to the demand of the times; they addressed their fellow-countrymen as exposed to the "wrath to come," and their one aim was to lead souls to the Saviour. Out of these wise labours grew the mighty Methodist Church, with its world-wide labours and philanthropies.

The question which my beloved British brother addressed to me is pertinent to every minister of the Gospel: "How far do you aim mainly at the conversion of souls?" No minister is likely to succeed in what he undertakes with only half a heart; certainly he can never do what he never even attempts to do.

If your whole heart is not bent on the glorious work of converting sinners by the help of God, you will never accomplish it. You may produce many able discourses freighted with valuable thought; you may wax eloquent over social evils, and plead for reformatory measures and philanthropies; you may say many good, true, and helpful things; but if you stop short of leading immortal souls to Christ, your ministry in one vital point will miss its mark.

There is much talk about "saving the masses"; but people are not saved in the mass: they must be reached and persuaded Christward

ONE BY ONE.

Men may go to perdition by the regiment; they must be led to Jesus individually. A single soul was audience enough for the Master at the well of Sychar, and in the "inquiry-room" with Nicodemus.

Aim, therefore, to make your preaching pointed and individualizing. You are not to be a pulpit scold; but you may so present God's truth pungently and lovingly that every unconverted person in your audience may be made to feel, "That means me!" "Thou art the man," sent David's arrow into Nathan's heart. Pray God to help you love every sinner before you so fervently, that you will tell him plainly that if he does not repent of his sins and accept and obey Jesus Christ, he will be lost for ever! The too common assertion that the faithful, tender and solemn presentation of the Divinely revealed retributions of sin is an attempt to "scare people into religion," is utterly preposterous. As "ambassadors for Christ," it is our bounden duty to "declare the whole counsel of God," and we have no right to conceal or to belittle any great revealed truth. If Noah had not been "moved with fear" of a predicted deluge, he never would have prepared an ark for saving himself and his household. It is a criminal cruelty to conceal from the transgressors of God's law and of God's love that "the wages of sin is death."

There is much truth in Mr. Gladstone's weighty declaration that against God is one of the most serious portents of these days." Preach, therefore, my brother, most plainly and lovingly the guilt and the doom of sin; and pray that every impenitent soul before you may be convicted by the Holy Spirit. Nobody is likely to flee to the Lord Jesus Christ until he or she feels the need of Him. Deep convictions of sin usually produce deep conversions; shallow convictions produce shallow conversions and half-way Christians.

Only a part of your soul-winning is likely to be done in the pulpit. Much of it is to be done by PERSONAL INTERVIEWS.

Seize opportunities. Keep your doors open to all who desire to converse with you. Pastoral visitation (which is going too much out of fashion) will give you opportunity to discover those who are anxious about their souls' welfare, and you will rejoice to converse with them, and to urge an immediate acceptance of Christ. Once when during my afternoon visits I discovered three or four inquirers, I summoned my church officers, and special services were appointed every evening. They resulted in the conversion of nearly an hundred persons. Watch for the presence of the Holy Spirit! Listen for the first drops of blessing, and then gird yourself for the happy work. "It is my heaven on earth," said Samuel Rutherford, "to spend my days in gathering in some souls to Christ."

A Search for Fruit.

IT was on a bright midsummer Sunday afternoon in the year 1860. The tide of grace was flowing deep and wide throughout Scotland, and especially in the city of Edinburgh. Such noted evangelists as Brownlow North, W. P. Mackay, Reginald Radcliffe, Richard Weaver, Gordon Forlong, and many others were sending forth the Word of God.

The church situate in Fountainbridge, of which Rev. J. Hood Wilson was the minister, was packed in every corner with an eager, expectant crowd. This was no unusual event in those days, when the power and presence of the Lord pervaded almost every assembly of waiting and worshipping people, whether on the Lord's Day or during the week. The preacher, however, on the occasion referred to, was of no ordinary merit and interest, being none other than the well-known and much-loved Duncan Matheson, fresh from all his wonderful exploits and hair-breadth escapes incident to the Crimean campaign.

How it thrills one with a healthful spiritual glow, even at this remote date, to recall the man; his robust, honest, manly form and features as, clad in an ordinary tweed suit, he made his way through the throng, with difficulty climbing the pulpit stairs.

His message is soon announced, and without preface, and with fixed gaze on the congregation, and with the clear, musical, Northern voice with which he was gifted, he sounded out the words,

"FRUIT! FRUIT!! FRUIT!!!"

They have echoed and re-echoed in my own heart hundreds of times since then, as they must have done in the heart of many others besides, with, let us trust, the most beneficial results.

The preacher's theme—and he is full of it—is the barren fig-tree. "These three years," says the owner of the vineyard, "I have come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none;" and again the sonorous voice of the preacher is heard enunciating, "Fruit! Fruit!! Fruit!!! God will be satisfied with nothing less. He must have fruit, and yet more fruit. He has come into His garden to eat His pleasant fruits. It is not profession or external display; no mere name to live and yet dead. There must be life, abundant and overflowing life, manifesting itself in good and abiding fruit; and it is the Owner of the vineyard who has come, and come again for the third time. It is therefore a question of careful investigation, diligent research, and the demand is for fruit. He is in search of faith, love, joy, purity, peace, meekness, with all consistency of life and character, and what is His verdict? What is His final Word? 'I find none!' Oh, the piercing, penetrating, trenchant statement which follows, 'Cut it down!' The goodness, yes, but also the severity of God—the hammer of His Word, 'Cut it down!'"

How heart-searching the application, as the Word is passed from pew to pew, acccompanied by the scrutinizing presence of the Spirit of God, arrested only by the merciful interposition of the vine dresser: "One year more, till I shall dig about it and dung it." Oh the patience, forbearance, and long suffering of God!

Is there no lesson to ourselves in these days, from the brief and incidental reference to this old-time message, as God is heard calling again, and loudly, for fruit—brushing aside all formalism, all mere externalism, volubility, superficiality, all cold, critical, calculating cynicism, and demanding fruit, begotten of the Spirit of God, while His question is sounding in our ears, "What more could I have done for my vineyard?" T. Swanston Smith.

The Widow's Son.

(Luke vii. 12.)

O Christ! Thy miracles of love
Surprise us everywhere,
In ways abundantly above
Our boldest flights of prayer.
Incurables of every type
Who come in dire dismay,
Discover that Thy touch can wipe
Their deep disease away.
In speech and sound and vision new,
The dumb and deaf and blind
Have proved Thy promise vastly true.
That they who seek shall find.
But thou supplicst all our need
From riches stored away,
In promises we dare not plead
When souls have ceased to pray.
The dead have no desire to wake
Out of their fatal sleep—
The hearts that love them best may break—
They care not who must weep.
The reputation-robe is white
That shrouds the soul's decay,
They do not feel the awful blight,
Or dread the judgment day.
And till beneath its blinding glare
Thy form, as Judge, they see,
O Thou, who Hearer art of prayer!
Will they not come to Thee?
But, hark! Amid our burial pace
Sounds Thy triumphant tread,
In resurrection power, and grace,
Thou comest to the dead.
Thy Word goes forth and breaks the spell,
And, with convincing breath,
The risen soul begins to tell
Of love that conquers death.
And as we gaze, we catch the sound
Of music long forgot;
For God sings o'er them—"I am found
Of them that sought me not."

The Wesley Bicentenary.—I.

By REV. J. P. GLEDSTONE,

Author of "George Whitefield, Field-Preacher."

JOHN WESLEY was born at Epworth, Lincolnshire, on June 17, 1703 (O.S.), 28th (N.S.); he was converted on May 24, 1738, at a meeting in Aldersgate Street, London, while someone was reading Luther's preface to the Epistle to the Romans. Between these two events he had enjoyed in the rectory at Epworth the advantage of an exceptionally wise training on the part of his parents, particularly his mother; he had been educated at Charterhouse, London, where he made good use of his opportunities, and at Oxford University, where he distinguished himself as a scholar; he had assisted his father in his parish work; he had come under powerful religious impressions, and in the carrying of them out had received, along with his brother Charles, with George Whitefield, and other students of like mind, the nickname of "Methodist"; he had turned away from university honours and home comforts to become the chaplain of the newly-formed colony of Georgia, which got hard, ungrudging, but not always wise service from him, and repaid him with intense dislike and mean persecution; he had come under the influence of the Moravians, from whom he learnt much about salvation by faith.

I attempt no analysis of the influence of these and some minor things in making him the man he became; I doubt whether any of a satisfactory kind can be made. I note them only as milestones in his life. He is now thirty-five years of age; in body hardy and enduring; in mind splendidly trained; in experience no novice, but well-seasoned with wide intercourse with men of all sorts and conditions; yet, for all that, easy to deceive and mislead; in grace firmly rooted and grounded.

WESLEY'S CONVERSION.

What does Wesley say he experienced on that memorable day in May? He says:—

I felt my heart strangely warmed. I felt I did trust in Christ, Christ alone, for my salvation; and an assurance was given me, that he had taken away my sins, even mine, and saved me from the law of sin and death; and I then testified openly to all there what I now first felt in my heart.

Eighteen days afterwards he preached at St. Mary's, Oxford, a sermon from the text, "By grace are ye saved, through faith," in the course of which he said:—

Faith is a full reliance on the blood of Christ, and a trust in the merits of His life, death, and resurrection—a recumbency upon Him as our atonement and our life, as given for us and living in us; and, in consequence hereof, a closing with Him and cleaving to Him as our wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, redemption, or, in one word, our salvation.

He further went on to say that this was a salvation from the guilt of all past sin, from slavish fear, from the power of sin, and that he who has it is pardoned, has the witness of the Spirit that he is a child of God, is born again, and lives without sin. That text was always a favourite text, and its theme the burden of his long ministry. The intellectual perception of these great evangelical truths had long been in his mind; but now they were a living and life-giving power. He had an experience, and could say, "I know." Nor did he ever deviate. He said twenty-seven years after his great change:—

I think on justification just as I have done any time these seven-and-twenty years, and just as Mr. Calvin does. In this respect I do not differ from him an hair's breadth.

FAITH AND ASSURANCE.

Wesley not only was firm and clear on justification by faith, but laid great stress on assurance—too much at the beginning of his ministry. Yet it is a comforting doctrine, and had a marvellous influence upon thousands of souls. It brought that element of certainty and conviction into religion which is always such a power to support the spirit in work and in the endurance of persecution. It is sometimes remarked of professors of religion that they have enough religion to make them miserable, but not enough to make them happy. Wesley was determined his converts should have enough to make them happy. He came with a full glad message for all, for the poorest and the most depraved, as well as for the well-to-do and the outwardly righteous. He always testified that "the grace or love of God, whence cometh our salvation, is free in all, and free for all." He announced free and full forgiveness through faith in the Lamb of God, who took away the sins of the whole world. And he urged that every one might, and ought to know his sins forgiven; might, and ought to know that he was accepted in the Beloved; might, and ought to enjoy the witness of the Holy Spirit in his heart, testifying that he was a son of God. These things were almost practically a new revelation at that time, and God set his seal upon them by saving multitudes of souls through the preaching of them.

Wesley admitted in later years that at the time of what he called his conversion, he too severely condemned his state preceding it, and too peremptorily insisted that if a man did not enjoy the knowledge of the forgiveness of sins he was not a Christian in the proper sense of the word. In re-examining his position as to faith and assurance, he says:

By justifying faith, I mean that faith which whosoever hath not is under the curse and wrath of God. By a sense of pardon, I mean a distinct, explicit assurance that my sins are forgiven. But I cannot allow that justifying faith is such an assurance, or necessarily connected therewith. If you object—1. "We know fifteen hundred persons who have this assurance." Perhaps so, but this does not prove that they were not justified till they received it. 2. "We have been exceedingly blessed in preaching this doctrine (viz., that justifying faith is an assurance of pardon). We have been blessed in preaching the great truths of the Gospel; although we tacked to them, in the simplicity of our hearts, a proposition which was not true."

Wesley drew a clear and sharp distinction between having an assurance of everlasting salvation, which he thought was the thing the apostle meant by the full assurance of hope, and such an assurance of being now in the favour of God as excludes all doubt and fear, which he thought was the thing the apostle meant by the full assurance of faith.

A GOSPEL OF VICTORY AND JOY.

There can be no doubt that this note of assurance had an enormous power for good, both over the Church and over the world. True, it might sometimes be exaggerated, and stated with so much dogmatism and uncharitableness as to stagger some good but timid Christians, such as John Bunyan, in his wider charity and clearer knowledge, numbered in his band of true Christians, and saw safely through the river and over to the shining shore and the golden city—Mr. Ready-to-Halt, Mr. Despondency, and Mr. Feeblemind. Even Bunyan was always trying to cheer up these slow and trembling pilgrims, and in his own vigorous way made Feeblemind request Mr. Valiant, when he was gone, to bury his feeble mind in a dunghill! Wesley and his preachers, by their early lack of discrimination, made some souls sad whom God had not made sad. Yet they were right when they showed the full privilege of believers, and urged everyone to enter into it. They aided in raising and quickening the whole tone of religious life. Gladness took the place of despondency, and songs of joy the place of complaining. The hymns were full of joy and victory and thanksgiving; and the tunes corresponded to them.

If a religion may be judged of by its music and hymns, early Methodism was to our modern religion—the religion of science, and criticism, and æstheticism—as the song of a lark to "the turtle's moan." There was an inspiration, an uplift heavenward, in the Revival. There was confidence in the truth and in God. Believers knew that they had their feet upon the Rock of Ages, and their hope within the veil.

THE MORAL FOR TO-DAY.

Would it not now be infinitely better for individuals, and for the churches as a whole, if preaching power were more directed towards bringing souls into "the full assurance of hope," and less toward throwing them into the night of doubt as to whether the Scriptures are the Word of God? Would it not compel preacher and hearer alike to face afresh the old tremendous facts—God, sin, death, judgment, and "the wrath to come"? And in facing them would not many flimsy "views" be peremptorily dismissed as inadequate, if not utterly untrue? And would there not be a return to an objective Atonement which has once for all taken sin away? and to the Grace of God from which alone cometh salvation? and to the Communion of the Holy Spirit in which only can be found power and guidance, comfort and peace?

The mere assurances that God is good and merciful have been tried, and never have done anything better than give us a mild and easy-going body of Christians who are contented with things as they are, who, in too many instances, are engrossed in worldly concerns, who have neither the will nor the power to make any attacks on the kingdom of darkness. The "broad teaching," as it is called, of the last thirty or forty years, has proved a conspicuous failure when compared with the old teaching, which led sinners to repent of sin, to turn to God with broken and contrite hearts, and to walk in the ways of righteousness and peace. It is a failure even when compared with the humanitarianism of the old; for the old swept slavery off the face of British ground, and then out of America; it gave John Howard to the service of prisoners in every land; it affirmed in the plainest terms the doctrine of the equality of all men, a doctrine by no means accepted yet in certain commercial and military circles; it elevated human ideals, and continues to be the main working force in the amelioration of suffering and the protection of the poor and oppressed. Explain it how we may, the old type of Christian, who believed in the forgiveness of sins through faith in Jesus Christ as the propitiation for the sins of the whole world, and who enjoyed the witness of the Holy Spirit in his heart, was "ready unto every good work," joyful in tribulation, consecrated to sacrifice.

OLD AND NEW.

A good deal of ethical teaching might be required to enable him to understand his exact position, but he had eyes to see, a heart to feel, and a will to act. The cross of Christ represented to him motive force equal to any demand. But we chiefly insist upon this, that it evoked for sinners who were without God and without hope in the world a tender compassion, such as the new teaching does not create, it made him anxious to save souls, it turned him into some sort of a worker, and he would have been ashamed to spend his Sundays in self-indulgence, and his weekdays in nothing but money-making and society engagements. His apprehension of the cross gave him intense sympathy with the spiritual side of life. If he was used of the Holy Spirit to bring one sinner to repentance, his joy was as that of the angels in heaven.

We claim that in the old teaching there was far more love, though much less sentimentality, than in the new; that there was a righteousness of God which satisfied the conscience concerning the remission of sins that are past, which we look for in vain in the new view of the Atonement—a mere revelation of love; that it contained moral incentives far more imperative and tender than the views which seek to supersede it. For every reason, a revival of pure Evangelicalism is earnestly to be desired and prayed for.

Sermons and Prayer for the Lord's Day. —The Working Men's Lord's-Day Rest Association is asking clergymen and ministers to preach sermons and offer special prayer on Sunday, April 19, against "the torrent of Sabbath desecration which seems to be flooding the country." The president of the Wesleyan Conference is actively co-operating with the Association, and has addressed a letter to all Wesleyan ministers, asking them to preach sermons and arrange for instruction on the observance of the Lord's Day, to be given in their Sunday schools. A leaflet suggesting a list of topics for special prayer and sermons, and a selection of up-to-date facts and literature will be sent to preachers on application to Mr. Charles Hill, secretary Lord's Day Rest Association, 12, John Street, Bedford Row, London.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, March 29. Esther ii.

THE proposal of "the king's servants," however shameful it may seem to us, is familiar enough among peoples where Christianity has never taught the dignity of woman.

In Oriental lands, when a young girl is summoned to the palace, her parents or guardians dare not refuse; and Mordecai, therefore, had no choice than to let the young Hadassah (the Myrtle), whom he had loved and reared as his own daughter, obey the royal command. He seems to have had some official position about the palace, and this enabled him from time to time to obtain hints of how matters stood with his ward; though, for the most part, the secrets of the harem are never allowed to pass, even in a whisper, beyond the walls.

The favour which the chief chamberlain entertained towards Esther (the Star), and in which all who knew her shared; the modesty, contentment, and beauty of her nature; the grace and favour which she obtained in the eyes of Ahasuerus, and her subsequent coronation; the conspicuous service which Mordecai was able, through her, to render to the king, and the fact that it was not at once acknowledged and rewarded, were all steps in the evolution of a Divine purpose, which had great designs in view. How can we read a story like this without realizing that God has a plan for each of us, for which He is manipulating events and people, that lie far beyond our ken? And we, also, have been raised up to serve some Divine purpose for the Church, the Jews, or the world. No life is aimless, no occurrence fortuitous, no relationship unimportant.

MONDAY, March 30. Esther iii.

Haman was an Amalekite! How strange to come again on this hereditary feud between the chosen people and this hated tribe (Ex. xvii. 8, &c.; Deut. xxv. 17; 1 Sam. xv. 2; 2 Sam. i. 8). We must not forget that Amalek has always stood for the sins of the flesh, and must remember that to the very end of our life we may be exposed to attacks from this quarter. The steaming fragrance of the mess of pottage and the temptation to barter our spiritual birthright for a single meal (Gen. xxv. 34), is ever with us.

Raised suddenly by the caprice of the king to be vizier and confidential minister, and permitted by royal authority to receive the obsequious homage which the Persian monarchs were wont to exact, the new favourite insisted that when he passed through the gate into the palace (the Sublime Porte) all the officials should prostrate themselves before him. This Mordecai refused to do on religious grounds. He accounted it a sin to give to man the prostration which was due to God alone. And for this reason Haman resolved not only on his death, but on the destruction of his people.

What a contrast is presented between this exemplification of the pride of the human heart, and the lowly example of Jesus, washing the feet, not of a Mordecai, but of Judas (John xiii.)! What a contrast, also, to the spirit which the Master has infused into his noblest followers!

By the calculations of astrologers, searching over a space of twelve months, Haman had at last discovered what promised to be a lucky day for executing his plan. He therefore approached the king, backing his iniquitous proposal, first by gross misrepresentations of the character of the Jews, as irreconcilables; and, specially, by the promise to pay into the royal treasury between two and three millions of pounds. The fatal bargain was struck. King and minister sat down to sensual carouse, while the hearts and homes of thousands of citizens were filled with consternation (15).

TUESDAY, March 31. Esther iv.

On being informed of the terms of the royal decree for the extermination of his people, Mordecai gave way to the signs of excessive grief, as well he might. These attracted the attention of the inmates of the harem, as he doubtless hoped they would, and led Esther to make inquiries into the cause. All had to be done with the greatest secrecy, as it was treason for such communications to pass to and fro; but Hatach, one of the chamberlains, seems to have been specially won over by the sweetness and goodness of Esther, and to have been the willing medium for communications between Mordecai and herself. Notice how every link of the chain had been perfected by Divine Providence. Nothing is left to chance. No link is missing. Each agent is necessary to the evolution of the plan. God can help His people, by ordinary means, and apart from miracles. He is as great in the minute as in the great; and we may be equally sure that each detail of our existence, each tear, each sigh, each anxiety, is part of an eternal purpose which only means blessing and deliverance for us. Dare to believe it: look up and rejoice: all things are working for good (Rom. viii. 28).

Mordecai was sure that deliverance would somehow arise, but he longed that it might come through the beloved Esther. It seemed as though she had been raised up for this very purpose, and it would be a million pities for her to miss the chance of being the channel through which God's deliverance might come. In answer to his urging, and after much prayer, she stepped out on her dangerous path, believing in the God of her fathers; and He went before, making the crooked places straight. Through thee, also, the redemptive purpose may flow to thy country and thy neighbourhood, if thou wilt only rise to the call of the Crucified. Step out in faith, for to miss the chance will be to incur the fate of the rubbish-heap.

WEDNESDAY, April 1. Esther v.

Kings' hearts are at the disposal of the Lord, and He turns them whither He will; and by God's good hand, as Esther stood in the inner court of the audience chamber, clad in her royal apparel, looking so fair and queenly, she attracted the king's favour, and he extended towards her the long, slender, golden rod, or sceptre, which is still depicted on the bas-reliefs of Persepolis.

It was very politic of the queen to invite the king and his minister to a banquet. It enabled her to ingratiate herself with the one, and obtain a more favourable opportunity of making her request, whilst it threw the latter off his guard. What a graphic picture is given of Haman's return from the banquet! He leaves it "joyful and glad of heart"; but has not gone many paces before he sees the one erect figure of his enemy amid the prostrate and obsequious throng of courtiers; he refrains himself, however, and hurries home to a self-congratulatory meeting with his wife and friends.

What a contrast between the two women—Zeresh and Esther. The one proud, vindictive, unscrupulous; a kind of Jezebel, stopping at nothing which would enhance the comfort and splendour of her lord. Such women are the evil genius of men, inflating their pride, goading them to deeds from which they might have shrunk. Happy is the man whose life is guided by a sweet heavenly star, like Esther. There are no troubles which can greatly disturb his heart.

How precarious is the glad-heartedness which is not founded in God! The discordance of one note may silence the whole remaining orchestra. The worldling is at the mercy of any one of a myriad of people and things; whilst he who has learnt to rejoice in the Lord lives in an element into which such disturbances cannot intrude.

THURSDAY, April 2. Esther vi.

The royal sleeplessness, leading to the reading of the records, and the discovery that Mordecai had been unrewarded, was a further link in this wonderful chain of events. Even our sleepless hours have a meaning!

But notice the Divine precision. Had Ahasuerus been wakeful on the following night it would have been too late. Haman would have been hanging on the gallows, and would not have been able to officiate in the memorable scene of Mordecai's exaltation. Thus a great lesson for all time would have been missed; and Haman would not have drunk the cup of very wholesome discipline.

It seems as though the veil was for a moment withdrawn from God's dealings with men. Probably there is not a Mordecai anywhere, who, ultimately, shall not be rewarded according to his merits, if by faithful continuance in well-doing he has sought to be faithful and true towards God and man. Though the high-handed wrong of the wicked man may flourish for a time, he will be checked in mid-career. "The Lord shall laugh at him, for he seeth that his day is coming." There is a sure Nemesis in God's judgments. They that dig pits for others fall into them themselves. Read Psalm xxxvii.

FRIDAY, April 3. Esther vii.

When King Ahasuerus realized the full significance of the wicked stratagem of which he had been made a victim, his indignation knew no bounds. He left the apartment to walk for a moment or two in the palace garden. On his return, it seemed as though Haman, in the agony of his speech, was approaching too closely to the queen, and at once his doom was sealed. The chamberlain who had summoned him to the banquet had probably noticed the huge gallows which he had prepared for Mordecai, and on naming these to the king they were utilized for his own execution.

Is there not in all this a further dispensational significance? We remember how Satan has ever hated man, and especially the Son of Man. What if the cross of Calvary were the gallows, by which he intended that the life and ministry of Christ should be for ever overwhelmed in shame? But, if so, how absolutely God has reversed the diabolical intention! To the Jews, a crucified Christ may be a stumbling block, and to the Greeks, the cross may be foolishness, but unto us, who are being saved, it is the power of God. The cross indeed, so far from being the undoing of Christ, has been His glory, and has destroyed him which had the power of death, that is, the devil, delivering them who through fear of death were always subject to bondage.

SATURDAY, April 4. Esther viii.

By the gift of the royal signet-ring, Mordecai was made prime-minister in place of Haman; and was also appointed by Esther to administer the great estate of which she had suddenly become possessed. It was necessary, however, that the sanguinary decree issued by Haman should be reversed; otherwise, though the favourite had fallen, his evil plans, ratified by the irrevocable laws of the Medes and Persians, must take effect. A second time, therefore, the queen entered the king's presence, and falling at his feet, besought him with tears.

With exquisite humility she identified herself with her suffering people! Would that we could more deeply feel our unity with the lost and fallen, with the overcrowded people of our great cities, with the drunkard's wife and child, with the victims of oppression and sin, with the Bulgarians trampled under the cruel heel of the Turk! Oh to be able to appropriate Esther's tears and words: "How can I endure to see the evil that shall come unto my people, or how can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred!"

The second decree, authorizing the Jews to stand on their defence, was sent out with all despatch that it might catch up the message of death, and reach the remotest parts of the empire before the fateful day. What a welcome task was entrusted to the royal messengers! How lightsomely and swiftly their wind-camels sped, and what welcome was given to them everywhere! With similar alacrity the Church should send forth the message of salvation and life in Jesus Christ to all the world. We are told that they were "hastened and pressed on by the king's commandment." But what urgency can compare with Christ's desire that to all the world the Gospel should be preached in this generation, that so the end may come!

Other Lands.

Among the Kabyles.—I.

KABYLIA is putting on her spring garment, and begins to look lovely. Every setting sun leaves brighter tints upon fields and pasture land; every new morn greets more new buds bursting into blossoms. The fig-tree alone seems slow in responding to the life-giving touch of nature. Covered with it are large tracts of mountain land, which at this time of year form a sharp contrast to the severe green of extensive olive orchards. Now and then, bending under its golden burden, appears an orange and lemon grove. Figs are the staple food of the Kabyles. Bad crops mean want, approaching starvation. Olives are trodden out by native women, the oil being mostly used for their own purposes. The people are divided into tribes, each having an industry of its own.

The mountains, so far as the eye can reach, are studded with villages, some of which seem to hang on rocks, like eagles' nests. According to the French guide book, there would be about 100 inhabitants to the square kilometer. One can see, without reading history, what must have been the character of these people. Pushed back by invaders, they sought refuge in natural fortresses, from whence they would fall upon their enemies in the plains. Always warlike, often conquering, oftener still conquered, these people, whose ancestors had been converted to Islam by the swords of Arabs, are now staunch Mohammedans, loving the religion forced upon them, and slow to hear and to follow the call of Christ's love.

A VISIT TO DJEMAA-SAHRIDJ.

The missionaries working among them need unwavering faith and patience. We have just spent ten days with Miss Smith and Miss Cox at Djemaa-Sahridj, where these two ladies have been witnessing for the Gospel for over sixteen years. The natives, distrustful at first at their appearance, have long ceased to attribute false motives to their coming and settling down among them. After watching their lives closely for so many years, they have arrived at the conclusion that it can only be what the ladies say, "love for their souls," that animates all their actions and deeds of kindness.

At the two halls, built close to the mission house, classes are held nearly every day, in which Gospel instruction is given separately to men, women, boys, and girls. The average attendance under this regular teaching is about 200 weekly (classes and prayer-meetings). Twice a week the sick are attended to at the mission. Those unable to come are visited at any time in the villages. The blind also, of whom there are many among the Kabyles, owing to their want of cleanliness, are gathered in, and as many as will come, are taught the Gospel and how to read (by Braille system). The ladies are much cheered in this work.

Since the arrival of M. and Mme. Rolland six years ago, the hands of the "two" have been much strengthened. With the increasing knowledge of Kabyle, Mme. Rolland is proving more efficient each year, taking share in class-work and visiting; while M. Rolland, who is very clever with his hands, and always willing to give his assistance in any emergency, employs most of his time in itinerating work among the French villages, either on foot or bicycle.

A MOHAMMEDAN FEAST.

While at Djemaa, the Mohammedans were observing their chief feast in the year, which they call "the offering up of Ismaël." It lasts several days, and much of the Jewish observance in connection with the Passover is included in their ceremonies, such as the killing of a lamb, and the sprinkling of the blood upon the doorposts, &c. This is a time when the poorest are sure of their food, for the rich are expected to give of their bounty. It is a time when past grievances are forgotten, and past insults forgiven, and when all are supposed to be linked in love and harmony. This sounds so beautiful, and it looks so pretty to see the women dressed up in their gayest and best, with their cheeks painted and their eye-brows blackened, looking so happy and bright while they prepare the couscous, and invite the stranger to come in; but all this happiness is only on the surface—a ritual, a dead letter—for the spirit of Mohammedanism is corrupt, and incapable of such transfiguration.

We were led to a house where the bride had arrived (these feasts are made opportunities for weddings). The first wife met us with a radiant face, her neck covered with native jewels. Before I had time to look about me, she kissed and embraced me; then led me to where the bride sat, with a black veil upon her face. There the young girl was to sit motionless until midnight (it was about five o'clock in the afternoon), when the bridegroom would remove the veil and get the first sight of her. This is, of course, in many cases only a pretence, for there is no purdah among the Kabyles, excepting some Marabout families. Had I not known otherwise, I would have believed the joy of the first wife sincere. But I had heard of her bitter moans and agonies preceding the event. Her husband had said to her: "If you will be kind to the new wife, you may stay; if not, you can go." This was not a mere threat, for the Kabyle who buys his wives has a right to send them off when he chooses. She was expected to look glad, and she looked glad. Was it because her Christian friend who had been dressing her wounds so faithfully, after she had fallen into the fire through epileptic fits, had put a gleam of hope into her soul? Was it because she touched the hem of His garment? When she was crying because of the departing love of her husband, the friend said: "If nobody loves you, Jesus loves you and always will. Believe in Him and He will help you to be kind to the new wife." "O Madame Rolland," she replied, "you have taken a burden from my heart."

WILMA MORGAN.

"Thou art Peter."

BY H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D.

IN St. Peter's, in Rome, the most majestic and colossal cathedral in Christendom, where the Pope sits enthroned in the chair of Peter, and a statue of Jupiter is worshipped as that of Peter, the inscription shines in great mosaic letters, 4ft. 8in. high, round the interior of the dome—Tu . es . Petrus . et . super . hanc . Petram . aedificabo . ecclesiam . meam . et . tibi . dabo . claves . regni . coelorum. ("Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church, and I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven.")

On that sentence is based the whole hierarchical and ecclesiastical system of the Church of Rome. To Peter were given the keys of the kingdom of heaven. The Popes are his successors. Hence the powers entrusted to Peter have descended through the long line of Popes to the present occupant of the Papal chair. It is therefore his to teach and rule in the Christian Church. His word is law. Only he can bind and loose. His sentence is infallible, his definitions and decrees irrevocable.

To prove the validity of the Papal claims is thus the simplest thing in the world. There is no need of cumbrous or circuitous arguments. The sentence "Thou art Peter," is the end of all controversy.

A BASELESS CLAIM.

It is but a few days since I stood beneath the lofty dome of St. Peter's, and read, not for the first time, its famous inscription. I remembered, of course, that there was no proof that St. Peter had lived in Rome, and been for five and twenty years the Bishop of its church. I remembered that Peter was the apostle of "the circumcision," or the Jews, while Paul was the apostle of the Gentiles; and that the only New Testament Epistle addressed to the Romans was that of St. Paul, and that in that Epistle, and in his seven Epistles written from Rome, he never even mentions Peter. It was evident that the link between Peter and the Popes was of the most shadowy and unsubstantial description, and that, therefore, the claim of the Popes to be the sole inheritors of Peter's powers was destitute of proof.

But even supposing the link of Peter with the Popes made good, was the power "to bind and loose," or the power of discipline in the Church, committed solely to Peter? Had not our Lord committed this power to all the apostles? Was it not exercised by Paul? And had not our Lord promised His presence, with all that that involved, to the "two or three gathered together in His name"?

CHRIST'S GREAT PROMISE.

The Popes quote Matt. xvi., "Thou art Peter," &c.; but ignore Matt. xviii.: "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven . . . For where two or three are gathered together in My Name, there am I in the midst of them."

Blessed promise! Not to any proud hierarchy seated in Rome or Constantinople had Christ committed the government of His Church. Not to any "synagogue of Satan," calling itself Christian, had He promised His perpetual presence.

The Church is the congregation of faithful men. "Ubi Spiritus Dei, illic Ecclesia," as Irenæus said. The persecuted saints of the catacombs, the Poor Men of Lyons, the Waldenses hidden in their Alpine fastnesses, the despised Lollards, the downtrodden Hussites and Huguenots, were not outlawed by their Master's promise to Peter, but were, with others of the same spirit, the heirs of that larger promise of His own authoritative and perpetual presence "in the midst" of the "two or three" of His own true disciples "gathered together" in His Name.

Against this Church, this true Church, or congregation of faithful men, wherever assembled, "the gates of Hades" shall never prevail, and the "Rock" on which she is built is not a fallible man, but is Christ Himself; for "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. iii. 11).

On the Tibetan Border.

IN the course of a deeply interesting letter just received from Yatong, Tibet, Miss Annie R. Taylor says:—"The giving away of Gospels in Tibetan and Chinese continues, with the telling of the story of God's love, to those who come to my little sitting-room. The meetings on the Lord's Day are not so well attended as they used to be, the natives in the employ of the Chinese customs not being now allowed to come to my house. But the Lord has blessed the Word to my servant boy, to his little brother who looks after the animals, to my old woman servant, to the letter carrier, as well as an old wood-cutter, who profess to have accepted Jesus as their Saviour.

"There are no children coming to the school now, but I expect some after the Tibetan New Year's Day, which takes place at the end of February. The little shop I find a help in the work, as it brings many people here. There is not much money profit, as the medicine is mostly given, and many come for ointment and to have their wounds or burns dressed, as well as for medicine. I use only my own money for the shop.

"Our troublesome neighbours, the Bhutanese, frequently make incursions into this valley to steal. One night in December a band of twenty, armed, made a raid on a house down the valley, and not only took all they found of value, but the wife and children of the owner, who himself managed to escape. I hear that they are now holding them to ransom. The Bhutanese are also in the habit of stealing children to make slaves of them. They treat their slaves cruelly, and even cut the tendons of their legs if they attempt to escape and are caught. I had one man come to me for medicine who had thus been lamed by them. Pray that the Indian Government may soon let missionaries go into Bhutan to tell the people of Jesus the Light of the world."

Conversion of Ganendra.

By the Author of An Indian Priestess—Chundra Lela.

THE Hindu family is a community in itself. A number of brothers, with wives and children, and forefathers for two or three generations back, live in one large house, constructed with many small rooms and dark passage ways. A courtyard of more or less dimension in the centre is surrounded with verandas. These form the playground of the children. In such a house often from fifty to sixty persons abide.

In a home like this there was once a little girl who, dressed in her bright-coloured sarrie (a long cloth which wraps the body gracefully), went to a mission school daily. Her father and his brothers were bigoted Hindus, as was also her grandfather. They hated the Christian name, and yet nothing was done to prevent the little eager girl from attending school. Soon she learned to read, and committed Scripture verses until many gems from the Bible were fixed in her memory for ever.

In a few years she became too old to go out of the house, and at nine years of age was married. When she left school, she was given as a prize a Bengali Testament. How she cherished this book! The favourite pastime in the home was for her to gather her brothers, sisters, and cousins, and play school. She taught them as she had been taught in the mission school. The little fellows only five or six years old were taught such verses as "God so loved the world—," "Blessed are the pure in heart—," &c. In the little play school were two boys, her own brother, younger than herself, and her cousin. These Scripture verses had a special fascination for them, and their young hearts were filled with them.

A TREASURED BIBLE.

As they grew older they were sent to Hindu schools for boys. The brother in his heart resolved he would devote himself to the study of English, that he might have access to Christian books. And the first book he bought was the Bible. This he kept hid away in the day time, but read it at night while the other members of the family were asleep. One day his father in searching his box found the cherished Bible. He tore the leaves apart and burned them to ashes, and said to his son: "No more college for you, my boy. You shall learn no more English; these Christian books will be your ruin." And from that day he was not permitted to attend school.

His father was wealthy, and kept him supplied with everything needed, and gave him a monthly allowance of pocket money. However, the father knew not how full the young man's heart was of the Word of God. He could destroy the book, but not his son's memory; and when his Bible was gone and he could no longer read its comforting words, the boy would lie at night and repeat those he had memorized. He had never talked with a missionary, had never heard a sermon, but he was convinced that Christ was the true and only Saviour.

In the meanwhile his cousin felt that he too must be a Christian, and asked his father's permission to be baptized. The father and uncle at once banished him to a palace of theirs in Burmah, where he was imprisoned and closely watched; but at the end of six months he died an unknown

MARTYR FOR THE NAME OF CHRIST.

All this the more deeply impressed our friend, and he felt in spite of his father's anger he must know more. He carefully slipped into a crowded square where a Christian minister was preaching Christ, the Sacrifice for sin, and the need of taking up our cross and following Him.

From that moment he felt he must come out from Hinduism and be baptized. He saw Mr. Lee's name and address in the daily papers during the time of the Darjeeling disaster, when our children were taken home; and as we were miles from his father's house and there was no danger of his being seen visiting us, he came, told his story to us, and begged us to baptize him. He came for months regularly for help and teaching, and told us the many things in his way. One was that he loved his mother devotedly, and he was her favourite son. He had told her of his convictions, and she watched him closely, fearing he would desert her and become a Christian, which would break her heart. He also told of his father's anger, and knew he would take his son's life rather than be disgraced by his confessing Christ. He showed us the miniature Testament he carried in his inside pocket so as to read when out of the house. We were convinced of his earnestness, and devised a way of sending him to a distant island, to one of our mission schools, until the anger of the bigoted family subsided.

Never shall we forget the day when he looked on his mother's face for the last time, and left his home with a few articles of clothing previously brought out of his room. Coming to our house, he was baptized in Mr. Lee's study, in the presence of a few of our missionaries; and after commending him to God we disguised him and sent him away by ship. He left a letter for his mother. He was gone a year, during which time his father died; and he returned to work, as he says, among his own people. He has now a Bible-class for Hindu young men in his own house; and being unsupported by missionaries or mission money, they seem to listen to him as they would not to others; and we believe God's Word, which he teaches, and which so wonderfully led him into the light, will be the way-mark to heaven for many another young Hindu. Dr. Baedeker in Russia.

DR. BAEDEKER (now in his eightieth year) is at present in Russia, and writes of happy meetings held at St. Petersburg and Moscow.

His permit to visit the prisons having lately been renewed for two years, he has had the pleasure of visiting the large prisons at Moscow, and distributing 2,000 New Testaments among the prisoners. He has since gone South to visit the Mennonite brethren; after which he purposes (God willing) going to Riga and Reval.

As Dr. Baedeker has said more than once "his fortune is the prayers of God's people," he would much value prayer for the Testaments distributed, for any other prisons he may visit, and for any meetings he may be able to hold during his stay in Russia.

Postal Employees in South America.

INTERESTING work proceeds among the postal employés of Argentina and other parts of South America. In response to frequent appeals for Bibles and Testaments, and for further light and teaching from places where El Correo Evangelico (the Gospel Post) has been sent monthly, a tentative journey has been lately made to some of these centres by a colporteur with Bibles, tracts, and other Gospel literature, and this with encouraging results.

The colporteur writes of attentive listeners to his Gospel message, of the ground in some places being good, but that, alas! workers are needed. With very few exceptions the message has been well received, and the cry is, "Send us more copies of El Correo! Come again and bring us more Bibles and tracts." It is hoped soon to respond to this appeal in the form of a regular supply of 10,000 copies of El Correo monthly; and, God willing, the whole time of such an evangelist or colporteur. In that case, larger means must be forthcoming. The hon. treasurer is Mrs. Smith, 35, Eltham Road, Lee, S.E.

A Disaster in South-West France.—A painful incident is reported from Senegats, par St. Pierre de Trévisy, in the Department of Tarn, France. About two months ago, during a thunderstorm, the Protestant temple and parsonage, built upon the ruins of an old feudal castle, were destroyed by lightning, the pastor and his wife being driven to take refuge in a miserable barn, there being no other available shelter. Without delay efforts are being made to restore the little church, but the people are too poor to hope to achieve the project. Hence an urgent appeal is made to such as are able and willing to help. Though Pastor Froment is not widely known, his wife enjoys the acquaintance of some British Christians through having passed a period of service at Tremel, in connection with the Breton Evangelical Mission.

Mr. Meyer to His Friends.

THE meetings at Breslau were very crowded, interesting, and powerful—all praise to God. Day after day the people filled the Hall so full, passages and all, that I was nervous of there being any alarm, for the passages were blocked.

But here at Frankfort the meetings have had an even added interest, from the fact that advantage was taken of my meetings to hold a conference of the earnest Gemeinschaft people of this entire district. So pastors, evangelists, and people have come in, and we have had a very blessed time. In the mornings they have meetings in the German language, but in the afternoon and evening my addresses have been translated by Professor Bücher, of the Methodist Episcopal College.

I should explain that in every part of Germany the Gemeinschaft movement has its adherents. It may be compared to Methodism before Wesley was driven out of the church. In this land the Pietists remain in formal connection with the Established Church, meeting on Sundays, and other days, at different times from those of the Church services. In many cases, God's children simply meet to read His Word; in others, they maintain evangelists and teachers, who move from one little gathering to the other. In some cases they are allowed to use some part of the church premises, but most frequently they have built or they hire halls for themselves. The increase of these little meetings of devout and consecrated souls is one of the brightest features in the religious outlook of Germany.

My enjoyment of this season has been greatly enhanced by the fact that my beloved friend, Pastor Stockmayer, was here, and a guest with me at the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Bernus. We have had some delightful fellowship, and a very tender and beautiful incident closed the gatherings. I had been speaking of the spiritual unity of the Church—the one body of Christ; and insisting that it subsisted beneath all differences of doctrine, ecclesiastical order, and nationality. I also said, that even differences of national opinion ought not to divide us, instancing the feeling in Germany about the Boer war; and finished by urging that, whatever misunderstanding might arise between Germany and England, they should always stand true in Christian brotherhood with myself and those whom I represented in Great Britain.

At the close, Pastor Stockmayer stepped forward, took my hand, and said to me in English: "I, too, promise in my own name, and in that of my brethren and sisters, that we will be true to our fellow-believers in Great Britain, with a love which will be deeper than national differences." The audience was deeply affected, as his words were repeated in German; and I shall not forget the prayer and the hymn which followed.

It touches me deeply to realize that I can thus do a little, however little, to draw together these two great peoples, to one of which I am united on my mother's and to the other on my father's side.

Now Wiesbaden, Düsseldorf, and Hamburg; then home (in the Lord's good leading) for April 1. Please still pray for me!

Frankfort. F. B. Meyer.

Seamen at Jamaica.—A report just to hand from Jamaica gives particulars of the progress of the useful work carried on at the Kingston Sailors' Rest during recent months. In 1902 nearly 6,000 seamen made use of the Home, while the manager visited some 186 vessels. The reading-room was opened by Mrs. Denniston, and has proved so acceptable that it has now been removed to her private residence in Harbour Street. Here there are combined with the reading room a temperance bar and refreshment room. Sailors in the port are showing their hearty appreciation of the efforts made in their interests by taking full advantage of the opportunities for social intercourse, and thus avoiding the risk of being stranded through falling into evil company. The rent and increased expenses of carrying on the work are more than Mrs. Denniston is able to bear without assistance. Miss Child, Welcome Home for Sailors, Canning Town, E., will be pleased to give information to friends interested in the Jamaica Home.

Christian Literature in India.

RETIREMENT OF DR. MURDOCH.

THE oldest missionary present at the recent Decennial Missionary Conference in India was the venerable Dr. Murdoch, of the Christian Literature Society, who has laboured in Ceylon and India for well on to sixty years. As the "Father of the Conference," Dr. Murdoch was asked to give an address at the first session, immediately after the Bishop of Madras had welcomed the delegates—a duty which he discharged in beautiful and touching words. He was able to look back over more years of continuous missionary service than any of those to whom he spoke, and his survey of more than half a century filled him with thankfulness and confident hope.

Dr. Murdoch's career has been a very remarkable one. He went out to Ceylon in the early forties as a Government schoolmaster, but after a few years, resigned this service and was accepted as a missionary of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland. In that capacity he established the Ceylon Book Society (now the Ceylon Branch of the Christian Literature Society), and then, crossing over to the continent, founded the Madras Christian School-book Society.

In 1858, the Christian Literature Society for India (originally called the Christian Vernacular Education Society) was formed in London, and Dr. Murdoch's services were sought as its first Indian agent. The Missionary Committee of the United Presbyterian Church not only set him free to respond to this call, but generously volunteered an annual grant of half his salary "as a contribution to the new society."

In the forty-five years that have elapsed, immense progress has been made in the provision of Christian books in the principal languages of India. Publishing branches of the Society have been established in Madras, Calcutta, Bombay, Allahabad, Ludhiana, Mysore, and Colombo; and a large number of depôts for the sale of Christian books have been opened throughout India, Burma, and Ceylon. Over 2,000 Christian books of all kinds have been published in eighteen languages, of which more than 30,000,000 copies have been circulated. The Christian Literature Society has thus been to Evangelical societies labouring in the East, making the work accomplished more efficient and fruitful than it could otherwise have been. In a joint note earnestly commending the Society to the generous support of all Christians in this country, the secretaries of fifteen of the larger British missionary societies declared, a few years ago, that it had done for them "a service which they could not have done for themselves."

His work in connection with the Christian Literature Society does not, however, exhaust the record of Dr. Murdoch's activities. In 1867, the Religious Tract Society (London) presented a request that Dr. Murdoch might be permitted to undertake the honorary supervision of the whole of their work in India and Ceylon. The Religious Tract Society has no branches in India properly so-called, but gives assistance to a number of independent tract societies established by missionaries in different parts of India. These societies are supported mainly by local contributions, but they receive from the London Society grants of money, papers, and books. The annual value of such grants is about £2,000 a year, and the Religious Tract Society naturally desired to exercise some supervision over the local agencies. The Christian Literature Society gladly permitted Dr. Murdoch to undertake this duty—a duty which he has discharged with zeal and efficiency for over thirty-five years. During the whole of this long period he has spent much of his time travelling throughout India, caring for all these local societies, guiding and controlling their work, and reporting upon it. Thus for more than a generation, almost all the Christian publishing agencies in India have looked up to him as their head, and have found him a wise counsellor and a never-failing friend.

But Dr. Murdoch has stood too much alone in this great work. His complaint has always been that neither missionary societies nor the majority of missionaries themselves have as yet given the attention that its importance demands to literary mission work. In season and out of season he has urged this duty upon the churches. It is well, therefore, that he has been permitted in his old age to take part in a conference of missionaries in which the importance of literary work has been fully recognised, and which has done its best to roll away the reproach of neglect. A number of literature committees were appointed by the conference (one for each of the chief languages of India), to survey the field, draw up lists of books most urgently needed, and discover and stimulate literary talent in the native churches.

The work of these committees will no doubt be productive of great good, provided the requisite funds are forthcoming to meet the heavy charges for printing and publishing. This, however, is a sine quâ non. Christian literature cannot pay its way in India for many years to come. It does not do so even in Christian England. All books have to be sold in India at much under their cost price. If, therefore, the labours of the literature committees are to be crowned with success, the publishing societies—and particularly the Christian Literature Society, to which these committees mainly look—will need a large increase in their home income.

Shortly after the meeting of the conference, Dr. Murdoch resigned his position as Indian Secretary of the Christian Literature Society. He is succeeded in this office by Rev. Henry Gulliford, a well-known and enthusiastic literary worker, who comes to the service of the Society from the Wesleyan Mission. Dr. Murdoch is, we are glad to state, still full of health and vigour. He will remain in India as a literary agent of the Society he has served so long, and hopes to be permitted to "bring forth fruit in old age."

Tunis.—In a recent North Africa Mission letter, Mr. Arthur V. Liley, Tunis, writes:—"The meritorious (?) fast of Ramadan was succeeded by a four days' feast, during which unbridled revelry and intemperance were indulged in by a large community of the Arabs. It was a shocking and striking proof of the absence of any spiritual life or power in Mohammedanism. We look back with thankfulness on the well-attended and quiet meetings during the month, when many heard the Gospel for the first time. The meetings in the Bible Depôt have also been well attended. At this place questions and discussions are allowed; but often points are raised which seem futile and disappointing. Some seem to come with the determination to ask the most senseless questions, and often make the most astounding statements with not the slightest proofs. Pray that grace and wisdom may be given to us in dealing with them."

The Oracles of God.

DR. PIERSON ON REDEMPTION.

IN continuing his series of lectures at Exeter Hall, Dr. Pierson on Friday evening followed up his two discourses on the fact and philosophy of the Atonement, by dealing with the mystery of the scheme of Redemption, as set forth in Hebrews i. and ii.

In these chapters, seven things are specified to show that Christ was the Son of God, and seven equally strong statements are made concerning Christ's humanity. The Divine aspects of the God Man appear in (1) Christ was the final mouthpiece of God; (2) He is the universal Heir—all God's possessions are His, and we cannot obtain any of these possessions except as we are joint heirs with Him; (3) He was the Creator of the world; the whole temporal order is due to Him; (4) He was the effulgence of the glory of God; (5) the express image of His person; (6) the upholder of all things; (7) He is jointly seated with God Himself on the Throne of the Majesty in the Heavens. The humanity of the God Man is shown in that (1) He came down to man's level—a little lower than the angels; (2) took upon Himself man's nature and became a perfect man; (3) suffered man's temptations that he might become the succourer of tempted souls; (4) tasted death for every man, purging away his sins; (5) made all believing saints to be one mystical body with Himself; (6) destroyed man's mortal enemy, the devil; (7) restores to humanity the sceptre which was lost in the fall of Adam. Thus, in this combination of Divinity and perfect humanity, we have set before us a unique Being, very God and very Man.

A PROBLEM AND ITS SOLUTION.

What was the problem of man's fall? The devil had occupied the position of an angel. Falling from this great position he descended to the lowest depths, which we call the infernal. When man was created, the devil came up from the infernal regions, presented temptation to man, and accomplished his fall. How could God answer the problem of man's redemption? It was necessary that there should be a second representative of the race. The first had fallen, and in him the race had sunk hopelessly, and the only way to redeem the race was to give it a new probation. The second Adam must be able to stand, and able to overcome where the first had been overcome. God might have permitted a second man to take the place of Adam, but the race could not have been lifted above the level of humanity; and as the first man had fallen, so might the second. He might have permitted an angel to identify himself with the human race, but this would have involved a struggle between an unfallen and a fallen angel, and the unfallen might have succumbed to the power of the fallen one. One Being alone could stand, and was able to cope with the wiles of the devil, and that was the Son of God.

Passing to the consideration of what he termed a deeper mystery still, Dr. Pierson reiterated the truth that if Christ was identified with man, man must be identified with Christ. This is the greatest conception that the whole scheme of redemption puts before us. If a man could have stood for the human race and conquered where Adam fell, he could not have done more than put man back in the position from which he fell. If an angel could have become the second representative and overcome Satan, it would only have been to lift man to angelic level. But when the Son of God became man, identified Himself with the race, and overcame the devil, it was for Him to uplift man past the Angelic to the Divine level.

We are told that angels are ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation. Looking into the unfolding of the Apocalypse we find that the saints are next the Throne, and the angels round about the saints. In further illustration of the felicity and privilege of saints, the speaker affirmed that no angel could say, "I belong to Him; I am a son of God and joint-heir with Christ." The conception of a destiny so grand is almost too much for human minds. Every soul must choose as its representative either the first or the second Adam.

THE LATE

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P.

BY the death of Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., a Christian statesman who enjoyed the esteem of all parties in the Legislature has passed to his rest. Since returning from South America, in February, he contracted a cold, which developed rheumatism. He died suddenly last week from heart-failure, at his residence in Westminster.

WILLIAM SPROSTON CAINE, the late member for the North-West or Camborne division of Cornwall, was born at Seacombe, in Cheshire, in 1842. He was the eldest son of Mr. Nathaniel Caine, of Broughton-in-Furness, and married in 1868 the daughter of Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown, the famous Baptist minister at Liverpool. When quite young he took his stand as a disciple of Christ, and started a Gospel mission at Egremont. During years of residence in Liverpool, Mr. and Mrs. Caine engaged in Christian service of various kinds in connection with several halls associated with the Myrtle Street Church. At length, when Mr. Stowell Brown finished his course, a sympathetic biography of him was prepared by his devoted son-in-law.

As a politician, Mr. Caine did excellent work in many directions; but we would first refer to his more definite services in the cause of Christ. While engaged in business in Liverpool, he became a total abstainer, through reading Mrs. Wightman's well-known book, "Haste to the Rescue!" and in all his public life the Temperance cause was very dear to his heart. On entering Parliament, and making his home in London, he devoted himself to aggressive Gospel work in South Lambeth. Wheatsheaf Hall, a large building, with a church membership of some 300, costing about £5,000, was raised through his energy. It succeeded an effort which began in 1884, when Mr. Caine converted an old villa into a centre of Christian work. He served the church as lay pastor, and his varied labours on behalf of the poor and needy, the tempted and tried, were unremitting and singularly large-hearted. It is gratifying to know that they were highly appreciated by the people living in the neighbourhood.

Realizing that the Church of Christ is greater than organizations, Mr. Caine's work was conducted on broad Evangelical lines. He said: "All are welcome to join who avow their belief in God as their Father, in Jesus Christ as their Saviour, in the Holy Spirit as their Comforter and Guide, and in the Bible as the one authority as to religious faith. All must promise to work in brotherly love for the spread of Christ's Kingdom." Practical man that he was, Mr. Caine ever insisted that, having experienced a change of life themselves, the members of Wheatsheaf Hall must pray and work for others, and not remain babes in the faith requiring continual nursing. They were taught to pray and speak in private and public, to live for Christ, and to support their work by such contributions as their means allowed.

In the world of Temperance effort, Mr. Caine did yeoman service. In the councils of influential societies, and on platforms throughout the country, he was ever ready to advance this great reform; and here, as in other work, his devoted wife was ever his able helper. He was the founder of the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association, in connection with which he visited our great Eastern Dependency, and formed branches of the organization. He early realized the importance of legislation in the interests of Temperance, and was first secretary and afterwards president of the Liverpool Auxiliary of the United Kingdom Alliance. He was also president of the National Temperance Federation and the British Temperance League; being associated also with other bodies having a like object and design.

Since his first return to Parliament, in 1880, for Scarborough, Mr. Caine represented first Barrow-in-Furness, then East Bradford, taking his seat for Camborne in 1900. He was distinctly popular among his fellow Members. In the language of The Times: "Abrupt in manner, downright in speech, and burly in form, he exhibited a combination of good-humour and underlying gentleness of disposition with robust sincerity, which won him the title of 'the genial ruffian!'" A prominent spokesman in the cause of Temperance, he was placed on a Royal Commission on the subject of the Licensing Laws. Having studied Indian problems on the spot, he criticised the British methods of governing that dependency, and was a strong opponent of the opium trade. Such was his interest in these affairs, that he was recognised as "the member for India."

The funeral took place on Thursday last at Brookwood Cemetery. The first part of the service was held at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, and was conducted by Dr. Clifford, Rev. J. Williamson (Cardiff), Rev. Arthur Mursell, and Rev. David Taylor (Belfast). Canon Fleming also took part in the service. There was a large attendance of Members of Parliament and representatives of religious, Temperance, and other philanthropic organizations. Only the relatives and intimate friends of the lamented statesman proceeded to the cemetery, whither the body was borne by special train. Dr. Clifford and Rev. J. Williamson again officiated. Among the many wreaths covering the coffin was one by the British Committee of the Indian National Congress, "With deepest sympathy and heartfelt regrets for the loss of India's friend."

Not on the ground of any adventitious reputation was Mr. Caine held in esteem throughout the Christian Church. He was a good man and an earnest worker for Christ; and his noble character and transparent sincerity ensured for him that recognition and applause which were his due. "He rests from his labours, and his works do follow him." He sweetened many bitter lives, and sanctified Christ as Lord in his heart. Our nation and Parliament, the Church and Society, need more of such men. May God raise them up, and thus may His name be glorified!

Harley College, Bow, London, E.—Dr. Guinness and I will be glad to hear from such as will assist us in opening up places, in the city or in country districts, where the students would be able to do evangelistic work, especially on the Sabbath days. A number of new men have recently entered college, and we are anxious to provide Sunday work for them.—FORBES JACKSON (Principal).

The Industrial Mission Ideal.

ON Wednesday of last week, a meeting was held at the Police Institute, Adam Street, W.C., to say farewell to five members of the Zambesi Industrial Mission, who were on the eve of departure for their field of labour, Sir Brampton Gurdon in the chair. In introducing the missionaries, Mr. ROBERT CALDWELL explained that Mr. Joseph Dickman and Mr. F. W. Dean were each going forth for the second term of service, and had proved themselves good all-round workers in both industrial and spiritual branches. Mrs. Dickman was the senior missionary on the staff, now going forth for the third time; and was the first European lady to enter Angoniland, where she went alone. Mrs. Dean and Nurse Lizzie Walker were new recruits, the latter going to take the place of Miss Carine Fyshe, the story of whose life and death in the service of the Lord Jesus was told in our columns a few weeks ago. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, who accompanied these friends, are about to proceed to Freretown, under an arrangement with the Bishop of Mombasa and the Industrial Missions Aid Society. The missionaries availed themselves of the opportunity to express briefly the joy with which they went forth under the leading of God, and their hope that they would be remembered in prayer by friends at home.

The leave-taking charge was in the form of a letter from Mr. ROBERT SCOTT, who was prevented by indisposition from being present. The missionaries were affectionately counselled to give special attention to the committing to memory of Scripture, which, if once securely hid in their minds, the Spirit of all grace would bring to their remembrance in due season. This was illustrated from his own experience as a Sabbath-school teacher. They were pictured as going forth in the spirit of their Lord and Saviour to lay themselves alongside the desolate lives of the heathen, as exemplfying before them that spirit in the industrial labour of the six days, and leading them up to the Sabbath, the Lord's Day, with its most welcome rest in God and fellowship with Him by His Word and Spirit. In view of the difficulty of obtaining from the Church at home funds for the maintenance of the missionaries required among the heathen, the hope for expansion in the future was found in such missions.

Upon these outgoing missionaries, said Mr. Scott, there rests the responsibility of proving through the successful growing of cotton, coffee, and other products that God can, and will, supply funds, independently of congregations of professing Christians at home, to His own glory and their unspeakable loss. The careful and skilful growing of cotton is a work for God. To the true believer there is no work that can be termed "secular," versus sacred or spiritual. As "the ploughing (or ordinary occupation) of the wicked is sin," so by the grace of God the ordinary work-a-day duties of His children are not only right, but God-glorifying.

Lay Preaching.—The Evangelical Lay Preachers' Association (Islington District) has entered upon its seventh year, under promising circumstances. Last year's record shows that 380 addresses were given in numerous centres. The continued expansion of the work has made it necessary to acquire a hall as headquarters, an advancement that involves additional outlay of some £40 per annum. The members are able to raise about £20, and the committee are hopeful that the useful work which the association is maintaining will so commend itself to the sympathy of friends that its operations may not be limited through lack of support. The hon. secretary, Mr. George A. Angus, 99, Balfour Road, Highbury, N., will give particulars of the objects and work of this useful association.

Rome and Mariolatry.

By Dr. ALEX. ROBERTSON.*

THE cult of Mary in the Roman Catholic Church has not only come into rivalry with the worship of God and Christ, but it has to a large extent supplanted it. Every church has its Lady Chapel, and one can easily tell which it is, for, if service is going on in the church at all, it is going on there; and if not, it is the chapel that is enriched the most with votive offerings—silver hearts, crosses, rosaries, scapularies, splints and crutches, and other mementoes of her supposed cures and healings. Very often, too, her statue is set on the high altar, if the church is dedicated to her; and sometimes a life-size image of her, dressed in old, faded, cast-off finery, with an abundance of glittering tinsel ornaments, and tin crown and sceptre—an altogether hideous and disgusting figure—is set in a chair on a raised dais to be adored. And, as is well known, the very Lord's Prayer has been changed to "Our Mary, who art in Heaven, hallowed be thy name," &c.; the Te Deum has been altered thus—

"We praise thee, Maker of God:
We acknowledge thee, Mary the Virgin.
All the earth doth worship thee,
Spouse of the Eternal Father.
To thee all angels and archangels,
Thrones and principalities, faithfully do service.
To thee the whole angelic creation
With incessant voice proclaim, Holy, holy, holy Mary!"

I have got before me at this moment the Psalterium Marianum—the Psalter of Mary—by St. Bonaventura, the General of the Franciscans. St. Bonaventura lived in the thirteenth century, and I suppose the book was compiled then; but the copy I have bears the date 1873, and was published by the S. C. de Propaganda Fide. The book is therefore in use now. It consists of a version of the Psalms, arranged, with prayers and hymns, for different times and days. As the title of the book shows, the whole compilation is addressed to Mary; but the one fact I emphasize here, as showing to what audacious and blasphemous lengths the Papal Church goes in its worship of Mary, is that, in the first verse of every psalm when the word Lord occurs, it is changed to Lady (Dominus is made Domina), so that all the prayers and ascriptions of praise in the Psalms are addressed not to the Lord, but to Mary. When the word Lord does not occur, then the word Mary is introduced. Let me give a few illustrations.

Blessed is the man who loves thy name, O Virgin Mary, thy grace shall comfort his soul (Ps. i. 1).

O Lady, how are they increased that trouble me (Ps. iii. 1).

Give ear to my words, O Lady! and turn not away from me the beauty of thy countenance (Ps. v. 1).

O my Lady, in thee have I hoped, free me from mine enemies (Ps. vii. 1).

I will praise thee, O Lady, with my whole heart, I will tell forth to the people thy praise and thy glory (Ps. ix. 1).

. . . . . .

O Lady, I have cried to thee, hear me (Ps. cxli. 1)
I will extol thee, O Mother of the Son of God, and I will sing thy praises from day to day (Ps. cxlv. 1).

One can hardly imagine a worse perversion of Holy Scripture. If there is one book of the Bible dear to Christians the world over, if there is one book more than another which they read daily, drawing out of its marvellous treasure-house "things new and old" for their comfort and guidance and strengthening in all possible circumstances, it is the Book of Psalms; "for," to use the words of the late Bishop of Durham, "it contains the words of many men, in many ages, who realized each for himself, under most different conditions, the master-truths of the glory, the faithfulness, the mercy, the love, the righteousness, the sovereignty of God, the Lord of Israel and the King of the whole earth." And it is precisely this book, the heritage of the individual Christian and of the Church, which the Papal Church has degraded and destroyed. . . .

If one Madonna brought an advantage, to be doubled by having two, and quadrupled by having four, and increased twenty times by having a score, or twelve dozen times by having a gross, why not have them? There is no reason against it. This is apparently what the Church itself felt, and so having created one divine Madonna, it has gone on creating them, and it goes on still. The manufacture of Madonnas is now part of the recognised policy, of the recognised industry, of the Papal Church. There are now as many Madonnas as there are days in the year, or rather, as there are human needs and human desires, and human jealousies and passions. Thus, if one wants to win at the lottery, he prays to one Madonna; if to get rid of a cough, to another; if to make money, to a third; if to have good health, to a fourth; if to be avenged on an enemy, to a fifth; if to get rid of a pain, to a sixth; if to have good wine, to a seventh; if to destroy Freemasons, whom Pope Leo XIII. calls il vero esercito del demonio (the true army of the devil), to an eighth; if to be saved from pestilence, to a ninth; if to destroy heretics, to a tenth; if for success to the Jesuits in their nefarious intrigues, to an eleventh; if for souls in purgatory, to a twelfth; and if to be saved from fire, water, accident, lightning, and all "the ills that flesh is heir to," to as many others.

The Bible League.

CONFERENCE AT BOURNEMOUTH.

AN important conference in connection with the Bible League was held at the Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth, on the 11th and 12th, and was attended with much encouragement and blessing. Many ministers and other Christian workers in the neighbourhood were present. The main principle of the Bible League is a belief in the full inspiration and infallibility of the Old and New Testament, and its object is to promote a reverential study of the Holy Scriptures, and to resist the varied attacks made upon their authenticity.

Rev. C. H. Waller, D.D., gave a powerful address the first day on "The testimony of our Saviour to the written Word," dwelling chiefly on the Person of the witness, and the nature of the testimony. A noteworthy utterance was that of Rev. Chancellor J. J. Lias, who spoke on "The authority of the Old Testament." Many weak points in the methods and arguments of the critics were exposed, as well as the discourtesy and cowardice which have marked much of their treatment of Christian apology. The speaker had no doubt that the indifference of the people to the House and Word of God is largely due to scepticism on the part of some who are appointed to preach the Gospel.

Pastor Fuller Gooch followed with an impressive discourse on "The Old Paths—Shall we leave them?" He maintained that we have reached an unparalleled position in the history of the Word of God. In time past the Word suffered from the world, and the Church successfully repelled the attacks. But the severest and most serious attacks to-day are from within the pale of the Christian Church. Those who believe in the inspiration of the Word should be as one man for its defence. The paths of faith were old and safe and sure, and they would not abandon the paths which for nineteen centuries had given life and joy and hope to the Church, for others untried and unsettled.

In the evening Rev. G. D. Hooper presided, and gave a valuable address, emphasizing the need for the Bible League, pointing out its attitude. It was open to all inquiry, faced all facts, and was unmoved by mere guesses, hypotheses, and suppositions. Rev. Fuller Gooch spoke on "Inspiration and Revelation—the Two Pillars in the Temple of Truth." He likened the Bible to Solomon's Temple. Both were Divinely planned, possessed, and used. As there were in Solomon's Temple the two pillars, Jachin and Boaz, significant and prominent, and standing for beauty and strength, so in the Temple of God's truth there were the two pillars of Inspiration and Revelation.

Rev. George Ensor said the Bible, rightly obeyed, is our first and greatest line of national defence. Regarding the recently-discovered Babylonian tablets, he pointed out that while none of them disprove any Bible statements, many of them confirm the Scriptures.

On Thursday morning Rev. Alexander Corbet, speaking from the chair, reiterated the truth that the Bible being a revelation of God to the heart and conscience, can only be interpreted by spiritually-minded men. Sir Robert Anderson followed with a searching criticism of the pronounced absurdities of the assailants of the Word of God, and censured Christians who exposed themselves to such infectious teaching. He had respect for a sceptic, but none for the man who said he was a Christian, and then cast a doubt upon the Deity of Christ and the Inspiration of the Scriptures, regarding Jesus as having emptied Himself to such an extent that He became an ignorant man, who quoted the Word of God without knowing whether it was inspired truth or legend. The logical sequence of their arguments would show that Jesus could not be trusted when He spoke of eternal life and heaven. Rev. George Ensor next gave an important contribution to the Conference. All true Christians should safeguard the youths who were going to the colleges of the land, there to encounter doubters and critics of the Word of God.

A clear and logical statement regarding the "Unity of the Book of Isaiah" was made by Rev. James Douglas; and a particularly helpful address was given by the Mayor of Bournemouth. Among other subjects considered was the inspiration, authenticity, and historicity of the Book of Genesis, which was dealt with by Dr. Waller, and a lucid and strong vindication of the Book of Daniel was made by Sir Robert Anderson. The Conference terminated with an enthusiastic meeting in West Cliff Lecture Hall, at which Rev. G. D. Hooper (pastor) presided. It was felt that the gatherings throughout had been productive of much permanent good in enunciating the position of the Bible League and the principles for which it stands.

Room in Western Canada.

DEAR SIR,—In March last, together with my wife and six children, I left England and came through to Grenfell, 280 miles west of Winnipeg. My special reason for leaving the old country was the extreme difficulty of finding employment for my boys, and I longed to find a place where there was plenty of room, and where one could get a living without taking the loaf that was badly needed by somebody else.

We, though strangers, received a very hearty welcome from people speaking our own tongue, and who seemed anxious to help us in any way they could. Having been now a year in this country, we are able to speak from experience of its advantages and drawbacks. One thing in particular has impressed itself upon me. I have not seen one beggar here; in fact it is almost impossible to be in need in this land of plenty.

No one need be out of work; there is abundance for all. Thousands of men, and tens of thousands of girls and women could get remunerative and healthy employment as soon as they could arrive. Parents having a large family are the most welcome, and are the people who get on the best.

The Canadian Government gives 160 acres of splendid land to the head of a family, or to any male 18 years old or upwards. I shall be pleased to answer any questions your readers might wish to ask. Yours sincerely,

European School Girls in India.—An effort is being made to place the affairs of the Girls' High School, Panchgani, on a more satisfactory footing. It is confidently hoped that the school will be in time self-supporting; but the competition of the Romanist institutions, with a large and rich community behind them, is so keen, that, in order to ensure continuance and freedom from burdensome responsibility, the help of other friends is required. If £100 a year could be contributed from this country, the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission would adopt the school as one of its agencies. The superintendent is Miss Kimmins, The Knowle, Panchgani, Bombay.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

THIRD WEEK OF MEETINGS IN GLASGOW.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.)

THE battle is being carried to the gates of unbelief, and every citadel and rampart is being assailed. No parley with sin in any shape or form is permitted, and the sin of drunkenness could not be more vigorously censured by any ardent teetotal lecturer than it is by Dr. Torrey. The programme of work as outlined for the third week revealed the fact that the evangelists believe in being diligent in the business of saving souls. Twenty meetings in six days make indolence utterly impossible, and this is the number that lay before them as they stepped into harness on the third week of the mission. They are being wonderfully upheld, and, save for a little huskiness that shows itself in the preacher's voice now and again, they both wear well, despite the strain that is put upon them. Habits long yielded to are being abandoned, and questionable customs long dominant in individual lives are, through the ministry of His servants, being departed from.

Proofs are springing up in different quarters that the grace of God is flowing. On Sabbath evening, the 15th, at St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Mr. Findlay asked that all those who had decided for Christ within the past two weeks, it didn't matter where they had decided, would come forward and shake hands with him. Nearly twenty did so, quite a number of them confessing that they had been converted at Dr. Torrey's meetings.

The great meetings on the Sabbath, of which an account was given in our last issue, and the results arising therefrom, are throwing their influence for good across the meetings that follow. The many homes blessed by that day's tide of salvation have helped to augment the attendances, as well as to kindle a healthy excitement among others who were listless or lukewarm. "As iron sharpeneth iron, so doth the face of a man his friend."

MANY PRAYERS ANSWERED.

Some of the fruits of the day may be noted. At the afternoon meeting, a woman who was widowed five months ago, and who has often been spoken to, was brought out clearly for Christ. Her husband, a man personally known to us, was for twenty or more years, in a provincial town, an outstanding witness for Christ. Yet through all that time, and in spite of her husband's Christian life, she lived in unbelief. At the close of the meeting, a lady worker who knew her well, and all the circumstances of her life, had the joy of leading her to the Saviour. It was a real triumph of grace, as her indifference had been very pronounced.

On the same night in the men's meeting a man was present who had been attending a number of the previous services. Several workers were interested in him, and on different nights they had gone part of the way home with him, endeavouring to lead him into the light. They had failed, however, to render him the help he needed; but on his way home from the mass meeting that night the light dawned suddenly upon him on the street, and his soul entered into the rest that awaits those who believe in Christ. Such cases reveal the movings of the Spirit, and aid largely in quickening the attention and thought of careless ones who have known them, and with whom in domestic or business duties they come into contact. Several young fellows, "west-enders," were among the number saved that night, and great has been the joy that their conversion has caused.

AUDIENCES DOUBLING.

Monday night's meeting was something like 3,000 strong, which meant, from the numerical standpoint, that the Monday night audience had exactly doubled itself in two weeks' time. Rev. William Muir (Blairgowrie) led in prayer, thanking God "for the spirit of expectancy" that existed, and for "the warrant for it in the Word and by the Spirit of God." The address by Dr. Torrey was based on John v. 40: "Ye will not come unto Me that ye might have life." The hindrances were dealt with, and an urgent, fervent appeal for immediate decision made. Fifty-five inquirers were afterwards spoken to.

Sitting back in the hall during the after-meeting was a young woman to whom a gentleman spoke, asking her as to her spiritual state. She said that at the women's meeting the day before she had trusted the Saviour, but that she was not happy. On inquiring if she knew of anything that accounted for her unhappiness, she said she was working in a cigarette factory, and she had the feeling that it was not the right place for her. The worker referred her to a lady sitting near, and this lady at once apprised her husband, who was in the meeting, as to the girl's case. He solved her difficulty at once by engaging her for his warehouse, thus removing the cloud from the heart of the young convert.

The area over which the blessing is spreading, and from which results are drawn, is worthy of note. The home addresses of the converts make it evident that the interest is touching homes and hearts in every different point of the city and suburbs. This does not mean that all the city is moved, as there are doubtless scores of thousands who know nothing at all of the existence of the Torrey-Alexander mission; but it means that grace is being planted in homes all over the city, one or two in this street, and one or two in that, and these homes in turn will become standing centres of testimony where they are situated.

INQUIRERS FROM A DISTANCE.

Not only in town, but from out of it as well, precious souls are coming to the meetings, and finding Christ. From Ayrshire and from Lanarkshire some have come and left their names as having received Jesus as their Saviour; and among the names are those of a person from the east of Fife, and another from Ullapool.

Tuesday, which had been announced as a day for humiliation and prayer, was one of the great days of the week. When the morning came, rain was falling in torrents. Yet at 10.30, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, several hundreds gathered for prayer. That meeting was for some, however, not the first for the day, for at nine o'clock there had been meetings for prayer in different places of worship, indicating the existence of a true revival spirit. At the business men's meeting Dr. Torrey re-delivered by special request his address on "God." The gathering was the largest of its kind that had been held, and the address was appreciatively followed. Expressions of thankfulness could afterwards be heard on every hand; and in summing up, strong appeal was made to the audience to be ready to meet God, pointing out in clear Scriptural form the only way by which a sinner can be saved. There was a solemn feeling in the meeting, and if time had permitted the net to be drawn, cheering results might have shown themselves.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE SINGING.

The weather conditions having improved, at three o'clock there was a large muster in St. Andrew's Hall, and when the evening Gospel service was held the large hall had an audience within its walls numbering about 3,500. Clearly the movement was gaining in momentum, judged by the increasing audiences. Mr. Alexander carried through his part in excellent form, and led the large congregation on from stage to stage with such hymns as: "There's not a Friend like the lowly Jesus; no, not one"; each verse seeming to be better sung than that which went before it. "That's good, people. Did you ever hear the like of that?" he would say, and the people, pleased with his commendation, laid themselves out to do still better than they had done before. Dr. Torrey's address from start to finish was an animated, sustained, fervid, impassioned deliverance. Sins were rebuked, worldliness condemned, treason to Christ reprobated, and the fatal consequences of rejecting Christ dwelt upon.

The text was Pilate's question: "What, then, shall I do with Jesus, which is called the Christ?" Occasionally we have heard Dr. Torrey say that he is not an evangelist, but the addresses delivered, full as they are of Scripture statement and vehement appeal, disclose undoubtedly that whatever his ecclesiastical status may be, he has the gift, and is doing the work, of an evangelist. His Tuesday's address was a tremendously earnest word. Some men have great objections to their religion being served up hot. They like hot dinners and hot suppers, but they prefer a religion of Laodicean temperature. If such were present that night, they must have been greatly perturbed.

When the address was finished, decisions were called for and a number stood up, two young men of the better class (socially viewed), rising together side by side as if concerted action had been planned beforehand. About forty in all either came out voluntarily or were persuaded by personal entreaty publicly to avouch their determination to settle the great matter at once.

QUESTION DAY.

Renfield Street Church was better filled at 1.5 on Wednesday than on any previous day. A number were there whose presence surprised others, and the meeting was all agog with expectation, Dr. Torrey having announced for some days before that Wednesday would be a question-answering day. Such a form of procedure appeals to some more than to others, and a number of the questions were probably sent by men who do not expect to be convinced. Several of the ever-recurring questions were to the front, such as "Was the world made in six days of twenty-four hours?" "What about the 'Kenosis' theory?" "Do you believe in verbal inspiration?" "Is there any Scripture to show that the Sabbath is changed from the seventh day of the week to the first?" One was, "If ministers believe the Bible to be the Word of God, why do they not preach about the Second Coming of Christ?" Dr. Torrey, on having read this question, created some laughter by saying: "I give that up."

St. Andrew's Hall not being obtainable for the day, the afternoon meeting was held in Kelvinside U. F. Church, which was crowded in all parts. Then at night the City Hall was packed from floor to ceiling. The audience was necessarily less than on the preceding night, owing to the want of space, but about 3,000 people were within the precincts of the building. The rich and poor were there, the well-dressed and the shabbily-dressed, the old and the young, all ages and conditions of Glasgow's throbbing life; and all had come to hear about the great redemption, God's remedy for sin. Under the leadership of Mr. Alexander the faces of the people were made like "lighted clocks." The address delivered by Dr. Torrey was on "The hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies." He went through the false refuges of men with the searching light of God's Word, and, assuming that the ears of all were open to hear the Word spoken, many a conscience must have been made uneasy. As the nights go on, the addresses seem to be fuller, and still fuller of earnest clamant appeal. Men and women are exhorted, entreated, and warningly urged to turn from sin and be reconciled to God.

THOSE FROM THE HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES.

The presence of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander in the inquiry meeting that followed, in which fruit was gathered, was of short duration, as they had still another meeting, the fourth for the day, to attend. This one was held in the Tent Hall, near the Salt-Market, about 400 yards distant from the City Hall. When they stepped in at 9.30, a cordial welcome awaited them, and they found a congregation of over 2,000 waiting to hear them, probably more than half the number being the habitual slaves of drink.

The aim had been to get as many "drunks" as possible to the service; and, through the generosity of a Christian lady, tickets of admission and a free tea were used as a bait to draw them together. The tickets had been widely distributed among the denizens of the fourpenny "models"; and so large was the response that the workers found no occasion to say, "Yet there is room," for from slums, back-court dwellings, and lodging-houses about 1,800 of the sunken and degraded streamed in.

MISERY AND DRINK.

On the Saturday night previous, running into the small hours of the Sabbath morning, the Housing Commission had been at work investigating the conditions of slum districts in different parts of the city. Their purpose of investigation had been kept secret, even from the Press, up till the hour of setting out, so that none of the slum dwellers had been forewarned. The newspapers of Monday, in giving an account of the deplorable state of things seen, stated that 90 per cent. of the misery was directly traceable to the drink. It seemed very fitting, then, that a meeting for men and women enslaved by its power should be put on the programme of the special mission.

What a sad picture some of the poor creatures presented! They bore the marks of being unfriendly to themselves, and to brighten their hearts Mr. Alexander sang: "The best Friend to have is Jesus." Dr. Torrey's short address on the power of Christ to save was a word well suited for his audience. When we left the building, at 10.30, over thirty men were being personally conversed with by as many workers, some of whom were once the slaves of drink themselves. A number of women were also being pointed to Him who died, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God.

CONVERTS WHO DO NOT COME FORWARD.

Throughout the Thursday and Friday meetings the current of interest flowed right on, and results were gathered that demonstrated anew the Spirit's quickening and transforming power. Workers with long experience behind them, who have been busy in the after-meetings, are convinced that the numbers who go forward and make public confession in the meetings of receiving Jesus as their Lord and Master do not by any means represent all who are passing through the gate of God's salvation and entering into life. Justification for their conviction is being evidenced in individuals met with who had positively refused, even when anxious, every invitation given them to go to the front, but who in a less public manner had crossed the line, as was afterwards discovered by the testimony they bore.

In the business men's meetings, the two closing days of the week were devoted to the consideration of "Infidelity: Its Causes, Consequences, and Cure." The subject evidently attracted attention, as on Friday the church was fuller than on any preceding day, only a few corner seats lacking their full complement. The subject was bravely and fearlessly handled, and some strong blows were given in the course of the lectures. The union of infidelity with immorality was illustrated by instances given of those known to the lecturer who had gone down into sin and suicide. At different points he was applauded, his premises and conclusions obviously meeting with the approbation of the large crowd of men. Theoretical atheism in Glasgow, however, is a small pool as compared with the great sea of practical infidelity and religious indifference that exists.

A TELLING SOLO.

The afternoon meeting of Thursday was held, as on the day before, in Kelvinside U.F. Church. The building was crowded, and many stood throughout. Mr. Alexander's solo, sung at the commencement of the service, "Saved by Grace," was beautifully rendered, and touched many hearts, not a few among his fashionable audience being observed fumbling for their handkerchiefs to brush away the falling tears. If an inquiry-meeting could have been held just then, however unusual such a form of procedure would have been, there would surely have been some visible fruit. The moment seemed ripe for such a strategic move. Dr. Torrey's address was based on John viii. 36; "If the Son, therefore, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." Freedom from the power of sin, and from the fear of death, &c., were set forth as spiritual blessings that the Son was waiting to bestow.

The meeting at night in St. Andrew's Hall was a great gathering, though scarcely up to the high water mark of the Tuesday previous. At the close over fifty persons took the name of Jesus with them, declaring that henceforth they would serve and follow Him.

FRUIT FROM AMONG THE CHILDREN.

A notable meeting was held on Friday afternoon in St. Andrew's Hall at five, when about 3,000 children, notwithstanding a great downpour of rain, came together to hear the evangelists speak and sing. Six or eight hundred friends and workers were also in attendance to render help in controlling the young people; but the little folks were easily managed, their best behaviour being distinctly in evidence. Mr. Alexander, as a generalissimo among the children in the realm of sacred song, did splendidly: and at one point he created not a little interest by taking up beside him a boy with a good voice, whom he had singled out, to sing a verse of a hymn by himself.

Dr. Torrey read in Isaiah liii., and got the children to repeat together: "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with His stripes we are healed"—changing the "our" into "my," and the "we are" into "I am." After a short address all the children who desired to trust the Saviour were asked to cross the street to Kent Road U.F. Church, and hundreds did so. These were dealt with in companies by competent workers. Over 200 cards containing the names of young people were handed in the same night to the officials who are charged with that duty, and more were expected.

In the large meeting which gathered in St. Andrew's Hall shortly after the children had left the building, results were again harvested. Rev. Henry Montgomery, who had come across from Belfast to see what God was doing in Glasgow, told by request some of the good things he had seen in his field of service.

The fourth week of the mission opened with a great muster of Christian workers drawn from all parts of the city, to hear Dr. Torrey's address on "How to Study the Bible."

The meeting in the afternoon was for women only, and was a grand sight. The huge hall was crowded from end to end, and from the floor to the highest point of the gallery, with thousands of wives, mothers, and maidens; and at the close of the address, when all who wished to decide for Christ, or who, having decided, had not yet confessed Him, were asked to go into a side hall, the numbers who flocked along the passages revealed a measure of manifested anxiety that had been witnessed in no previous meeting of the mission. The names and addresses of over 160 were taken. On the part of some it was a time of tears and smiles following each other in close succession; while with others the tears and smiles intermingled, as the great crisis was reached, and the gift of God trembling yet trustfully received.

An interesting item in the early part of the meeting was the reading of a letter from Miss Taylor, of Beyrout, by Mrs. Oatts, of the decision made by a number of Moslem girls to confess Christ, on hearing notes read from The Christian concerning the Torrey-Alexander mission in Edinburgh.

At 4.30, an awkward hour, but the only one at which the hall was available, there was a meeting of men, numbering about 3,000, and a number confessed Christ, but no space is left to tell the tale.

Results in Edinburgh.

A TALK WITH DR. JOHN SMITH.

"THERE is not the slightest doubt that the religious life of Edinburgh has been deeply stirred by the visit of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Chas. Alexander," said Dr. John Smith in the course of a conversation which a representative of The Christian had with him last week. "It would, of course, not be fair to compare the effect of the mission with that wrought by the first visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, because the circumstances attending each occasion were so entirely different; but we were more than ripe for a revival of religious zeal.

"One of the happiest characteristics of the mission has been the friendly unity of different denominations in promoting its success, for all felt if there was to be real progress there must be a union of forces. In prayer men forget the differences which separate them; barriers are broken down and unity is promoted.

"To me one of its happiest effects has been the new desire shown by the young people of our churches to take a step forward in Christian life. Hitherto we ministers have had to make the advance towards obtaining the sympathy and interest of our young men and women, and many methods have been tried, some with considerable success. After the Mission had concluded in Edinburgh, I made an announcement in my church that I desired to help particularly all the young men and women who had been benefited by the visit of the evangelists. My session was in entire sympathy with the announcement, and I saw on many a face of fathers and mothers in the congregation the pleasure which they felt, mingled with an anxiety as to whether their sons and daughters would avail themselves of this opportunity.

"At our first meeting last week seventy young men and women came. At our second meeting last night 100 came, and in the next week, when I hope to have the pleasure of speaking fully to them of what it means to be a Christian, I anticipate the attendance will grow steadily. That is what is happening in other churches than mine, and if it were only for this, we ministers in Edinburgh should feel thankful to God for the mission.

"Now let me say a word upon the remarkable influence wielded upon men of middle age to whom Dr. Torrey's virile style and forcible command of argument appeal with extraordinary power. At the meeting for business men at first I was a little disappointed at the absence of men of the professional class; but as those meetings continued I recognised many of the acutest men we have in different walks of life in the city. I could mention names of some of these who would not miss a single meeting on any account, names of men who are amongst the best known citizens.

"How is it that Dr. Torrey magnetizes men who are as old as himself and older?"

"Because he has an undoubtedly intelligent grip of the doctrines upon which he takes his stand; his arguments are clean cut; he is an artist in black and white. He crams into half-an-hour an extraordinary amount of logical reasoning, and business men in Edinburgh are full of admiration of his addresses. He has given us a great lift by restoring to discussion some of the questions which perhaps have been lately sinking into the background. He quotes chapter and verse for all all that he stated, and always with the sense that the Bible must be our infallible guide.

"The evening meetings have appealed to the general community, and here, again, the straightforwardness of Dr. Torrey, and the thrilling effect of the hymns, which will not be forgotten for many a day, have left their decided mark. Surely the revival movement has begun already in Scotland, and will gain power with every month that passes. The evangelists came at the right moment. They have left the right impression, and they have not only revived the energies and beliefs of Christians, but have been the means, under God's blessing, of leading many hundreds to Christ."

Other Evangelists at Work.

Rev. F. C. Spurr in Edinburgh.

The seventh week of the mission (the third under Rev. F. C. Spurr) has been marked by the same spirit of earnestness that has all along pervaded this movement. The evangelist has been as vigorous as ever, and his addresses have, if possible, been even more thoughtful and urgent than the thrilling messages to which he has accustomed the large audiences that have gathered nightly in the Synod Hall. Mr. Spurr has consecrated a splendid physique and a strong and well equipped mind to the service of his Master, and he has found need for both in the abundant labours of the last three weeks. The addresses have been on a very high level, and have been brightened and made memorable by well-chosen illustration. Mr. Spurr has been a traveller in many lands, especially in the East, and far out of the beaten track, and his illustrations from this fruitful source are always fresh and apt. But the great message itself is never lost in the drapery.

Those who heard any of the addresses of last week will never forget the tremendous impact with which they bore down upon the soul for immediate and absolute surrender to Christ. The subjects have been: Monday, "Peace through Justification"; Tuesday, "Repentance"; Wednesday, "Faith"; Thursday, "Compromise"; Friday, "Temptation." These addresses have been the most powerful the evangelist has yet delivered in Edinburgh, and much fruit has been gathered. No night passed without numbers standing up and afterwards passing to the inquiry room for further help. These include all classes, among them being some University students.

The afternoon meetings have been also largely attended, and many are the testimonies of help received. It could not be otherwise, the addresses have been so well calculated to help believers to a deeper and more constant fellowship with God. Mr. Spurr is not only an evangelist, but he is also a highly-gifted and well-furnished teacher of the Word.

In addition to the afternoon and evening meetings, Mr. Spurr addressed the midday meeting in the Gartshore Hall on Monday and Tuesday.

The Synod Hall is soon to come down to make room for the Usher Town Hall, which is to be built on the site; but the last seven weeks have made it hallowed ground, and it will be remembered for many a day as the birth-place of hundreds of souls. It was with feelings of regret on the part of many that the last of the meetings here was reached on Friday. It was a memorable meeting. Despite the very wet and stormy night, an audience of 2,000 people gathered. The address on "Temptation" was listened to with breathless silence. A great many inquirers afterwards went to the appointed room.

The last day has in many respects been the great day of the mission. The missioner began on Sunday by preaching in Newington South U. F. Church (Rev. J. S. Rae's) to a large congregation. In the afternoon the Empire Palace was crowded in every part with women, and again in the evening with men. This provided the preacher with a congregation, including both men and women, of 7,000 people. There was throughout the services the hush of God's power. At the close of the day's labour probably over a hundred persons had yielded to Christ. It was with great thankfulness of heart for the work that has been done, and with feelings of regret that the central mission is over, that the workers and many others left the theatre. The weather has been unfavourable all the time Mr. Spurr has been in Edinburgh.

Rev. John McNeill in London.

Following on the effective services of Lord's Day week, Rev. John McNeill has experienced a season of much blessing at Dr. Barnardo's people's mission church, the "Edinburgh Castle," London, E. Mr. Walter Notman and his helpers have laboured assiduously to gather in the people, and their efforts have proved fruitful. The audiences last week were large and attentive, and the evangelist's pungent and searching words assuredly went home to many hearts. Friday is generally regarded as an "off day" in working-class districts, when the claims of household duties are met, but even on that night there was a capital audience, and Mr. McNeill, enlisting eager attention at the outset, held it until the close of his strong and telling address. The subject was the twenty-third Psalm. The familiar words were the subject of homely illustration and pointed appeal. Admirably suiting his discourse to his artisan hearers, Mr. McNeill drew from an unfailing fund of piquant anecdote many apt stories of an autobiographical nature, having reference more especially to the days of his boyhood and of his clerkship at the railway booking-office. Few could fail to be moved by the graphic description of the old home and of the saintly mother reading aloud in the night time to make her forget her pain and to drown the nerve-stirring tick of the clock. "In fancy's voice I seem to hear her again: 'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me.'" The evangelist, while picturesque in his illustrations, lost no opportunity of declaring the Gospel message; indeed, the address was saturated with Bible truths. The human race is divided into two flocks, one herded by Satan to perdition, the other shepherded by Jesus home to glory. Depicting the future prospect as well as the present condition of the believer, the evangelist cried, "Who would not be a believer?" and added, "You cannot finish the twenty-third Psalm on earth; it does not finish until it lands you 'in the house of the Lord for ever.'"

Sage advice to Christians was a prominent feature of Mr. McNeill's utterance; but the closing words, intended particularly for the unconverted, were devoted to a moving passage descriptive of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Conqueror of death, and setting forth the foolhardiness of facing the judgment without a living faith in God. There was no after-meeting, but the evangelist, after concluding his address, led in prayer, and besought all of those who were outside the fold to enter, and follow "our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep."

Lord's Day last was a season of rich blessing, when the large audiences that came together were deeply influenced by the earnest addresses of the evangelist.

On Monday last Mr. McNeill was the speaker at the noon meeting at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. He dealt very helpfully with the contrasted subjects of (1) the death of Uzzah and (2) the blessing that came to the household of Obed-edom through the reception of the ark (2 Samuel vi. 1-11). Mr. McNeill graphically portrayed the procession, the musical performance, the pomp and display of the occasion, and yet at the same time the neglect of God's directions regarding the ark (Exodus xxv. 14). Proceeding, he used the history of the tragedy to bring out lessons for workers of to-day, to trust, not in the wisdom of man, but in the law and directions of the Lord as set forth in the written Word. Mr. McNeill in a stirring passage spoke of the "offence of the Cross," as regarded by those who would exalt the human, deny the depravity of man's heart, and refuse to admit the need for "shedding of blood." In his concluding words the speaker depicted the peace and joy that must have reigned in the house of Obed-edom, and illustrated the truth that the God of justice and truth is likewise the God of mercy and love.

Incidents from Swansea.

Excellent accounts have reached us of the results of the eight-days' mission recently held by Gipsy Smith at Swansea. Every evening the largest hall in the town was crowded by a thoroughly representative audience, and the extent to which hearts were touched is indicated by the fact that over 800 persons passed through the inquiry rooms.

To very many professing Christians the time was indeed a blessed one. Starting on a voyage of discovery into their own lives, they were led to find there many things which they had fondly believed were rooted out years before. "Don't you dare take the communion till you have apologized for that unkind speech you made the other day. Do you think God wants to see you, while your hands are red with the blood of your fellow man's, your fellow woman's reputation?"

One of the most hopeful signs of the work is indicated by the remark of a girl who said, "I came here to-day because I saw Miss —— was so affected. I saw she was going to the inquiry-room, and I thought if she, who is a Christian, feels so dreadfully, what ought I to feel?" To all appearance both girls found the help and comfort they needed. There were many cases of professing Christians who found they were quite out of sympathy with the things of God. They were conscious of some lack in their lives, and found true joy in full surrender.

But it was not only recreant Christians who profited by the mission. Many scores of men and women made the most momentous decision of their lives. Tidings began to get about of what the Lord was doing. One evening a little girl of perhaps fourteen entered the inquiry room, just as the workers were leaving. "Please ma'am," she said, "I was to ask to see Mrs. ——, my friend said she knew Jesus so well." The friend had been to the inquiry room herself, and could speak from experience of the counsel and guidance that were to be met with there. A terribly pathetic message was brought by another girl. "J. S. sent me," she told a worker, "because she's gone wrong; and she told me to come here, for fear I'd get down to where she is." And J. S. was only seventeen!

A poor girl of not more than nineteen came in, whose grief and misery were terrible to see, and for a while the worker could not get her to do anything but sob. At last she confessed that she had fallen, that she and her mother were not on speaking terms, and that she had contemplated suicide. She would give no name or address, but promised the worker that if she needed help she would send to her. Before she left, Christ's interview with the woman taken in sin was read to her, and the assurance whispered that Jesus loved her then. Two days later she came again, and said, "I have found Jesus Christ. You were quite right, He loves me now."

Mrs. Baeyertz at Tunbridge Wells.

Mrs. Baeyertz has just completed a sixteen-days' mission at Tunbridge Wells, held in the Crabb Memorial Institute in connection with Holy Trinity Church. Much prayer had been going up to God for many weeks previously from those who gathered for the purpose both in private houses and public meeting. God has richly blessed His servant in the preaching of the Word, and many have been brought to Christ From the very first the meetings were largely attended, and both the Bible readings in the afternoon and the evangelistic meetings in the evening were packed to the utmost extent; indeed, on several occasions many were turned away. Mrs. Baeyertz excels in the simplicity and Scriptural character of her preaching, and insists on the Word of God being the sword which the Spirit uses. Over 400 signed cards in the inquiry-room testify to blessing received, and numbers of God's children have been quickened and uplifted. Our hearts are full of thankfulness for this new proof of the power of the old Gospel. In more than one case whole families have professed to receive blessing, and many more are going forth in new courage to walk in newness of life. To Him be the glory! H.

Rotherhithe Free Church.

Mr. A. E. Jennings has just concluded a four-days' mission among the young people of this church, with very blessed results. It has been our joy to deal with some hundred cases, and a large number of these are giving evidence of trust in the Saviour. Our brother had large audiences and rapt attention at each service. Madam Annie Ryall sang the message of salvation in her own earnest, impressive way. T. R.

Mr. Charles Inglis.

Mr. Charles Inglis has returned from America, where he has preached 240 times in five months, and travelled 15,500 miles. He had good times at Northfield and Chicago, and found great willingness on the part of the people to listen to the Gospel. One of the most striking features of the work was the extent to which men responded to the appeals made.

At Baltimore Mr. Inglis addressed 2,700 men in the Opera House, and over 300 of them stood indicating their desire to be saved. At Washington, also, there was much encouragement; while at Boston, at which Mr. Inglis held his last mission in the States, over 7,000 people were reached during one Sunday. From beginning to end large crowds waited upon Mr. Inglis' ministry, and he has been impelled to declare, to the praise of God, that during thirty-five years he has never experienced such times of blessing.

Mr. Inglis is now at Liverpool, labouring on the north side of the city. His next engagement will be at Hastings.

Dr. Harry Guinness in Paisley.

For the last seventeen years a regular winter series of Sabbath evening evangelistic services, extending from October to March, has been held in Paisley, mostly in the George A. Clark Hall. The meetings have been under the management of Mr. George Ross, a business gentleman, who was in his early years associated in evangelistic work with the late Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and Mr. Richard Weaver. The closing meeting of this winter's series was held in the Clark Hall on Sabbath evening, March 15, when Dr. Harry Guinness was the preacher. The large hall was taxed to its utmost capacity to accommodate the crowds that flocked to hear the well-known evangelist. He gave a simple, helpful, memorable Gospel address on "Bartimeus receiving his sight," and so deep was the impression made that at the close forty-five names of inquirers were taken down, three of them being servant girls all out of one house.

On the previous day Dr. Guinness took part in a missionary conference in Hope Hall, and on the Sabbath Day conducted three services in all in the town; at eleven in one of the U.F. churches, at two in Hope Hall, and at seven, as already noted, in the George A. Clark Hall. He finished his brief visit on Monday night, when he gave an interesting limelight lecture of a missionary character. J. C.

Mr. Henry Varley spoke to large and deeply-interested audiences at the Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth, on Sunday afternoon last, and in the evening at the West Cliff Baptist Church. He also gave an impressive Bible reading on Monday in the Cairns Hall on "Gethsemane, in Relation to the Atonement."

Children of the Sahara Desert.

Hymn—Sacred Songs and Solos, No. 432.

If my young readers will look at the map of North Africa they will see that to the south of Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, and Tripoli, lies the vast expanse of the Sahara, which stretches west nearly to the Atlantic Ocean, east to the River Nile, and south in the direction of Lake Chad and the Niger River. Beyond these again there is the Soudan, i.e., "Country of the Blacks," inhabited chiefly by negro nations.

It was once supposed that the Sahara was a great sandy desert or wilderness, swept up here and there into reddish-brown ridges by the sirocco blasts; whereas explorers now tell us that it has a very broken and uneven surface, made up of rocks and stones, ravines and broad valleys, shady places and numberless green spots, called oases. In the Western Sahara some of the hills rise to 8,000 feet, and are even covered with snow, but, as a rule, it is a desert region, exposed to sand-storms, and hot, dry winds. Here the camel, "the ship of the desert," is the principal carrier. Attempts to explore this immense desert have not met with much success.

Some of the good missionaries of the North Africa Mission and South Morocco Mission have related interesting stories of meeting with the people. They usually occupy tents, a dozen or score adjoining each other, the men and boys in one section, and the women and girls in another. Their possessions are scanty, consisting of a few goats, sheep, sometimes cattle, and one or two riding camels. As a race they are high-spirited, daring, and active, and in the more fertile parts, where they assemble in large numbers, these camel-warriors are dangerous foes.

Boy-life in the Sahara is free, indeed more so than in any other part of the wide world. Wearing a puggery on the back of the head, a smock, with a tunic touching the knees, and even some of these thrown off, the sun-burned Sahara boy enjoys his desert surroundings. He is hardy, venturesume, and lithe of foot, delighting to go in pursuit of antelopes, wild asses, desert foxes, and similar animals.

GIRLS NOT WANTED!

In the Sahara the girls are not so welcome at birth as the boys, and consequently, when a girl-child comes into the Tuareg tent, there is much weeping for forty days! By-and-by, the grief passes away, and the children, both male and female, are cared for, loved, and fondled with a far more passionate tenderness in the wild desert than in Morocco or Algeria. The children are bright and merry, and playful as kittens, under their sunny skies, and have some curious games. The girls, of course, are very useful in carrying jars of water and gathering wood, and love to imitate the customs of their mothers, especially weaving, grinding corn, and other household duties.

The dress of these little brown Bedouin girls consists of a loose garment carelessly wrapped round the body and reaching to the knees; on the head a large handkerchief placed cornerwise to protect them from the sun's fierce rays, or to cover the mouth and nostrils against sand-dust. They roam or chase one another barefooted over the desert, until the soles of their feet are as hard as leather.

It is sad to know that these happy girls of the desert are frequently married at the age of twelve years, from which time their lives are often full of sorrow and misery. As in Morocco and the North African lands, the father has absolute control over his daughters, and sells them to the highest bidder as he would a table or chair. Usually these girl-brides never see their future husbands until the day of marriage, which is always made a time of festivity and feasting. By-and-by, if this poor girl-wife makes any mistakes, she is cast off, and suffers cruelty and neglect.

To save these people from sin, and to bring the glad tidings of Jesus, the missionaries are doing a noble work, sowing the words of life. The lady missionaries, nearly seventy in number, have scores of schools where the children are taught reading, writing, sewing, and about Jesus.

One Kabyle girl said to a lady missionary: "I love Jesus; I believe in Him as my Saviour; I believe with all my heart;" and when asked why she had forsaken the faith of Mohammed, replied, "His followers lie, thieve, and sin; and if he cannot save us from our sins here, I do not think he is likely to save us hereafter." The ladies are always welcomed by the mothers and children who regard them as angels of love and life. When we remember our privileges in Christ, contrasted with these Sahara children, we should often sing—

I thank the goodness and the grace
Which on my birth have smiled;
And made me in these Christian days,
A happy English child.

And also pray that these little wanderers in the dark may be brought to the Saviour's feet. Do not forget the sweet lines of Mrs. Luke, the venerable Christian poetess, still living in the Isle of Wight—

I long for the joy of that glorious time,
The sweetest, the brightest, and best;
When the dear little children of every clime,
Shall crowd to His arms and be blest.

AN EVENING WITH AFRICAN MISSIONS. (Psa. lxviii. 29-31; Acts viii. 26-39.)

THIS Psalm lxviii. is a Processional Hymn. Though doubtless composed for some specific occasion, it need not be limited to such, but might be used by the Hebrews as Christians use the Te Deum. The whole history of the chosen people is viewed as a procession. The people march through the wilderness, then through the Land of Promise, and finally a great host of peoples join the mighty advance, and among them princes come out of Egypt, and distant Ethiopia hastens to bring up the rear (31). [The wild beast of the reeds, i.e., of the Nile, is clearly Egypt.] So, in prophetic vision, the seer anticipates that the curse pronounced so long ago on Ham, shall be reversed, and his lot charged with blessing (Gen. ix. 25).

The Ethiopian eunuch came from Meröe, in Upper Egypt. He served under Candace, the family name of the queens, like Pharaoh, Cæsar, &c.; and it speaks much for the liberal sentiments of the queen and the value that she placed on him, that he had been able to attend the recent feast of Pentecost, and prolong his stay. He was not, however, the only representative of Africa at that memorable feast. We are expressly told that there were proselytes present from Egypt, and the parts of Libya about Cyrene; and of course, we can never forget the immense colony of Jews, which was settled in Egypt for two centuries before our Lord's birth.

Philip's approach to the statesman, at the moment when he was reading Isaiah's liii. chapter, and needed further instruction; their holy converse about Christ, whose life and death are the only key that can open the wards of that lock; the instant obedience of the new convert to the light that he had received; and the snatching away of Philip, as though the Holy Spirit wished to continue and complete, with His own hand, the education of this interesting soul—are all features full of the utmost interest.

Philip, however, was well repaid for his simple faith and obedience in leaving his great work in Samaria, by becoming the means of lighting a torch, which in turn gave the Gospel to a continent. Let us never despise the opportunity of ministering to individuals. A Scotch minister once lamented that only one lad had joined his church at the end of a year of labour; but that lad was David Livingstone, and when he became a Christian, all Africa came within the reach of the Gospel.

Let us remember the connection of Africa with Christianity in those early days—Clement and Athanasius, each of whom was connected with the great Christian Church at Alexandria; and Augustine, the great Bishop of Hippo, on the site of the ancient Carthage. In fact, all along the northern coast of the great African Continent Christian churches were planted in the first four centuries of the Christian era; but as they became faithless and cold, they were swept away by the invasion of the Moslem, and the Crescent replaced the Cross.

For centuries the myriads of Africa remained untouched by the Gospel; but what marvels were effected in the last century! First the missionary Kraft, then Robert Moffat, and lastly David Livingstone, who said, "In the glow of love which Christianity inspires I resolved to devote myself to the alleviation of human misery," and who coined the famous phrase, "The open sore of the world." Stanley's wonderful march across Africa opened the entire continent. See also the work of the North Africa Mission, of the Cameroons and Alfred Saker, of the Congo and the Combers—to say nothing of a whole constellation of men and women who have laid down their lives in connection with the Congo Balolo—of Zanzibar and Uganda, of the South African Mission, of the noble work begun by Miss Whately in Egypt and now so nobly extended by American societies. But we must make haste to evangelize the inland tribes, for Moslem missionaries are pouring forth into the Soudan and more southern regions from their college at Cairo. Africa for Christ! F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

During recent months Christian Endeavour has made considerable advance in Bahia, in Brazil. The society has grown from twenty members to fifty-seven. A junior society was organized last February and its members have increased from fifteen to twenty-five.

* * *

Two new societies, of separate languages, are reported by Dr. C. F. Rife, of Kusaie, Caroline Islands—one of forty members in the Gilbert Islands Training School at Kusaie, and the other of thirty for the Kusaians. The first society in Micronesia was organized in 1895, in the Marshall Islands Training School, also at Kusaie. There is now scarcely an adult who is not a Christian.

PAUL'S FAREWELL TO EPHESUS (Acts xx. 28-38).

GOLDEN TEXT—Acts xx. 35.

WHEN the riot in Ephesus had been quelled, Paul left that city to visit among the churches in Macedonia and Achaia, intending to sail from Cenchrea to Syria for Jerusalem. He was prevented, however, by the evil plotting of the Jews (v. 3). He escaped to Philippi, and with Luke sailed across to Troas, where an advance party of fellow-labourers, including Timothy, waited to receive him. In that busy seaport, a week's mission was held, closing with the memorable all-night service recorded in vv. 7-12. Next day Paul walked to Assos, and sailed thence to Miletus, where, by his special request, the elders of the church at Ephesus came out to meet him.

PAUL'S ADDRESS TO THE EPHESIAN ELDERS.

1. Review of the past. Labours, trials, tears, and persecutions. Faithful and continual teaching, in public and private. Unvarying theme. "Repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." "The Kingdom of God" first, self and his own needs last.

2. Prospect for the future. Path shadowed and hidden. "Bonds and imprisonments waiting him," and it may be death (xxi. 13). But the guidance of the Holy Ghost sure, and joy at the end of his course. Will continue to testify (v. 24).

3. Present state. "Bound in spirit," downcast (v. 25), but his heart garrisoned with the peace of God (Phil. iv. 7).

As their father in Christ, Paul addresses those whom he leaves behind as instructors; hence the lesson speaks strongly to teachers.

LESSONS.

1. "Take heed to yourselves" (Cant. i. 6). The "living water" must be received before it can outflow (John vii. 38, 39). The channel for blessing to others must be adjusted to the Fountain-head for ever-fresh supplies. "Clean and empty." "Teach Thou this class, O Lord, through my lips" (Psa. li. 6-13). "Then will I teach" (1 Tim. iv. 16).

2. Paul, by the grace of God, had lived before the heathen Ephesians a life such as he could refer to as an example for the converted men to copy (v. 19). Home life, industry, unselfishness, simplicity ("my necessities"—cost of luxuries went to help the weak), gentleness, moderation, faithfulness, watchfulness, zeal. No object lesson so well studied as "teacher," watched, copied, reflected, developed in the children in after years. Thus is character built. "My teacher walks and talks with Jesus."

3. "Take heed to all the flock." The young and timid as well as the aggressive. The dull and slow-witted as the clever and winsome are alike "purchased with His blood," and can be remoulded by His Spirit (1 Pet. ii. 2) for strength and health.

4. How can the Word of His grace build up? The Bible reveals God's purposes, the soul's needs, the supplies laid up, and how to attain them (Heb. iv. 16). The Scriptures are food and medicine because they testify of Jesus (John v. 38), strength and health, (2 Pet. 3-18 till Eph. ii. 20, 22; iv. 13).

5. Wolves and false teachers. A memory well stored, and a heart fully charged with God's Word is ammunition and blockade against the wiles and darts of the evil one. A lamp also to show up the snares and stumble stones (Ps. cxix. 11, 105).

6. "To give you an inheritance." How? As a landowner may not know that rich ore lies under his land till he is told, so the Bible reveals the inheritance God has provided in Christ, how we may obtain a right, and how to prepare to take up residence.

7. Paul watched for and over the souls in Ephesus (vv. 20-31), prayed with his teachers. Have I taken each class scholar's hand in mine, and kneeling before the King introduced each one in person to the Lord Jesus Christ? Have I prayed for myself and fellow teachers in case (v. 31, Col. iv. 3).

8. Attitude in prayer (v. 36). So did Solomon (2 Chron. vi. 13), Daniel (Dan. vi. 10), Ezra (Ezra ix. 5), Stephen (Acts vii. 60), Peter (Acts ix. 40), Paul (Eph. iii. 14), JESUS (Luke xxii. 41).

The Blackgang Mission has experienced an eventful year. The series of special services in the spring led to a fruitful revival in the district, bringing to the young especially much blessing. The impetus thus given to the work was felt throughout the year, and the numerous agencies of the mission were sustained with earnest diligence. Towards the cost of the contemplated manse the little church has subscribed over £35. It is proposed to borrow £500 and raise the remainder by subscriptions. The superintendent (Mrs. Smith) is hopeful that friends personally interested in the mission will assist in reducing the sum to be borrowed.

S.S. Lesson Illustrations.

CUCKOOS AND WOLVES.

IT has been observed that in any locality where a cuckoo is to be found, the little birds seem to know by instinct of the nature of the intruder. Whenever the cuckoo shows itself, it is pursued by the smaller birds, and, as often as not, driven out of the district. It is thought by some folk that the cuckoo is recognised as an enemy given to furtively dropping its unwelcome eggs in the nests of its fellows, and so, to drive away the intruder, concerted attacks are made. In the same way horses know of the approach of a lion or a bear, and sheep can tell by instinct when a wolf is coming near. The Apostle, using this illustration, besought the disciples to take heed unto themselves and to all the flock, for after his departure grievous wolves would enter in among them, not sparing the flock (28, 29). We are sent forth as sheep among wolves, but the Lord will ever be our Shepherd and Protector.

WATCHING AND WARNING.

In former days pilchards were caught off the coast of Cornwall by means of sean or seine nets. There were the "huers'" houses along the shore, from which the "huers" warned the fishermen of the approach of the pilchard shoals. To-day, with the use of drift nets, the watching from the cliffs is still continued, more or less, and experienced eyes can readily detect the incoming shoals. A change is seen in the colour of the water, and by the activity of the sea-birds hovering around the pilchards the man on the look-out knows of the approaching swarm of fish. The men of Ephesus were enjoined to be watchful, even as Paul had not ceased to warn everyone night and day with tears (v. 31).

COMMENDING RELIGION.

The son and heir of Lewanika, the Barotsi chief, is a young man of the name of Litia. Some time ago he was placed with a European missionary to be educated. Having quarrelled with his guardian, Litia visited Khama, the well-known religious chief. While there, the youth became a great admirer of Khama, and on returning home, determined to imitate the example of that worthy chief and become a Christian. After due instruction, Litia was baptized, and has remained ever since faithful to his profession, both in creed and practice. Young, intelligent, and a Christian, much is expected of the future Barotsi chief, who is shaping his life on the model of his enlightened neighbour, Khama. As with the African, so with the Apostle Paul. He commended the brethren to God, and God to the brethren. He pointed to the Word of His grace, which was able to build them up and give them an inheritance among all them which are sanctified (v. 32).

LOSING A LIMB; FINDING GOD.

In the year 1842, Dr. George Wilson, the Scottish professor, was compelled to abandon his public duties because of a sprained foot that had been neglected. Dr. Wilson was called on to choose between the loss of a limb and the loss of his life. Though he soon decided to undergo an operation, he asked for a week to prepare, not through fear of pain, but because he felt unfit to face death. As he said, his faith was feeble because his light was dim. During the week's respite he read and prayed with an earnestness that words cannot express. With firm hope in Christ, Dr. Wilson submitted to the operation, which happily was carried through quite successfully, and though he lost a limb he gained infinitely more. He then dedicated his life wholly to the service of God. In our lesson, the men of Ephesus were sorely tried at losing Paul, and fell on his neck weeping (v. 37). Yet the trial of the believers led to their future strength, as they were brought into closer communion with the Lord.

Scotch and Irish Education. — Dr. McKeown's little volume of "Letters on Irish National Education" (1s. Mullans & Sons, Belfast) offers strong evidence in support of the assertion that clericalism is the ruin of elementary education in the Sister Island. The author, who is a member of the Royal University, and Chairman of the Graduates' Association, is in a position to speak with authority on the subject; and certainly his indictment could hardly be stronger. In Scotland the Parliamentary grants amount to £696,607, for an average attendance of 629,038 scholars; in Ireland the grants amount to no less than £1,145,721, with only 478,224 pupils. In Scotland, too, the average income of the principal male teachers is £173; whereas in Ireland, it is only £80, with a possibility of reaching £175 after thirty-six years irreproachable service. In Scotland, the illiteracy of the population is about 2·16 per cent. for men, and 3.27 per cent. for women; but in Ireland it it 15·1 per cent. and 13.2 per cent. respectively. Yet the latter country has an army of 2,000 teachers "belonging to religious orders;" and 89 per cent. of the schools are "under clerical control;" whereas in Scotland, 87 per cent. are managed by School Boards.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

STIRLING.

THE Temperance Mission held here under the leadership of Dr. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones, and which is just concluded, must be pronounced the most impressive and successful mission ever held in Stirling—the most fruitful in immediate and far-reaching results.

It opened on Saturday afternoon, the 14th inst., with a meeting of young people in the largest public hall, and closed on Friday evening, 20th inst., with an illustrated lecture on "Public-House Life in America." At the outset of the Mission Dr. Henry emphasized the religious aspect of the work in which he and Mr. Jones are engaged. He pleaded for the personal and prayerful assistance of the temperance workers of Stirling in their efforts to arouse the consciences of the Christian people, and secure the furtherance of God's glory. A pledge is not of much worth unless it is based on sound conviction and taken for the best and highest of reasons." This was the note that sounded throughout the entire Mission, making it unique in the history of Temperance effort in Stirling, and inspiring the hearts of all the workers with new courage and hope. At the first public meeting, on Monday night, Dr. Henry laid the foundation of a great argument, which he pursued and built up night after night, shewing from the Scriptures what is the mind of God on the use of intoxicating drinks.

The argument increased in comprehensiveness and power as it advanced, and culminated in a great and solemn appeal to the Christian heart and conscience, full of spiritual force and fervour, and carrying conviction and decision to the minds of many. The results have been most gratifying, and quite unexampled; 320 pledges were registered during the week. But even more important than this immediate result is the disclosure to many temperance workers of the extent to which their cause is founded upon "the impregnable rock of Holy Scripture," and the new courage and hope that have been awakened in their hearts, and which will, undoubtedly, give a new impulse to the cause.

The members of our churches, too, have been reached and influenced in a measure not hitherto attained. Dr. Henry's appeal to Christians, and his passionate declaration that until the churches are aroused nothing effectual will be done, made a great impression on the crowded audience that heard him. It is from such impressions and convictions that our hope for the future largely springs.

On these grounds Dr. Henry's mission to Stirling must be pronounced a great success. Following on that of Rev. Leonard Isitt, it has served to deepen conviction, and largely increase the volume of temperance sentiment in this community. The attendances at the outset were not by any means encouraging, but the personality of Dr. Henry drew largely increasing auditors, till on the closing night of the mission he faced one of the largest and most enthusiastic audiences Stirling has ever given to any visitor.

The splendid hymn-solos of Mr. T. Armon Jones no doubt also contributed largely to this result. Temperance public meetings have seldom an opportunity of hearing such a powerful and artistic rendering of sacred song as that with which Mr. Jones favours his audience; and this feature of the mission was no doubt a great attraction. The enthusiastic vote of thanks which was given to both these brethren at the close expressed the hope that they would return to Stirling next winter for a fortnight's mission; and this hope we trust will be realised.

Obituary.

REV. DEAN FARRAR.

THE death of Dean Farrar, which took place at Canterbury on Sunday evening last, will be mourned, not only by his brethren in the Church of England, but by the wider circle of Christian people in all sections of the community, who esteemed him for his ability as an evangelical preacher, his earnestness as a social reformer, and perhaps most of all for the power and picturesqueness of his contributions to religious literature.

The late Dean was born in Bombay in 1831. His father was rector of Sidcup, Kent. "First among the influences which have formed my life," he says, "I must mention the character of a mother who has been dead for nearly thirty years"—he wrote this in 1890, when he was close upon sixty years of age—"but of whom my reminiscences are as vivid and as tender as if she had passed away but yesterday. She passed her life in the deep valley of poverty, obscurity, and trial; but she has left to her only surviving son the recollections of a saint."

Entering the scholastic profession, he became an assistant-master at Harrow, where he began, with the well-known "Eric; or, Little by Little," his series of sketches of school and college life. Next, he was made headmaster of Marlborough College, but his reputation in the domain of education was gradually eclipsed by his growing fame as an eloquent preacher and a popular writer. He had already made an impression by his stimulating book, "Seekers after God," published in 1868; while at Marlborough, his chief literary work—in many respects the greatest of his career—was the "Life of Christ," which, despite criticism on account of redundancy of rhetoric, at once attained to a wide and lasting popularity. No fewer than twelve editions were called for during the first twelve months, and, like several of his other works, it has been translated into all the principal languages of Europe, in addition to securing a large circulation among all English-speaking people. The "Life of Christ" was followed, in 1879, by a "Life of St. Paul," and this, again, in 1882, by "The Early Days of Christianity."

In 1876 there came the appointment to a canonry of Westminster and the rectory of St. Margaret's, Westminster. From that time forward Dr. Farrar added the fame of a great popular preacher to that of a great popular writer, and volumes of his sermons, preached either in Westminster Abbey, where he commanded large and attentive audiences, or in St. Margaret's, were issued at frequent intervals. Many who honoured the man and his work, however, were distressed by the book which he published in 1879, entitled, "Eternal Hope." Dr. Farrar, in the course of the controversy which followed, strenuously disclaimed being a Universalist, but the feeling of distrust aroused among orthodox believers was never quite removed.

In 1883 Dr. Farrar was appointed Archdeacon of Westminster, and this post he held until his nomination to the Deanery of Canterbury in 1895. Among other offices which he filled with distinction was that of Chaplain to her late Majesty Queen Victoria, and Chaplain to the House of Commons. Since his appointment to Canterbury Dr. Farrar's name has been less conspicuously before the public, and his literary activity has gradually slackened under the influence of advancing years and failing health. He had recently been much weakened by paralysis, but with characteristic industry was busy with ecclesiastical and literary affairs almost to the last.

MR. WILLIAM HOLMES.

The death of Mr. William Holmes, on the 18th inst., at the age of eighty-two, removes a veteran from the ranks of Christian workers in the West of London. As one of the oldest members and a deacon of Paddington Chapel, he was well known and deservedly honoured for his untiring devotion in the discharge of his duties; and when the church was passing through a period of exceptional trial, his tactful and discriminate help and counsel were used in bringing about the happy issue which resulted. While carrying on a somewhat extensive business, it was his delight to take part in numerous forms of Christian work, though of late years his failing strength necessitated his withdrawal from many of the scenes of activity which he loved. Mr. Holmes had a special interest in the Evangelistic Mission, superintended by his son-in-law, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, and up to the last manifested deep concern in all its undertakings, as well as the agencies connected with his own church. An outstanding feature of his private and public life was his reverence for and confidence in the Word of God. As a diligent Bible student he was well equipped for service, and to him it was easy and natural in conversation to speak of the things of Christ. The interment took place on Monday, and was preceded by a memorial service in Paddington Chapel, which was largely attended, and conducted by the departed worker's eldest son—Rev. Robert Holmes.

REV. DAVID LOWE, GLASGOW.

Rev. David Lowe, for nearly forty years a Presbyterian minister, entered into his rest on Saturday last at his house in Glasgow. For four years he has been removed from active service through ill-health, but those who remember the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to this country in 1873, know his connection with their work in Newcastle-on-Tyne. From the John Knox Church, of which Mr. Lowe was minister, the wave of blessing spread far and wide. In Glasgow, his field of labour was entirely among the working classes. In addition to his regular work, accompanied by a brother minister, he was in the habit of holding services in the various factories in the East End at the dinner hour. This work brought him into very friendly contact with many. The following lines from a hymn which Mr. Lowe composed some years ago show the spirit which animated his work:—

Move Thou my heart from day to day,
That I may ever to Thee pray,
And ever be inclined to say—
"All for Thy glory!"

When on my latest bed I lie,
And time has come for me to die,
With fleeting breath I'll gladly cry—
"All for Thy glory!"

REV. R. SHINDLER.

The Baptist denomination loses an interesting figure by the death of Rev. R. Shindler, which occurred on March 12 at Forest Hill, in his eightieth year. Mr. Shindler had been a minister for more than fifty years, and had held pastorates in various parts of the country, retiring from active service some few years ago. By his writings he appealed to a larger audience than by his spoken discourses. Many of the tracts published by the Religious Tract Society and other similar societies were the work of his pen, and he was an extensive contributor to religious magazines and papers, both in this country and in the United States. Hymnology was his favourite subject, and he had a wide and intimate acquaintance with the histories of the hymns of all evangelical denominations. Mr. Shindler was a warm personal friend of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon.

Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn.

THE recent meetings of these workers and their helpers on the Continent have been much blessed of God. Mr. Booth-Clibborn has just received a thank-offering from a shopkeeper, whose family circle was blessed in a revival which broke out at the meetings held in January. In two households eleven persons, including three servants, have been led to decision, besides several friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn write to the effect that the Christian Mission (Continental) of which they are the leaders, has no connection with any other religious organization or Church. They are to hold meetings at Portman Rooms, W., on March 31 and April 2, at 8 p.m., and commence a four days' mission at Dr. Barnardo's "Edinburgh Castle," E., on Lord's Day, April 5. Their present address is 5, Inglewood Road, West Hampstead, N.W.

The White Slave Traffic.

On Thursday, last week, at the Home Office, the Home Secretary (Mr. Akers-Douglas), received a deputation from the National Vigilance Association on the subject of the suppression of the "white slave" traffic. The Earl of Aberdeen introduced, and among those present were the Dowager Duchess of Newcastle, the Bishop of Rochester, the Earl of Stamford, the Countess of Strafford, Lady Frances Balfour, Lady Knightley of Fawsley, Bishop Barry, Mr. Sydney Gedge, and Mr. W. A. Coote, Secretary of the National Vigilance Association.

In some words of introduction, the Earl of Aberdeen said that the deputation represented some twenty-one societies. Not only did it speak on behalf of many philanthropic agencies in this country, but it represented a wide-spread organization extending throughout Europe, and formed for one special purpose. In all the capitals of Europe, committees are formed, and are under the best auspices, with the approval of the chief officers of the Governments, and in some cases under royal patronage.

The Bishop of Rochester intimated that the desire of the deputation was to facilitate the desire of the Government to put into practice some of the Articles referred to in the Final Protocol, signed by the delegates representing sixteen countries, at the Paris Official Conference for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic. He said: We propose to appoint paid or voluntary workers to be provided by various societies interested in preventive work and the suppression of the white slave traffic, but to be under the direct control and supervision of the International Bureau in England who will be responsible for the work; and we ask that they may be put in official touch with police officers watching the incoming steamers. It is not proposed that these agents should in any way assume the functions of detective officers, but on the contrary should wear a band round their arms indicating their readiness to assist young women in every particular. We think that six months of such work will enable us to compile a report which will enable the authorities to devise plans and methods of effectually checking the white slave traffic at ports and railway termini.

It is proposed to appoint experts in dealing with women on the streets, who, in addition to the ordinary rescue work, will take declarations from foreign women and girls plying as prostitutes; and when the evidence has been thoroughly sifted by the Central Bureau, and the identity and origin established by communication with the National Committee of the country to which the woman professedly belongs, a report will be sent to the Home Office or the Chief Commissioner of Police, for the case to be finally dealt with. We ask further that when it has been decided to repatriate the woman, we may be permitted to arrange for her to be received by some member of the National Committee connected with the country to which she is about to be repatriated. The Bureau will also be prepared to give the necessary guarantees, and take charge of the "victims of the criminal traffic," and, pending the investigation place them in either Protestant, Catholic, or Jewish Homes, according to the religion they profess.

After a few words by the Earl of Stamford, the Home Secretary, in reply, recognized the great efforts which have been made by the National Vigilance Association and kindred societies. In order to carry out the proposals made at the International Conference held at London in 1899, it would be his duty to designate an officer who will be charged with the work of collecting information on this subject, and who will be empowered to correspond direct with officials charged with similar duties in the contracting States. With the assistance of the International Bureau he hoped to be able to build up an efficient system wherewith to deal with the great evil of the traffic. He approved the proposals made by the Bishop, and remarked that to secure success there must be co-operation between the societies, the Home Department, and the police, and no jealousies.

About Books.

The sub-title well describes The Ruling Quality as a study of faith as the means of victory in life. (1s. net. Fleming H. Revell Co.)

A charming booklet contains the Sermon on the Mount, printed in quaint attractive fashion and bound in vellum. (1s. net. O. Anacker, 2, Gresham Buildings, E.C.)

Many useful hints and much kindly advice have been gathered together by Mrs. J. N. Bell in The A.B.C. of Housekeeping, or Mistress and Maid. (1s. Henry J. Drane.)

The young people, whether Church or Nonconformist, who read The Priestly Letters, by Rev. John Wenn (2s. 6d. net. A. H. Stockwell) will be faithfully warned of many of the dangers of priestism and ritualism.

The Better Country is a posthumous publication by the author of "Sandy Scott's Bible Class," in which a touching story is graciously and beautifully told of a life lived for God amid humble surroundings. (1s. Holness).

Bishop Barry shows a thorough grasp of his subject in The Position of the Laity in the Church, which he has contributed to "The Church's Outlook Series." The treatment is able and exhaustive. (2s. 6d. net. E. Stock.)

The fifteenth volume of the Mothers' Union Journal, in addition to providing much excellent reading matter, shows that substantial progress is being made by the Union within the Church of England. (1s. Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.)

The charming binding of In His Secret, by M. Ewbank, covers a beautiful testimony of the leading of a child of God out into the Spirit-filled life, with much unfolding of the truth regarding that life. (1s. 6d. net. E. Marlborough & Co.)

Several sound lessons for the avoidance of the pitfalls of life are taught in Thorns that Choke, by Florence Moore. (3s. 6d. Bemrose & Sons.) The dangers of deceitfulness, drink, gambling, and Christian science are pointed out in the story.

The numerous lessons to be gathered from the experience of the nameless convert of John ix., and the events which gathered round the miracle, are helpfully brought out in The Man who was Born Blind (2s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell), by Rev. John Stuttard.

Memories of days of spiritual quickening are precious to God's people; and we welcome the issue of The Great Revival in Ireland, 1859, written at the time by Rev. Samuel J. Moore, to which a preface is supplied by Rev. C. G. Moore. (1s. Marshall Brothers.)

The high place which James Chalmers: His Autobiography and Letters, by Rev. Richard Lovett, has already claimed for itself among missionary and biographical literature, bespeaks a cordial reception for a cheaper edition. It cannot be recommended too highly as a book to place in the hands of young people. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

The modest title of Sidelights on the Epistle to the Ephesians (1s. 6d. net. Nisbet), by Rev. Charles G. Baskerville, covers much that will be found useful by teachers and speakers, as well as helpful by the reader who desires to apply to his own heart the wisdom that is from above. For Bible-readings it will be found a veritable storehouse of hints.

To his other valuable contributions to temperance literature, Mr. Arthur Sherwell has added a lecture on The Drink Peril in Scotland. Without accepting the author's estimate of the value of local veto, or approving his advocacy of public-house companies, we have found much in these pages to strengthen the hands and enrich the répertoire of the true social reformer. (1s. net. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

Hurry is a scourge in England as well as in America; and William George Jordan's weighty words in The Majesty of Calmness may well bear a message of reproof to many in our midst. While from a Christian standpoint the idea might have been differently expressed, there is a deep truth in the definition of the royal road to happiness as being found in consecration, concentration, conquest, and conscience. (1s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

Life Secrets: Spiritual Insights of a Christian Physician—Henry Foster, M.D. Compiled and arranged by Theodora Crosby Bliss. (3s. 6d. net. Revell.) Here are some of the sayings and writings of a beloved physician, the founder, and for half a century the head, of the Clifton Springs Sanitarium, N.Y. Classified under twelve headings, and dealing with prayer and service, the work of God and the duty of the Christian, the words gathered in this volume are wise and witty, pointed and worthy of careful perusal. To all who knew Dr. Foster the book will come with a message at once loving and timely. A prefatory chapter gives a sketch of his useful career.

Those who read Rev. John Jameson's first series of stories of Life and Work in East End of London, will gladly welcome a second volume. (1s. "Joyful News" Book Depôt, Rochdale; Partridge, London.) East London is a great blot on civilization, and a reproach to the Christian Church; and these two facts come out into all the bolder relief when we read of the blessing which follows whole-hearted service.

An agreeable method of historical study is adopted by Rev. George Eayrs, in his useful work Alfred to Victoria: Hands Across a Thousand Years. Each century is represented by the one who, in the author's opinion, did more than any other man of his time to enrich and fashion the life of the age in which he lived. Among those selected are such acknowledged leaders as Wycliffe, Luther, Cromwell, and Wesley, and each chapter has its own list of dates and names relating to the century of which it treats. (2s. 6d. Swan Sonnenschein.)

As an examination of the political, social, and religious conditions of the time, we have found The Scene of Our Lord's Life, by Rev. Dr. R. Waddy Moss, a model of condensation and clearness. The reader is brought up to date in all that is likely to shed light on the Gospel narrative, and the numerous references to the text of Scripture make the linking on of the information a simple matter. The construction by the reader of a textual index would be a profitable exercise. (1s. net. Hodder & Stoughton. "Christian Study Manuals.")

The series of essays, by John Edgar McFadyen, gathered under the title, Thoughts for Silent Hours (2s. 6d. net. Fleming H. Revell Co.), will lead the earnest reader into the secret place of the Most High, and provide food for meditation during many a quiet hour. "In these days of criticism," says the author, "it is well to assure ourselves that the positive religious content of Scripture remains not only unharmed, but untouched;" and in simple fashion he indicates profound depths of teaching in passages of which we thought we had exhausted the meaning in childhood. Faith will be strengthened and vision made more clear by the prayerful reading of this book.

A deeply interesting volume of pictures of Jewish life has been given us by Mrs. Baron in "Aus dem Cheder"—a series of papers, translated from the German of the late Dr. Biesenthal, and reprinted from The Scattered Nation. The Cheder, or religious school attended by Jewish boys in various lands of the Dispersion, has a real story behind it; and here we have that story told with charming simplicity. The pages throw great light upon the Jewish problem in some of its most important aspects; the strength and the weakness of Hebrew home life and training are depicted here. Some other stories by the late Professor Franz Delitzsch, Mr. Philip Gordon, and the late Dr. A. N. Somerville, complete a most attractive little volume. (1s. net. Morgan & Scott.)

By telling specially for young people the life story of Frances E. Willard, Bernie Babcock has made a worthy addition to "girls' books" of the very highest order. In An Uncrowned Queen (2s. 6d. net. Fleming H. Revell Co.) there is no covering over of the difficulties of life. A strenuous, laborious life is faithfully depicted, and one lesson of the book is that those whom God endows with special gifts, and to whom He grants a vision of the world's need have a burden to bear of whose weight the world has little idea. Yet this delightful narrative will deter no true-hearted reader; the only possible life for a Christian is shown to be in the line of the will of God, and His blessing to be a crown of glory which transfigures all. Youthful escapades, college experiences, and later events are all described with a charm that makes us feel a keen sense of loss as we close the volume.

Very few have been privileged to know or to meet so many leaders in foreign mission work as Dr. H. Clay Trumbull has recalled in Old-Time Volunteers. (3s. 6d. net. Fleming H. Revell Co.) Nearly all the workers mentioned were Americans, but we find among them Robert Moffat and Narayan Sheshadri. Few of the names are familiar; but we do well to make the acquaintance of the men who led the way into the dark places of the earth, and amid many difficulties sowed seed of which we are still reaping the fruit. It were a shame that the Christian Church should allow such names to be forgotten. Then there are surprising facts to be met with in such a search; as when we find that in 1816 Dr. Samuel Worcester suggested "that the energies of Christendom wisely directed, and attended by the blessing of the Spirit, might send the Gospel over the world in a quarter of a century." Every student of missions to whom this book is introduced will be grateful.

"Translated," the story of the home-call of Eustace Maxwell, told by his mother, has had a large circulation. It has been decided to reprint it, and copies can now be had, tastefully bound in white leatherette and gold, suitable for putting into the hands of public school boys, young university men, and others. The book is not only a brief outline of an unusual life very touchingly told, but there is power in it, and we would unhesitatingly commend it. American Notes.

DR. MILLS, corresponding secretary of the Thank-offering Fund of the M.E. Church, announces that the last dollar of the Twenty-Million Fund, begun three years ago, has been raised. Of this sum the authorities propose to use eight millions for educational purposes, a similar sum for paying off church debts, a million and a half for the benefit of superannuated ministers, and the remainder for hospitals and miscellaneous purposes.

The recent exposure of a regular traffic in young girls at the port of Philadelphia led to quiet investigation on the part of the immigration service, and it is believed that the infamous practice of importing women from Europe to lead lives of shame in our Eastern cities is being carried on extensively in New York. To break up this traffic and secure evidence by which guilty parties may be brought to justice, the Treasury Department has proposed to appoint a number of women inspectors in the immigration service, whose duty shall be to board all incoming steamships shortly before they reach New York, and to question all women in the first and second cabins who could possibly be suspected of an intention to enter houses of disrepute upon reaching their destination.

In spite of the fact that the law prohibiting the sale of liquors in the Capitol at Washington provided no penalty for violation, all the intoxicating liquors have been removed from the building. Major McDowell, clerk of the House of Representatives, who has the care of the House wing, has issued an order that this enactment is to be rigidly enforced, and that at once. With this order the Sergeant-at-Arms took the necessary steps to put a stop to the liquor traffic in the House restaurant. The proprietor desired time in which to dispose of the stock of liquors on hand, but this was not allowed.

In Pennsylvania a movement resembling the "Los von Rom" agitation in Europe is in progress among the Poles, who number several hundred thousand. A priest, Father Hodin, having a large congregation near Scranton, has declared himself and his people independent of the Roman Catholic Church, and assumed the title for himself and his followers of the "Polish National Church." Brought into court, Father Hodin was informed that he could use this title if he included in it the word "Reformed," so that the public should not think he was still within the Roman Catholic Church.

Bishop Potter, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, has expressed himself in favour of the recognition by the Church of Bishop Koslowski, of Chicago, who wishes to bring his followers of the Polish Independent Church under the ægis of that body. Bishop Potter is supported by several of the most prominent Episcopal clergymen in this city, among them Dr. Huntington, Dr. Greer, and Dr. Batten. Bishop Koslowski claims to have under his jurisdiction twenty-six churches, twenty-four priests, twenty-six schools, 13,000 children, and 80,000 members. He desires the fellowship and unity of the Episcopal Church, and if his offer is accepted will place his churches and their pastors under the guidance and jurisdiction of the Episcopal bishops in whose dioceses they may be located.

Associated with Bishop Koslowski in his work is the Rev. T. V. Jakimowicz, who is a nobleman by birth, and was formerly a priest in Pennsylvania. In the winter of 1895-6 he came to Christ's Mission in this city, conducted by "Father" O'Connor for the conversion of Roman Catholics in general and priests in particular. There he remained for three months, and Mr. O'Connor says in respect of him that his "was the clearest case of conversion ever witnessed at Christ's Mission."

General Booth, of the Salvation Army, held a great farewell meeting in the Metropolitan Opera House. He delivered a vigorous speech that was listened to with profound attention. Appreciative messages of farewell were read from President Roosevelt, and several more prominent public men in different parts of the country. The meeting was followed by a torch-light parade.

Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts (the "Christian Lobbyist"), the energetic superintendent of the International Reform Bureau at Washington, writes me concerning the fifty-seventh Congress that has just expired, that its most important temperance legislation was the passage of the Gillette-Lodge Act forbidding American rum sellers to sell rum and opium in Pacific Islands having no civilized Government. President Roosevelt gave Dr. Crafts the pen with which he signed the Act. The Reform Bureau originated the amendment forbidding the sale of intoxicants in United States immigrant stations. The Women's Christian Temperance Union also secured a renewal of the Act shutting out tobacco packages and pictures and cards promotive of gambling and impurity, through the persistent aid of Congressman Steele.

The Churches.

Church of England.

Rev. T. W. Thomas, vicar of St. Barnabas, Cambridge, has protested, in a local paper, against the raising of funds for philanthropic purposes by means of theatrical performances. He says:—"This method of raising money may succeed for a time, but will surely end in disaster."

Rev. F. Baylis (C.M.S., Salisbury Square, E.C.) writes:—"Rev. Christian Fallscheer, C.M.S. missionary at Nablus, was for more than twenty-five years the only European within forty miles of Nablus, and as there was no hotel in the town, many travellers availed themselves of his unbounded hospitality. He died in 1901, full of years, and was buried in a little cemetery in Nablus. At his death the small native congregation started a subscription list in order to build a wall round the cemetery as a memorial to their beloved pastor. The more bigoted Mohammedans, so long as they can get easy access to the cemetery, will not allow a tombstone to remain standing, but immediately destroy it. Even Mr. Fallscheer's grave has been desecrated. During a recent visit to Palestine I learnt the above facts, and feel sure that many clergy and others who have visited Palestine, and perhaps shared in Mr. Fallscheer's hospitality, would like to know how matters stand, and may wish to give some small contribution towards the cost of a wall."

Baptist.

To the many religious and philanthropic undertakings in connection with the East London Tabernacle (Pastor Edwin H. Ellis) there has now been added a Jewish mission.

Rev. Dr. J. K. Dixon, late of Philadelphia, U.S.A., has accepted a call to the pastorate of Maze Pond Church, Old Kent Road, S.E. Dr. Dixon has filled important pulpits in America, and has a considerable reputation as a preacher and lecturer. He has been preaching at Maze Pond for the last three months, and will enter on his regular ministry without a break. There has been a remarkable increase at the meetings for prayer since Dr. Dixon began his work.

The people in Taw Green village, Okehampton, and the farmers round, are a long distance from any chapel, and the church which is the nearest is one-and-a-half to two miles away. For a long time there has been a desire to do something for the place. About twelve months ago a farmer opened his house for meetings. From fifty to eighty people have attended the services; and recently a new chapel was opened, when the President of the County Baptist Association was present.

At the C. H. Spurgeon Chapel, Waterbeach, Cambs., the Centenary Celebration and the first anniversary of the settlement of Rev. C. Evelyn Charlesworth as pastor, were held on the 16th inst. Pastor Archibald G. Brown preached in the afternoon to a large congregation, and a public meeting was held in the evening, when Rev. Robert Smith, of Histon, and Mr. Brown delivered addresses. Reports show that the church work is in a prosperous condition.

The young men of West Vale Church, Halifax, headed by the pastor (Rev. D. Rhys-Lewis), are creating no small stir in the district. Every Sunday evening during the last two months they have conducted services in the streets. The audiences have increased each time. No fewer than five hundred men listened eagerly to the Gospel preached by the young men on a recent Sunday. As the result of these efforts the indoor attendances show signs of marked improvement.

The friends at the Baptist Chapel, Dugdale Street, Camberwell New Road, S.E., were recently favoured by an interesting and soul-reviving lecture by Mr. Edward H. Crow, illustrated by fine dissolving views. The subject was "Life and Light, Real and False." The horrors of drunkenness and gambling were contrasted with the peace, joy, and eternal glory of the Christian life. The Brixton Male Choir sang very sweetly. Pastor John Waite aims to infuse the evangelistic spirit more and more into the work.

A very large gathering assembled at the opening of Havelock Hall, E.C., the new headquarters of the Baptist Deaconesses' Mission. The building itself is admirably adapted to the work of the Mission. It will seat between three and four hundred people, and is lofty, airy, and light. Dr. Lush remarked that it was "big enough to satisfy even the Sisters," and as it is four times as large as the hall in Cross Street, where the Mission has hitherto been carried on, it will be seen that there is abundant room for the development of the work. Mr. George White, M.P., opened the building, and among other speakers were Revs. John Bradford and William Brock, and Sister Constance.

Congregational.

Rev. H. J. Shirley, chairman of the Congregational Union of British Guiana, has sailed on his return to the colony. During his six months' stay in this country his health has become thoroughly re-established.

The thirty-fifth anniversary of Queen's Park Congregational Church, Manchester, and the third of the ministry of the present pastor (Rev. C. W. Cliffe) has been held. Mr. Cliffe occupied the chair, and reviewed the work of the year, which has been one of steady progress.

In the manual of Grafton Square Church, Clapham, S.W., the pastor, Rev. E. W. Lewis, says: "The reports are good; the balance-sheets are good; the work is good; the tone is good; all is good. There has been a net increase in membership of fifty-two during 1902. The total amount raised for all purposes was £3,626, £499 being for the L.M.S."

A new church has been opened at Swanley, Kent, by Mr. George Spicer, chairman of the London Congregational Union. Rev. C. Silvester Horne preached in the afternoon, and a public meeting followed in the evening. It was announced that, with the amounts received during the afternoon, the entire cost of £2,500 was either received or promised, within £250.

Rev. G. H. Giddins has been appointed delegate of the Congregational Union of England and Wales to attend the conference of the Free Evangelical Churches of Bohemia, which will meet at Pilsen in May. The churches in Bohemia were mostly founded under the auspices of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and, in spite of the great difficulties of such work in Austria, are making good progress.

In his pastoral address prefacing the church manual, Rev. Llewellyn H. Parsons, of Finsbury Park Church, illustrates the difficulty caused by the ebb and flow of population. "Will it be believed," he writes, "that since my ministry began we have received 1,063 persons into fellowship, and in various ways have lost 818? We shall all rejoice in the fact that in spite of so serious a drain, the net gain has been 245." During the same period the church has raised £30,000 for the various efforts and organizations. Last year the total income was £4,135, including £635 for the extension. The present membership is 756. The church has three members in the mission field.

Methodist.

Mr. Robert Bird, of Cardiff, has consented to act as Connexional treasurer for the United Methodist Free Churches, in succession to the late Alderman W. H. Hart, of Birmingham.

The Wesleyan Sunday-school at North Road, N., has the distinction of having trained all its staff of officials. The superintendent, assistant-superintendent, treasurer, secretary, and librarian were all taken as little children to the school, and have maintained an unbroken connection with it. Out of a band of forty teachers, thirty-six were formerly scholars.

A circular letter signed by the President of the Wesleyan Conference has been sent to all ministers and Sunday-school authorities asking them to devote a Sunday in the early spring, preferably April 19, to special effort on behalf of the better observance of the Sabbath. The letter points out that powerful forces are at work tending to lower the sanctity of the Lord's Day and to change it into a day of mere amusement.

Presbyterian.

Mr. Robert Davies, of Menai Bridge, has contributed £150,000 to the Missionary Society of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Connexion, to enable it to extend its operations in India to Assam.

Society of Friends.

The returns of the London and Middlesex quarterly meeting of the Society of Friends for the past year will show a membership of 2,849 (a clear gain of thirty-nine), or about one-sixth of the total membership in the English yearly meeting. Including, however, the affiliated bodies, schools, and missions, it is estimated that there are nearly 10,000 adherents of the Friends in London.

Fallen Asleep.

Aged 32, Rev. W. E. LLOYD, pastor of the Welsh Independent Church, New Tredegar, Mon. Aged 23, Mr. W. H. GABRIEL, organist of the Baptist Church, Tredegarville, Cardiff, suddenly, from the rupture of a blood-vessel in the brain. St. John's Presbyterian Church, Forest Hill, has suffered a severe loss by the death of Colonel De SALIS, superintendent of the Mission Sunday School.—At Small Heath, Birmingham, EMMA LOUISA HOWE, late of Lee, S.E., for many years a bright worker for the Lord.—The Baptist Church at Old Brentford, W., has sustained a severe loss in the home-call of Mr. J. J. TROMOW, deacon, on March 13, aged forty-eight. He will be greatly missed in the church and school, for both of which he was hon. secretary; indeed, the denomination generally is the poorer by the removal of one who was so bright and earnest a Christian.

The Tramps' Mission.—There are, it appears, in England and Wales, 650 unions, 510 of which have been furnished with libraries through the agency of the Tramp Mission. During the year thirty-one unions were supplied with Bibles, wall text cards, and Gospel story books, for the exclusive use of casuals, and over 21,323 Bibles, Testaments, and Gospels have been gratefully received by vagrants. Many are the testimonies which come from chaplains. "Your library is much valued by the tramps. Almost all of them read the books, and they make the Sunday, which used to be spent in complete idleness, much more pleasant." "Your kind gift was not only gratefully received and much appreciated, but I believe it has been influential in promoting the general spiritual well-being of those who have read the books. Seed has been sown, and I feel that in God's time it will spring up and bring forth fruit." The secretary of the Mission is Miss S. E. Barnett, 10, Albert Place, Pittville Circus, Cheltenham.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

 Messrs. Morgan & Scott receive, acknowledge in The Christian, and transmit, donations sent to them in aid of any accredited Societies and Missions. To avoid misapprehension, it is added that no charge of any kind is ever made on such donations.

"Twenty Years a Drunkard." Those who are tempted to despond over the cases of apparently "hopeless drunkards," will derive encouragement and cheer from a letter received in Glasgow by Dr. Torrey, extracts from which we give on page 20. The endeavours of man, whether in himself, by Parliament, or by patent cures, do not accomplish much in bad cases such as this; but when God steps in the scene is changed. "Thou hast destroyed thyself; but in Me is thy help." Those who know of despairing victims would do well to bring this case under their notice.

The Real Publican. The Premier's pathetic picture of the publican, as heavily burdened with the pressing anxiety of his "interest in the question of sobriety," is scarcely supported by incidental paragraphs in the papers during the past few days. In one, dealing with the grateful reduction of licences in a western cathedral city, the other side of the drink-shop keepers' interest is shown; for the writer, apparently without the Prime Minister's imaginative faculty, says:—

Twelve licences were refused; one was voluntarily conceded. The reasons for refusal were, upon the sworn evidence of the police—(a) houses the resort of soldiers, sailors, and young girls fifteen to twenty years of age; (b) resorts of thieves and immoral characters; (c) houses used as common lodging-houses.

Upon a recent holiday in Dublin, 425 out of 918 licensed houses were voluntarily closed, with the result that on the following day the police cases fell to nearly one half. A few days ago the London County Council voted £97,210 as the first instalment of £569,500, the cost of another new lunatic asylum, there being already an army of 2,000 persons waiting to enter it when it has been built. And drink is responsible for most of this insanity.

The Return to the Cross. There are many signs of a flowing of the tide, in places where an ebb had been remarked, towards the preaching of the central verities of the Evangelical Faith. We have noticed with much pleasure some recent utterances, which, coming from those who have spoken them, are in the highest degree significant. One writer goes to the heart of the matter when he says:—

This (Evangelical) Faith has been so much more than a theology. Its inmost reality has been that of a spiritual dynamic of the most distinctive and extraordinary kind. What really we have to judge here is a religious force which has created in the soul such emotions and affections, stirred such energies and wrought such moral reclamations, as are not to be found elsewhere in history.

These moral marvels are the product alone of the doctrine and power of the Cross of Christ, and many who have been given to sneering at the old-fashioned Gospel have come by experience to see that their new "Gospel" lacks dynamic force. The ways back to the Cross are many, and one among them is that which comes through the failure of any moral scheme that omits the Cross of Christ.

Wesley and his Preaching. The interesting article by Rev. J. P. Gledstone (see p. 12) contains a useful lesson for modern times. Now, as in Wesley's day, a good deal of preaching does but scratch the surface instead of ploughing deep. The work of the Apostle of Methodism had that highest testimony to its effectiveness, namely, Result. It is a chapter that every preacher to-day might profitably study.

Faith, Fixed and Progressive. In the course of a fine address at the London Methodist Missionary Convention a few days ago, Rev. F. W. Macdonald showed how the equilibrium should be maintained between a fixed and a progressive faith—for ours is both. The foundation is fixed. We must hold with stern tenacity to that faith "once for all (R.V.) delivered to the saints." No alleged "progression" can be accepted which surrenders the Holy Trinity, the Incarnation, Redemption, the Resurrection, and the work of the Holy Spirit, with all that is involved in these. Yet there is a veritable progression in faith; but this progress is the unfolding of what is, and the adaptation of the one life and faith to ever-changing conditions and modes of thought. The true dimensions of great truths can only be fully revealed in the conditions of a prepared Church. This equilibrium needs emphasizing to-day, when so many are going out into the wilderness to see new prophets, and accepting every contradiction of the old truth as a "progression." A true progressive faith has at every stage a vital connection with the root from which it sprang, and that root is fixed for ever.

Missionary Passion. At another meeting in connection with the same Convention, Rev. Dr. Banks, President of the Wesleyan Conference, made a noble plea for a greater "forward movement" in foreign lands. He urged that it has been delayed too long, and that, especially in India, missions should be undertaken on a larger scale, and with a much more complete equipment. Certainly, that is the right way in which to regard missions. There is a tendency to base faith in missionary work upon reports of results rather than upon the Gospel, the real basis of missionary interest. As a powerful thinker, Rev. Principal Forsyth has said:—

For missionary methods you must know the field, that is the affair of the missionary statesman. But for missionary passion you must know the Gospel, and know it in the Spirit. And you must prize it so that you must give it away; you must not despise it so much that you keep it to yourself. The missionary passion is proportionate to the Evangelical faith, and what it has done for our own souls.

Unhappily the Churches are as yet far from perfectly alive to the imperative call of missions. They must give much more generously, if advance is to become actual.

The Actual in India. With the title of Things as They Are, Miss Amy Wilson-Carmichael has written a remarkable book on mission work in Southern India. In a preface, Mr. Eugene Stock says: "I do not think the realities of Hindu life have ever been portrayed with greater vividness than in this book; and I know that the authoress's accuracy can be fully relied upon." Illustrated by many collotype plates, reproducing photographs specially taken, this work throws a lurid light upon the life and experiences of the women and children of India at the present time. Publication is announced for April 21. (6s. Morgan & Scott.)

The Time for Arbitration. We cannot but deplore the failure of the latest negotiations between Lord Penrhyn and his men at Bethesda, in spite of the efforts made by the Lord Chief Justice and Sir Edward Clarke to effect a settlement. In New Zealand there have been virtually no labour disputes or strikes since the passing of the Arbitration Act. This is what we need over here. The repetition of labour disputes and strikes, such as we have been accustomed to, must eventually work serious havoc in the country, both industrially and morally. In cases like Bethesda, arbitration should be compulsory.

Rome and the Bible. For some time past, Monsignor Vaughan has been writing in the columns of the Catholic Times a series of articles upon the Holy Scriptures. When he has dealt with the inerrancy of the Bible, he has been upon ground common to all of us, and his defence of the truth of the Holy Word has shown ability. But when he comes to the real point at issue between Evangelicalism and Rome, as to the open reading of the Bible by all, he begs the question. In the last article, for example, he starts out by saying that "the Catholic Church is careful that all her children should entertain the highest veneration for the Bible," in proof of which he quotes the Missal, which contains a great deal of Scripture from the Vulgate, the Catholic ceremonies of "veneration" for the Bible, and the studies of the priests.

"Pearls before Swine!" But the Monsignor has not yet refuted the charge that Rome either withholds the Bible from the common people, or imposes such restrictions upon the reading of it as to make free reading abortive. Indeed, he regards the Bible Society as:

A machine indeed, but certainly not of God's designing, and useful chiefly in bringing the sacred text into derision, and Christianity into disfavour.

Bible distribution "among people utterly unacquainted with the elements of Christianity" is, therefore, he adds, "a veritable casting of pearls before swine." And the moral of all this, and more, is that people must "turn to the true and Divinely constituted custodian of the Book, the Catholic Church, and see with what reverence and respect she has ever treated it"!

Scripture or Tradition. Our Lord charged the religious leaders of His day that through their tradition they had "made the commandment of God of none effect." And it is through tradition that the Word is rendered nugatory to-day. The Missal to which Monsignor Vaughan appeals, certainly does contain much of the Word of God, but its truth is obscured by Romish error. The Holy Scriptures, and they alone, apart from all admixture, can make men wise unto salvation; and if men, whether "Catholic" or "non-Catholic," would commence to search the Scriptures, as did the men of Berœa, we should soon see pass away from us, superstition on the one hand, and rationalism and indifference on the other. Men need to read the Word and meditate upon it, and the soul must be submitted to its full effect.

The Glorious Reformation. We commend any effort to instruct the people in the truths of the Gospel, and to inform them of the heroism of our forefathers in fighting the battles of liberty and faith. Once again Mr. W. Stanley Martin is in the field with literature of this timely order. In collaboration with Augusta Cook, he has prepared for publication, in serial form (fortnightly parts, sevenpence net), The Story of the Light That Never Went Out. It is, of course, the Light of the Gospel, and the pages rehearse the deeds of apostles, martyrs, reformers, and evangelists, in our own and other lands, with an abundance of illustrations and reproductions of scenes in the history of Protestantism. (Morgan & Scott.)

France and the Monks. There can be no mistaking the determination of the French Chamber, now that they have commenced their work of cleansing, to deal thoroughly with the Religious Orders. Both the teaching and the preaching monks have been refused authorization, and already the prior of the Dominican Order in Paris has announced his intention, on behalf of his Order, to quit the country. All this is but a question of sowing and reaping. The monks have been political meddlers, and now the country has turned upon them. But what of the religious aspect of the question? Surely the country is better for the cessation of teaching which of late years has resulted in the creation of some revolting superstitions, such as the "Cult of St. Antony" and the "Cult of the Sacred Heart"! If French Protestants can only read aright the signs of the times, they will accept the present situation as the call of God to a revival of Evangelical preaching and home missionary enterprise. Unfortunately, we may assume that our own country will suffer further invasion from these very "undesirable aliens."

Convent Inspection. The judicial decision in regard to the accusations against the Nuns of Nancy, and the closing of the convent by the French Government, appear to have suggested to the Roman community that, after all, conventual inspection of some sort or other is not undesirable in the face of these frequently occurring scandals. The Catholic Times, which hitherto has been somewhat reticent in the affair, says that "the harm that is being done by superiors and reverend mothers of philanthropic or conventual establishments who fail in their duties to those under their charge," has been felt deeply, and it suggests that a priest and two lay people might be appointed "to secure the perfection of all arrangements." In England the bishops are free: "no bishop in these islands would tolerate an abuse—if he knew of it. But every bishop cannot know everything or be everywhere." So our contemporary comes round to regard inspection from the outside as "a valuable safeguard established in the interests of the institutions themselves." This sounds well. We shall believe it when we see it!

The French Clerical Awakening. The awakening amongst French priests, which has resulted already in many of them entirely quitting the Church of Rome, has another side to it, which, if not so striking in its visible results for the moment, nevertheless holds the promise of a deep and widespread Evangelical revival. M. Bourrier, the editor of Le Chrêtien Français, who has recently been lecturing in Switzerland on behalf of the revolted priests, declared that an exceedingly large number of those who still remain in the ranks of the Roman Catholic clergy are Evangelical in heart, and preach Evangelically to their flocks. Two thousand priests of this order, said M. Bourrier, are regular subscribers to his journal. This is good news. A movement of this kind holds within itself tremendous possibilities. It may be that it is the work of God's providence to prepare France silently and secretly, by means of the priests within the Roman Church, for the work of complete emancipation. France is passing through the throes of a new birth. The old religious system is being broken up by politicians. The only hope for the future is an Evangelical revival.

The Sin of Suicide. We are very sorry to notice the tendency of some newspapers to make of suicide a sort of ethical act. The sad suicide in Paris last week has been referred to as a brave thing, and as a voluntary expiation for sin alleged to have been committed. But suicide can expiate nothing, for self-murder is itself a sin. There has been, for some few years past, a kind of glorification of suicide on the part of certain "reformers." This will not help to make life appear more solemn and sacred. We do not need to make the way out of trouble and the consequences of sin easy by a false representation of life; we need rather to deepen the thought of life's solemnity, and to emphasize the truth "after death the judgment."

Dorcas. Much has been written lately, and, unhappily, not without grave cause, in regard to the low morality of a large section of "society," a section of which it may be said that it knows not God. It is well, however, to bear in mind that in the higher grades there are numbers of noble exceptions, who, while in the world, are yet not of it. Mrs. Fenwick Miller has recently referred to the large numbers of "ladies' charities," and to the amount of good and charitable work done by members of "the upper classes" in perfect quietness, only their own intimates and those benefited being aware of it. She says, after a reference to the late Duchess of Teck's cottage home, maintained at her own expense:—

> A marchioness known to me has for over twenty years past kept always about a dozen poor boys in the cottages on her estates, taking them, orphaned or deserted, from the London slums, educating them, putting them out in life according to their abilities, and receiving other tiny ones in, as the elder ones are got off-hand. I could describe several other similar enterprises within my private knowledge; and sometimes I wish that these truly noble "great ladies" did not in their scorn of popular applause hide their light under a bushel, but let it shine so as to incite their sisters in their own rank to emulation.

Such secret alms, however, are not unseen of Him who rewards every man's work.

Helps to Revival.

By the Late Rev. JOSEPH COOK, LL.D.

In these days, when so many are deeply interested in the great question of revivals and conversions, it seems to me that the following abstract of an original, bold, and suggestive paper of the late Joseph Cook—called by some the American Thomas Aquinas—might be a valuable contribution to the literature of the subject, and may in the columns of The Christian reach many who would never see it where it was originally published, in the Homiletic Review. A. T. Pierson.

ONLY the full truth as to the peril of sin makes Felix tremble. "Knowing the terror of the Lord, we persuade men," an apostle said, in the full tide of his crowded and victorious career, the effects of which are yet passing us in mighty billows, increasing in height and majesty from century to century. Not knowing the "terror of the Lord," some of us do not persuade men. I think there is reason for making this confession. There has been in places an apostasy on the topic of the Deity of our Lord. There has been in certain circles an apostasy on the topic of future retribution. A vague, fanciful Christology and a shilly-shally eschatology are two of the worst mischiefs in the churches at the present hour on both sides of the Atlantic.

SIX PROPOSITIONS.

Here are propositions which philosophy ought to value, since every one of them stands on strictly self-evident truth or on notorious human experience:—

(1) Character, under the irreversible laws of habit, tends to a final permanence. (2) In the very nature of things a final permanence can come but once. (3) Without deliverance from the love of sin and the guilt of it, no soul can be at peace in God's presence, in life or death or beyond death. (4) The preaching, therefore, of the doctrine of the new-birth and of the Atonement, as exhibiting the methods by which we are to be delivered from the love of sin and the guilt of it, is of absolute importance to all responsible human beings. (5) With or without a knowledge of the historic Gospel, men all over the world are dropping into final permanence of moral character. Hence the need of missions at home and abroad. (6) The Scriptures teach that we are to be judged by the deeds done in the body, and they proclaim nothing with more clearness and force than that it is never safe for any man to die in his sins.

THE AXIS OF REVIVALS.

Only a full view of the Cross can make it no cross to bear the Cross. The axis of revivals is the central text of Scripture: "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." In a revival in which it was my fortune, when fifteen years of age, to unite with the church at Keesville, N.Y., it was a sermon on the text, "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service," that caused me to make up my mind to try and perform my duty as a whole. The emphasis was on the words "mercies" and "reasonable." Look on the Cross, and it will become no cross to bear the Cross. This profound exhortation of the evangelical preacher was justified by my own experience. Bunyan's Pilgrim, in the early stages of his journey, had no experiences which were not in substance mine also.

What is the best method of warming a cold church? What are the most efficient helps to revival? Mr. Moody was asked this question once in a meeting of a great company of eager church workers in Chicago. His reply was:—

"BUILD A BIG FIRE IN THE PULPIT!"

(I.) Build a big fire in the pulpit, and use for it not merely oak and hickory, but spiritual anthracite. Let us have the absolutely undeniable self-evident truths of Scripture, that exhibit the necessity of man's deliverance from the love of sin and guilt of sin, piled up and set ablaze. We are too individualistic in our time. You do not fire coal, one lump in one place and another in another. We are opposed to systematic theology, indeed; we present religious truth piece-meal, firing one log here and another log yonder. It is the putting of sticks together that makes a hot blaze. I am not opposed to systematic theology, if it is Biblical, if it is really scientific. Clear ideas at any cost—that is my first theological motto. Obedience the organ of spiritual knowledge—that is the second. Look on the Cross and it will become no cross to bear the Cross, is the third. And the last is, Work for what works well, and for nothing else.

My most solemn conviction is, that the Bible, taken as a whole, and interpreting itself by itself, is literally infallible as a guide to salvation. I believe that parts of the Bible were absolutely dictated by the Holy Spirit. I believe that the Holy Spirit now and then speaks in the very words which are best adapted to men. I never speak of the "inspiration" of orators: I speak of their illumination. You may speak of a kind of secondary inspiration which comes to men sometimes in their loftiest moods, but let us remember that our inspiration is not infallible; it does not secure us from error in regard to spiritual things. From beginning to end the Scriptures teach one great system of truth. They are palpably above human levels in all their loftiest summits. I believe that inspiration, by which I mean that winnowing of the Holy Bible which has made it a safe guide in religious things, pervades every leaf of it. Let us have a doctrine of inspiration that will make us reverent before the Holy Word as our Lord was, and go before our people with it, and there will be a fire behind the pulpit that cannot soon be made to waver in winds of doctrine.

(II.) Let hymns become singing flames. The service of song was never so well employed in evangelistic effort as by Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, and never so successfully. When the evangelist heard Mr. Sankey sing for the first time, he felt that what he had long wanted was supplied.

NO FALSE RELIGION HAS A HYMNAL.

Confucianism has none, Buddhism none, Brahminism none, Mohammedanism next to none, infidelity none, agnosticism none. Only Christianity, or Judaism, from which so many religious truths have come to us, has had a temple service of song. It is very noticeable that a love of the loftier kinds of song pervades communities in proportion to their moral soundness and enlightenment. Often song for amusement is a flame not lighted from on high. When I say that hymns should be singing flames, I mean that they should be lighted from above and ascend audibly to heaven. If you have no soul, do not try to sing a solo. If you have no religion, do not sing in a revival. If you have no Christianity, do not enter the choir.

(III.) Set the safest pews ablaze—pews which contain people who are best adapted to become church workers. The inquiry-room is a portion of the regular equipment of a revival in modern times. (IV.) Use the Sunday-school seats as kindling wood. There is a demand for more instruction of the young in definite statements of religious truth. I confess myself in a very reverent mood toward certain creedal statements adapted to the wants of the young. (V.) Let family altars flame. Ah, what different days we had when in every house there was an altar! (VI.) Carry a lighted torch regularly from house to house and into all dark corners. The world, the flesh, and the devil will not soon disappear from history. Go through the streets and into the saloons and other places of temptation, and come back after philanthropic effort, and organize new schemes for the assistance of those for whom no man seems to care. (VII.) Build bonfires in union meetings of the churches, and employ tested and approved evangelists as bonfire men. Evangelists are an order of religious teachers appointed in Scripture to their special service, which is chiefly to address the will and secure from the religiously irresolute decision for God as Saviour and Lord. (VIII.) Lastly, all these flames must be lighted from above, and the best place for lighting a sacred flame is in the closet of secret prayer.

The Oracles of God.

DR. PIERSON ON THE MARKS OF AUTHORSHIP.

CONTINUING his course of lectures at Exeter Hall on "The Oracles of God," Rev. Dr. Pierson dealt last Friday with the Divine origin of the Scriptures as shown by the fact that the thoughts contained in them are superhuman—that the ways, methods, and plans of working suggested are not only unlike those of men, but are opposite and contradictory to the dictates of human wisdom. The Bible is composed of letters, words, sentences, like any other book; but there is an invisible current of life that pervades this Book, and makes it the living oracles of God. He had studied this Bible for many years, and it seemed to him, a hundred times more than even ten years ago, that the impress of God is on it; and that there is no other book to be compared with it for the intellectual order of ideas contained in it.

GOD'S DEFINITION OF HIMSELF.

Take the idea of infinity. If any word seems to express the natural attributes of God, infinity does so. There is no sense in which we can bound God; and along with this He is immutable, for change implies the possibility of degeneration or improvement. When the Assembly of Divines at Westminster were compiling the Shorter Catechism, and they wanted to give a definition of God, Dr. Gillespie was asked to lead the company in prayer. He began with the words: "O God, Thou art a Spirit, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable, in Thy being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth;" and the Assembly at once felt that God had given them His own definition of Himself. Where did Gillespie get his conception? Not from any heathen writings, but from a long and reverent and prayerful study of the Word of God.

As an illustration of the stupendous in the earth, Dr. Pierson cited the Grand Cañon of Colorado—an immense chasm twelve miles in width, with walls 6,000 feet high, and 600 miles long; going beyond the earth, Sirius is the nearest of the fixed stars, yet light takes six months to travel from it to us; while there are stars known to the astronomers whose light takes forty years to reach the earth. Even these do not suggest God's infinity, but the God who made them is the God who gave this Book. It is written as if He gave it, for He is constantly referring to His own infinity.

"As the heavens are higher than the earth"—do you know how high they are above the earth? Not the heavens where the clouds float; not the heavens where the stars are seen; but the heights which no telescope can penetrate, even beyond the power of the photographic lens to catch the image. How high are they? Go as far as you may, there is a height beyond. That is the way God talks in the Bible; no one else knows enough to talk in that way.

"As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions from us"—the east is direction, not distance. As far as you go east, there is an east beyond you. "From everlasting"—an eternity that had no beginning—"to everlasting"—an eternity that has no end; that is the way in which God measures His love. You will find the four dimensions in Eph. iii. 18: "the breadth," why is that first? Because the most important question is whether the love of God reaches to me. "The breadth"—which is infinite mercy; "the length"—which is eternity; "the depth"—going down to hell to pluck me out; "the height"—going up to the throne of God to carry me there.

Take the conception of God as unfolded in Scripture. It is very remarkable that He is represented as Trinity, and Trinity is not three Gods, not an association of three Gods in one. Trinity is three persons, but one God. You cannot understand it, because that is part of the infinity; but that is the teaching of the Bible so far as it is possible for me to understand or apprehend it.

Notice the three definitions God gives of Himself. "Life" is the sum of all being, "Light" stands for intellectual excellence, "Love" for moral excellence—and everything else is included in these. "I am that I am." "Before Abraham was I am." God is an endless present.

Other lines along which the difference between God's thoughts and men's was pointed out were the revelation of the three-fold nature of man—body, soul, and spirit; greatness, as illustrated in the washing of the disciples' feet; and the Incarnation at the bottom, not the top, of the social scale.

Methods of Bible Study.

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, B.D.*

FOR the devotional and spiritual use of the Word of God there are three rules, and these three, though simple, are all-inclusive.

(I.) We must search (John v. 39). God's thoughts are never revealed to listless readers, but only to eager searchers. The Bible is like a mine, and its jewels are not to be picked up on the road-side. It affords opportunity for thought, and requires its exercise. Its words, phrases, and sentences are full of meaning and power. Like our Lord's parables, the Bible at once conceals and reveals its message. Strenuous thought is imperative if we would obtain from the Word the blessing it contains. We must ponder its statements, dwell on its meaning, grasp its message, and dwell lovingly and earnestly on its revelation of God in Christ. Nothing in it is without some purpose, and what this is the Lord will reveal in response to His servants' faithful search.

(II.) We must meditate (Josh. i. 8; Psa. i. 2). "Meditation" comes from a word meaning "to attend," and this is essentially the idea of Bible meditation. It is reading with attention. More than this, it is reading with intention. It is concerned at each point with personal application. And it must be our own thought, our own musing, our own application. Look well at this text, made as clear as the printer's art can emphasize its teaching: "MY meditation of HIM" (Psa. civ. 34). The great essential point is first-hand meditation on God's Word, as the secret of Christian living.

(III.) We must compare (1 Cor. ii. 13). God's Word is like a kaleidoscope with many combinations. In addition to our search and meditation of one particular passage, we must compare passages together, in order to arrive at the full meaning of the Word which has been given to us in "many parts and many manners." (Heb. i. 1). The various aspects of truth are thus seen in their entirety and proportion, and our spiritual life becomes fully informed and completely equipped. There are so many topics or subjects scattered throughout God's Word that only as we collect and compare them can we appreciate the fulness and glory of God's revelation.

Circle of Prayer.—The late secretaries of the "World-wide Circle of Prayer," established in 1895, Revs. J. O. West and T. E. Titmus, and Mr. John Blackham, write to say that the circle has been merged into "The Circle of Prayer for World-wide Revival," formed last year at Keswick. Cards of membership may be obtained free of cost from the Hon. Secs., Circle of Prayer, 10, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.—A largely attended drawing-room meeting was held at St. Aubyn's, Wimbledon, last week, when Mr. Frank Bullen pleaded eloquently on the sailors' behalf. He knew from personal experience how terribly difficult it was for a sailor to lead a decent, much more a Christian, life in the midst of a godless crew in a ship's forecastle. Both at sea and on shore everything seemed against the sailor. He had many enemies, but few friends. Societies like this, which sought to befriend the sailor deserved and should receive more generous support. He commended this society for the good work it was doing, and for the economical way in which it was conducted. Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Maynard told of what they had seen of this work, and of many sailors met with who were the converts of the Mission. Rev. D. C. Macgregor and Rev. G. J. Hill also addressed the meeting.

The Wesley Bicentenary.—2.

By Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE,
Author of "George Whitefield, Field-Preacher."

IF the early preaching of Wesley and his assistants had for its chief burden, or at any rate for its characteristic and distinguishing note, the knowledge of the forgiveness of sins—if there was a ring of joy and victory in it uncommon in sermons of that age—we are anxious to know what was its attitude towards the Law of God and towards morality generally. Was the Law ignored? Were the claims of ordinary morals made light of? Did these men say, as some did then, and as some do now, that you have only to preach the Doctrines of Grace, and then, by a law of the spiritual life, all conduct is sure to come right? Did they see no need for training and educating the Christian conscience? Had they no word of reproof for sins which in their day were as common as they were remunerative? Did they keep back some of the counsel of God? Because the Societies they formed were voluntary, and might at any time fall to pieces if the members were annoyed or offended, did they preach to please?

By no means. How could you coerce men who had such an awful vision of the righteousness of God that they would hazard life itself rather than offend Him? What threat of curtailing funds would have any influence over men who could sleep on the floor, or in outhouses, and make a meal off blackberries gathered from the hedge-row? How could the man in gay clothing with a gold ring unduly influence evangelists whose one aim was to save their own souls and the souls of all who heard them?

WESLEY AND COMMON SINS.

One of the commonest forms of sin in many parts of the country was that of smuggling, and Wesley told the Society at Sunderland that "none can stay with us, unless he would part with all sin; particularly robbing the King, selling or buying smuggled goods; which he could no more suffer, than robbing on the highway." A few would not promise to refrain, and consequently they were expelled; about 250 were of a better mind.

To the Societies at Bristol he wrote a letter which speaks of the great joy he had had in their fellowship, and in observing that they studied to have a conscience void of offence toward God and man. To the expressions of his satisfaction he added some counsels, two of which were the following:—

For God's sake, for the honour of the Gospel, for your country's sake, and for the sake of your own souls, beware of bribery. Before you see me again, the trial will come at the general election for members of Parliament. On no account take money or money's worth. Keep yourselves pure. Give, not sell, your vote. Touch not the accursed thing, lest it bring a blast upon you and your household . . . Have nothing to do with stolen goods. Neither sell nor buy anything that has not paid the duty. No, not if you could have it at half-price. Defraud not the King, any more than your fellow-subject. Never think of being religious unless you are honest. What has a thief to do with religion? Herein mind not men, but the Word of God; and whatever others do, keep yourselves pure.

We see from these words that Wesley did not dissuade his converts from taking their part in public life as citizens, but urged them to play their part honestly as in the sight of God. And his saying, "Never think of being religious unless you are honest," might serve as an excellent motto in every Christian place of business, and aid in giving the people of God a reputation of the highest order in all commercial circles.

PRIDE AND WORLDLY SHOW.

Wesley had an intense dislike of all worldly show, and wrote in the following strain to a lady who kept a school which he thought was worthy to be called a Christian school:—

If I live to meet the Society in Bristol again, I shall kill or cure the fault of those unwise and unkind parents who make their children finer than themselves. I shall make their ears tingle. As to you, I advise you, first, to be a Bible Christian yourself, inwardly and outwardly. Be not a hair's breadth more conformable to the fashions of the world than you were when I saw you last. Then, train up your children in the self-same way. Say to them, with all mildness and firmness, "Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ." Whoever is pleased or displeased, keep to this; to Christian primitive simplicity. Perhaps you will at first lose some scholars thereby, but regard it not; God will provide you more.

One wonders whether Wesley would now make the ears of some parents tingle who "make their children finer than themselves." How would a modern congregation in a suburb of a large city strike him? What would he think of a Christian journal that gave articles partly descriptive of the dresses of fine ladies? Probably he would think that a column of reproofs would be more in harmony with the teaching of Peter and Paul, who, he believed, knew something of the mind of Christ. The modern love of liberty, not to say licence, would no doubt rebel against such language as Wesley's on the subject of dress; but the language is no stronger than that of the Apostles, who could see worldly troubles springing up in the primitive churches, and therefore raised an earnest warning against them. The question arises whether those portions of Scripture which relate to dress and to simplicity of life are regarded now as of any force, or only as examples of the original pastoral manner. At any rate, Wesley thoroughly believed in them, and fearlessly acted upon them among his own people. He sought to make Christians who should stand apart from the world, while they were still in the world so far as duty required them to be. "Come out, and be ye separate," had a definite and imperative meaning for him. If Wesley did not preach "applied Christianity," then, indeed, it never has been preached.

LAW AND GOSPEL.

But mark the relation in which he maintained Law and Gospel stood to each other. To one of his preachers he said:—

I doubt you are in a great deal more danger from honour than from dishonour. So it is with me. I always find there is more hazard in sailing upon smooth water. When the winds blow, and the seas rage, even the sleepers will rise and call upon God. . . . I see a danger you are in, which perhaps you do not see yourself. Is it not most pleasing to me, as well as to you, to be always preaching of the love of God? Without doubt so it is. But yet it would be utterly wrong and unscriptural to preach of nothing else. Let the Law always prepare the way for the Gospel. I scarce ever spoke more earnestly here of the love of God in Christ than I did last night; but it was after I had been tearing the unawakened in pieces. Go thou and do likewise. It is true the love of God in Christ alone feeds His children; but even they are to be guided as well as fed, yea, and often physicked too; and the bulk of our hearers must be purged before they are fed, else we only feed the disease. Beware of all honey. It is the best extreme; but it is an extreme.

In another letter, Wesley goes at great length into the relation of Law and Gospel, and gives some of his experience as to the effect of "preaching the Gospel" alone. He says:—

I think the right method of preaching is this. At our first beginning to preach at any place, after a general declaration of the love of God to sinners, and His willingness that they should be saved, to preach the Law in the strongest, the closest, the most searching manner possible . . . . I would not advise to preach the Law without the Gospel, any more than the Gospel without the Law. Undoubtedly both should be preached in their turns; yea, both at once, or both in one.

BALANCED PREACHING.

He affirms that it was by this balanced preaching, adopted by all the Methodist preachers at the beginning, such great and lasting results were secured. He states also that wherever the old way had been followed the same results continued to be produced; these societies were alive, strong, vigorous of soul, and increased in number. They had been taught from the beginning both Law and Gospel in this manner:—

God loves you; therefore love and obey Him. Christ died for you; therefore die to sin. Christ is risen; therefore rise in the image of God. Christ liveth evermore; therefore live to God, till you live with Him in glory.

On the other hand, Wesley saw in his time, as has been seen in other times, that preaching which made little or nothing of moral obligation led to deplorable results:—

The Gospel preachers, so called, corrupt their hearers, and they vitiate their taste. They feed them with sweetmeats, till the genuine wine of the Kingdom seems quite insipid to them. They give them cordial upon cordial, which makes them all life and spirit for the present; but, meantime, their appetite is destroyed, so that they can neither retain nor digest the pure milk of the Word.

Such a method he found had injured some of his preachers and greatly reduced some of his Societies. The members that were left were "cold, weary, heartless, and dead." It may, I think, be possible to trace a tendency, or more than a tendency, in Wesley to methodize religious experience, to say that every soul must pass through a certain set of emotions, and come to certain spiritual conclusions, and all in the same order. Thus he insists that repentance must precede faith; but surely C. H. Spurgeon was nearer the fact when he said that the tears of repentance and the joys of faith are blended, as the drops of the shower and the rays of the sun in the rainbow. His resolute methodizing achieved mighty results in his life and labours, but in the realm of the Spirit you know not the way of each man's thought and feeling. "The wind bloweth where it listeth."

CHRISTIAN PERFECTION.

Much discussion has taken place over Wesley's doctrine of perfection; it was a bone of contention between him and Whitefield; but, as is so often the case, it was the name rather than the thing that gave offence. He said:—Man in his present state can no more attain Adamite than angelic perfection. The perfection of which man is capable, while he dwells in a corruptible body, is the complying with that kind command, "My son, give Me thy heart." It is the loving the Lord his God "with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his mind." He regarded it as the peculiar doctrine committed to the trust of the Methodists; but surely every Christian Church taught it in the manner just defined.

In any case, it was well that he set before his followers a high standard for them to attain to. It was not without its perils, just as justification by faith and the knowledge of the forgiveness of sins had their perils, and had been abused. Some imagined that they had attained a state of perfect love, nor did Wesley cast doubts upon the reality of their professions, though he never made such professions himself; but the results did not correspond. There seems to have come a state of collapse and powerlessness. Nor can we wonder. What else could a great effort of the soul for this high prize end in? To be always growing entails no such exhaustion and disappointment; and Scripture urges us to grow, to run, to fight; but in this life we cannot say that we have attained, or are already perfect.

Wesley was naturally a keen controversialist, and had marvellous skill in attack and defence, but as he grew older his pleasure in it died away. He says:—

We may die without the knowledge of many truths, and yet be carried into Abraham's bosom; but if we die without love, what will knowledge avail? Just as much as it avails the devil and his angels! I will not quarrel with you about any opinion; only see that your heart be right towards God, that you know and love the Lord Jesus Christ, that you love your neighbour, that you walk as your Master walked; and I desire no more. I am sick of opinions; I am weary to bear them; my soul loathes this frothy food. Give me solid and substantial religion; give me an humble, gentle lover of God and man; a man full of mercy and good faith, without partiality, and without hypocrisy; a man laying himself out in the work of faith, the patience of hope, the labour of love.

London French Y.M.C.A.—The committee of the French Young Men's Christian Association are arranging for three large meetings in Exeter Hall on April 6, 7, and 8, to begin at 8 p.m. each day. Pasteur Frank Thomas, of Geneva, who as a preacher is well known among French-speaking populations, is to deliver addresses on the subject of "Individual and Social Duty." In a subsequent issue we hope to give some account of these meetings, and also to say something about the work of Pasteur Thomas in Geneva and elsewhere.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, April 5. Esther ix.

THE day which had been chosen, with such care, for the destruction of the Jewish people, dawned for their salvation. They stood on their defence against their foes, and their cause was specially favoured by the satraps and governors, who realised how greatly the balance of power had altered, since Mordecai the Jew had come to occupy the place of supreme authority.

The anti-Jewish feeling was so strong, that very decisive measures were needed for the preservation of the Hebrew nation; and the second day was needed to repel those who might have thought themselves obliged, by ties of blood, to avenge the deaths of their relatives in the first onslaught.

Thus the day of anticipated gloom and anguish became, for all after-time, a day of gladness and feasting, and sending portions to the sick and aged (vv. 21, 22.) The celebration of this feast is still maintained in the Jewish synagogues; the Book of Esther is read from a written roll, and in some quarters the name of Haman is greeted with loud execration. Thus God will turn all our dark days into good days and days of gladness. For in the dripping autumn the seeds of golden harvest are being sown; and we shall come again with rejoicing. Palm Sunday may witness the nearing advance of the King to His cross, but it also commemorates that greater entrance, which it made possible, into the city, not of earth but of eternity, when the everlasting doors lift up themselves to admit the King of Glory!

MONDAY, April 6. Esther x.

Mordecai's elevation to so lofty a position was of the greatest advantage to the Hebrew people scattered through the Orient. If the Books of Nehemiah and Ezra prove God's care on the returning exiles, this Book shows that He was not unmindful of the ten tribes, to whom Peter afterwards addressed his first Epistle, and who were scattered in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and to the gates of India (1 Peter i. 1, 2).

It is remarkable that in the present day so much of the power in politics, in the money market, and specially in the Press, is in the hands of the Jews. It is questionable if these Jewish magnates can be described in the beautiful words with which this book closes. But sometimes one wonders whether this is not all part of a great plan which God is slowly evolving, that when the hour strikes for the fulfilment of the prophecies, and the reinstatement of Israel in the land, all necessary agents may be ready to further His design.

Meanwhile, let the Mordecais among us, who humble themselves, and are "content to fill a little space," be of good cheer. The upright shall have dominion in the morning. He who has been faithful in little, shall be exalted to reign over much. The pendulum which has swung in this direction, shall swing in that. He that exalteth himself shall be abased, he that abaseth himself shall be exalted. "Humble yourselves, therefore, beneath the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time." And when your opportunity comes, seek the good of your people, and the peace of your seed.

TUESDAY, April 7. Job i.

It has been said by a competent authority that if a jury of persons, well instructed in literature, were impanelled to decide what is the greatest poem in the world's literature, whilst unanimity might be impossible, a large majority would give their verdict in favour of the Book of Job.

It deals with the mystery of suffering—a subject which exercises every age; and this profound theme is treated from the view-point of the old patriarchal life. The land of Uz lay somewhere on the northern side of Arabia. The description of Job's wealth unites the pastoral life with the settled life of agriculture. The mention of camels implies traffic and merchandize. The gate of the city mingles with the free life of the country. But there are no signs of that eager competition which misses the true meaning of life in a struggle for the means of livelihood. These old-world fathers had no taste for the scramble for land or gold. They were content to let the world go by, whilst they pondered life's deepest mysteries.

Yet they were not without human interests. For the young there were days of festivity; for the old, human friendship and intercourse; and for all, the calm beauty of nature which coloured all their speech.

In this first chapter, we have the character of the man who pleases God. One only has perfectly pleased Him (Matt. iii. 17); and the best of us must stand in Him (Eph. i. 6; Phil. iii. 9). Still, in our measure we ought to strive to please our Father in heaven, asking Him to work in us all the good pleasure of His will (1 Thess. iv. 1; Heb. xi. 5; xiii. 21). We must be single-hearted in our loyalty to God, upright in our dealings with man, must have a godly fear, and keep our garments unspotted.

So much as we are pleasing to God, we shall be hated by His adversary and ours. Satan will have his eye on us, and await his opportunity to hurt. But God's hedge is around us. Trouble will not prove that we are not pleasing to Him, but that He can trust us in the fire, as gold that will not perish. When we are stripped naked, we still have Himself. The gifts pass, but not the Giver.

WEDNESDAY, April 8. Job ii.

A second time the sons of God present themselves before Him, as though they were the satraps or consuls of different provinces in His empire, and had come to render an account of their vice-royalties. The adversary comes amongst them from his restless, ceaseless rounds (1 Peter v. 8). He is not omnipresent, but his energy as critic, tempter, and accuser is never relaxed (Zech. iii. 1, 2).

If we may use the expression, God again speaks of Job with as much pride as previously; nay, with more, because he has withstood so supreme a test. It had been proved, not only to men, but to the principalities and powers of the heavenly places, that he served God, not simply because he was hedged around, and made the object of special blessing, but because of what God was in Himself. Job's religion was not the fruit of a selfish minding the main chance, but was rooted and founded in sincerity and truth. "He still holdeth fast his integrity, though thou movedst me to destroy him without cause." Is it thus that God speaks of us, as we emerge through our tribulations? Do our trials only serve to set forth more clearly and resplendently the work of the Holy Spirit? Can God trust us with trial? Is He sure that we shall do Him credit, when passing through the fires, because He will be magnified in our humility and patience?

The adversary suggests a yet severer test, and is permitted to put it in exercise. "Touch his flesh, and he will renounce thee" (5 R.V.). But there is a limit put to his power, "Behold he is in thine hand; only spare his life." Notice that Satan must obtain permission, before he can sift us as wheat; and there is always a provision beyond which he cannot go (Luke xxii, 31, R.V.; 1 Cor. x, 13, R.V.). Whilst the operation is in process, our Father has his hand on our pulse, and will not let it be too much for our strength. Be of good cheer! You can bear your trial, else God had not sent it, or permitted it to come.

THURSDAY, April 9. Job iii.

In the closing paragraph of the previous chapter the three friends arrive. Teman was probably in Idumea; Shuah was a son of Abraham by Keturah (Gen. xxv. 2); Naamah was in Arabia. The group of spectators who had gathered round Job's mound, reverently make way for them to ascend it, and sit opposite the sufferer.

Job opened his mouth in a curse, but it it was not directed towards God. In what he says, there is no trace of the sin which Satan averred that he would be certain to commit. The Hebrew word is different from that translated, "Renounce God and die" (ii. 9, R.V.). He does not curse God, but the day of his birth, and asks that his stripped and suffering existence may be brought to as speedy an end as possible.

This beautiful opening elegy has two parts. The first (1-10) calls on every kind of darkness to blot out the day which was the beginning of so suffering a life. [The idea of verse 8 is that magicians professed themselves able to arouse the dragon or monster, which produced eclipses of the sun.] The second (11-26) inquires, since he was doomed to be born, why the luxury of instant death has been postponed. Even Sheol seemed preferable to such a life.

The sentences and metaphors of these speeches are very elaborate, and in this remind us of the In Memoriam. Job's words are profitable to all whose way is hid. Is the joy of life fled? Yet the duty of life remains. Continue in this, and the path will lead back into the light!

FRIDAY, April 10. Job iv.

Eliphaz opens the first round of speeches. It must be remembered that he and the two others were absolutely committed to the idea that special suffering was the result of special sin. Job's calamities, in the light of this thought, have, therefore, come as an awful revelation to himself and the others, proving, as they appeared to do, that he upon whom they all had been wont to look as a paragon of perfection, was one of the most sinful of men. Suffering comes according to a fixed principle; Job has only to reverse the sin of which he must have been guilty, and he will at once emerge again into the light. This trouble is not a caprice, but according to law; therefore the fear of God will be his confidence, and the sure anchor-ground of his hope.

12-21. He recounts a night-vision, which sets forth, with marvellous vividness, a visitation from the unseen world, emphasizes the infinite distance between God and man, and proves that mortal man cannot be just before His holy eyes. Of course, the suggestion is implied, that Job's sin had been so secret, that it had eluded all other eyes but God's, which see in the darkness.

Sometimes a photographer puts a man beside an immense object, like the colossal stones of Baalbec, with the object of showing their superlative greatness. Here (18) Eliphaz places an angel against God's purity, and finds even him foolish; but if an angel is found wanting, what of man! Ah, there is no hope for any of us, save in Jesus (Heb. ii. 16).

SATURDAY, April 11. Job v.

In this chapter Eliphaz closes his first speech. He had already suggested that Job's sufferings were the result of some secret sin. It could not in his judgment be otherwise. Affliction does not come forth out of the dust, neither doth trouble spring out of the ground. It is as much a law of nature, that calamity should follow sin, as for sparks to fly upward. However deeply foolish men strike root, they are ultimately destroyed. Job's downfall seemed to prove that he was at heart given up to folly (1-7). So Eliphaz urges him to turn to God in true repentance, and paints in the most beautiful colours the ideal life which will come to his restored spirit (8-27). It is interesting to remember that the Apostle Paul quotes v. 13, introducing it with the significant formula, It is written, 1 Cor. iii, 19.

If we are walking with God in purity and righteousness, we may put in our claim for the fulfilment of these blessed predictions. They are written for our instruction and encouragement. Art thou poor and needy? Thou shalt be saved from the hand of the mighty. Is thy flesh sore with chastisement? He who made sore will bind up. Art thou in trouble? He will deliver thee. Thou shalt not be afraid, because thou shalt be hid in the secret place of the Most High. Whilst thou art absent from thy home on God's business, He will see that nothing is missing; and to the end He will carry thee, till thou art safely garnered. Claim these things by a living faith!

Other Lands.

Among the Kabyles.—2.

WE should not have been surprised to hear that the classes at the Mission were being suspended during the Mohammedan feast; but no, they were kept as usual, and not at all badly attended.

Of the two, the men are the better listeners. Women have always been kept in a childish condition. They are not able to exercise much self-control. It was amusing to watch grey-haired women, how they would nod their heads, ejaculate, and, in their eagerness to ventilate their knowledge, interrupt the speaker. I understood better than ever before why Paul in his time should have written to Timothy: "I suffer not a woman to teach." At Djemâa rebuke is adapted to intelligence. Imagine, if you can, a wrinkled grannie being put into a corner for punishment. Yet this is the kind of discipline sometimes required!

The girls' class were less obtrusive. There, as in other places, it is the young that are the more yielding to the modeller of minds. Missionary influence is not so much seen in open converts, as in the changes of the natives' attitude towards those who confess and teach Christ.

FANATICISM IS SLOWLY DISAPPEARING.

and the Gospel is listened to in many cases with reverence. A French-speaking Kabyle convert, with whom I argued about the treatment of women, said: "It is more difficult than anyone can imagine to assert one's convictions in the face of rooted religious and social customs; but we are changing, and you may be sure that the second or third generation will be quite different from ours."

Travelling in Kabylia is comparatively easy, since the mountains have been intersected by numerous roads. The road winding between Tizi-Ouzon and Fort National, which is not much less than seventeen miles in length, was made in seventeen days by 30,000 French soldiers. One sunny day we went to the fort from Djemâa on mules. Charming though the scenery was, there was something lacking in its beauty. It reminded us of the hard expression of a handsome face which has no tears to shed. The Kabylian mountains lack the music of the Alps—no perennial waterfalls, babbling brooks, streamlets gliding softly through the grass. In the rainy season torrents rush down the hills, carrying destruction with them into the plains; after the rain the overflowing rivers recede within their vast banks, leaving a stony river-bed, through which a narrow, glistening water-ribbon winds its way. Fort National is called the "Eye of Kabylia," on account of its wide view over the surrounding mountains, the highest of which are the Djudjura ranges. In the beautiful evening glow that followed our arrival, and which can only be seen in an Oriental sky, the snow upon them formed silvery streaks on a mantle of bluish hue.

On the following day we decided to witness the preaching of the Gospel at a native village. At a crossing Miss Cox and Miss Smith halted to deliberate. A path to the right led to a village where they were known and sure of being welcome. To the left a path led to another village where the people might be hostile. Which was to be followed? We resolved to go to "where they might turn us out."

As soon as we entered the narrow thoroughfare, a group of children gathered around us, increasing as we went on—boys and girls, the latter with little burdens on their backs, some almost as big as themselves. The ladies invited them into a shed where men assemble in rainy weather, and at once began to speak to them about the Saviour of mankind. Peals of laughter soon subsided. An intelligent-looking boy, with clear features, and with an axe in his hand, seemed determined to keep order. He would knit his brows at a fidgetty neighbour, and kick the girls who pushed their way through while Miss Cox was singing to the tune, "Home, Sweet Home." When my husband began to speak to them they all listened most attentively to the interpretation. A woman peeped in, then another; men also stopped to listen, and at the close one of them said: "Have you a book for that which you teach?" Miss Cox gave him her French Marked Testament, which he accepted evidently pleased, saying: "I cannot read French, but my son goes to the French School; he will read it to me."

In returning we had to make our way through a crowd of women and children. Some asked to be sung to, others demanded that the ladies should witness to Mohammed. Little black hands, but not black by nature, touched our garments, our hands; bright black eyes scanned our faces. Our sisters stopped to say a few more words, when a tourist appeared, asking for a franc copper-change. Was it with the intention of drawing the crowd after him? If so, he must have felt disappointed, for very few children followed him.

In the eager open-air congregation now and then one shouted: "Witness to Mohammed! Witness to Mohammed!" A man cried out savagely: "It is not true that you Christians believe in God; you deny Him, you do." There was no time for argument, and we could only pray in our hearts that the words spoken might linger with them, and not return void to God.

During winter and spring, when regular class work keeps the ladies at Djemâa, visiting is limited to villages in the immediate neighbourhood. With the approach of the hot season, lengthened evangelistic tours to far-off villages are undertaken. It means a considerable amount of hard work and preparation, as tents, beds, food, &c., have to be taken on the journey.

Some tribes receive them readily, others are either hostile or indifferent. Times were when a village would decline to give them a shelter for the night; but all this is changing, and hearts are won in the most unexpected quarters.

Mme. Rolland told me that, on one of their tours, she and her husband came to a village high up in the mountains, inhabited by a robber band. Their chief had been guillotined in consequence of their crimes. The people refused to have anything to do with their visitors, and demanded that they should leave them at once. It seemed impossible to win their attention. All of a sudden a woman laid her hand upon Mr. Rolland, and exclaimed, "I know you; you are the kind man who gave me some medicine down in a village." From that moment the ear of the whole village was secured.

A Moslem Convert.

IN a recent letter Mr. Arthur V. Liley mentions some interesting incidents of the Gospel work at Tunis:—

"One intelligent young man, the son of a Moslem teacher, brought to me several discrepancies which had rather shaken his faith in the truth of the Koran; the truth of the Gospel was put before him, and he came several days following for Bible study. While kneeling down with him one evening he prayed, 'O Holy God, I am a sinner, forgive my sins, give me a clean heart, and guide me into the truth for Jesus Christ's sake.' It was a short and broken petition, but prayed in all sincerity. He has since then confessed to having received Christ Jesus as the only atoning sacrifice for sin. He has joined himself to the small company of believers, and takes part in the meeting by reverently removing his fez cap and praying with much simplicity and sincerity.

"He has also brought to our house a young relative, a lad about sixteen, who also seems much impressed by the Gospel message. Another regular visitor is a young fellow who first heard the truth at the Gospel meetings held during Ramadan, and I do not know any Arab who has shown a greater contrition for sin. A dear young brother is particularly proving the truth of Matt. x. 35. While seeking to avoid the opposition of his father, he comes to us for a little reading and prayer. His persistency gives us great hope."

Famine Stricken Villages.

AS an illustration of the famine conditions still prevailing in some parts of India, we give the following extract from a letter by Rev. Charles W. Posnett, of the Wesleyan Mission at Medak, in the Nizam's Dominions:—

"I am here in the midst of the outcast quarter of one of our largest churches, and I have just come in after an exhaustive search and hut-to-hut visitation, with the result that I state the simple, honest, but horrible fact, that there is not at this moment one pennyworth of grain or rice in the whole of these outcast village-houses all put together. The rains failed ten of the villages, and they are as if struck with paralysis. The wells are dried up. The great lake, a mile square and thirty feet deep, should be full of water, but I rode through the empty dried-up bed; and the muddy water before me in my glass is brought from a stagnant, well-nigh dried-up little pool, which is still left, and which provides a daily drink for the cattle; but in that there are only a few more days' supply.

"I have taken immediate measures with the mission well; but its bottom is of stone, and I fear to think how far down we will have to blast to get at a spring in such weather, and with a water famine.

"The whole of this side of the country is smitten in the same way. For the past week I have been visiting one village after another; everywhere I hear the same tale—no water. Where they can get a job, the women I found working for 3 dubs—i.e., a halfpenny—per day; whereas their usual pay is 12 dubs, or 2 annas. They add to what they can buy by making 'grass-seed soup.' I trod on a little heap of this seed in one house, and thought it was the house sweepings; but the people assured me that they were sifting out from the sand and dirt all the little seeds, with which they were going to make their evening meal. When I see the famished little children, I say we must save them. But how? I want four months' food for these ten villages, and, above all, for the women and children of these villages."

Gospel Calls.

FROM the Wesleyan Mission at Benares, Rev. Charles Phillips Cope tells of a cry for education:—"A few days ago some zemindars or landowners asked me to visit their village, about sixteen miles away. There is a population of about 2,000 souls, and no mission work is being done in or near the village. The headmen met us, and said they wanted us to open a school. The Government school had been closed for years, and as there was no one to teach their boys, they were growing up ignorant and wild. They offered us, rent free, a house of two rooms in the temple courtyard. Round about it live the priests and their followers.

"Two of the temple priests signed the paper, asking us to open the school and promising their help. The chief zemindar said, in answer to my question, that he would not object to mazhabi talim (Christian instruction) being given. The school-room is not six feet away from the chief temple! For about £30 we could build our own school and catechist's house. The farmers have promised to help us with gifts of tiles, bricks and bamboos. We often pray for 'open doors.' In and round Benares, 'where Satan's seat is,' we see but few. Here is one."

TRACTS WANTED.

Rev. T. E. F. Morton, of the Seamen's Mission, Keamari, Kurachi, says: "I need thousands of good Gospel tracts for gratuitous distribution among seamen and others. We have a population, in Karachi, of 100,000 inhabitants; and it is to be regretted we are without a Christian Press. The Government and other schools are turning out thousands of readers who are only too glad to receive religious literature. I give away, besides tracts in English, hundreds in Urdu and Gujerati, and some in Marathi, Tamil, and Sindhi."

Among Australian Aborigines

THE aborigines of Australia are a race about which very little is known, even by the white inhabitants of that land, the general idea being that they are not amenable to the higher influences of Christianity and civilization. The Home Secretary for Queensland has confessed that he held that view, previous to visiting the Yarrabah Mission Station, some four years before. That visit entirely changed his ideas, and has done much to bring about a better understanding of the needs and capabilities of a most interesting people.

This mission was founded in 1892 by Rev. J. B. Gribble, who had resigned his living some years previously to work for the aborigines in Southern Australia; but inability to place any effectual barrier between them and the evils which were working their destruction largely frustrated his efforts.

Yarrabah Mission Station is situated on the east coast of Queensland, eleven miles from the port of Cairns by sea, the nature of the mountain ranges behind rendering any other approach practically impossible. After three months' work, however, Mr. Gribble's health gave way, and he was compelled to go down to Sydney, where, after nine months' suffering, he died at the age of forty-six. But the work was faithfully taken up by his son, now Rev. E. R. Gribble, and head of the Mission. The first service at which natives were present was held on December 12, 1902, since which date morning and evening services have been held daily.

It is difficult to convey any adequate idea of this work to those who have not seen it; but the feature which seems to impress itself on the minds of visitors, perhaps more than any other, is how thoroughly happy all the people are. Next to leading the natives to a saving knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, it is the object of the Mission to get them to take an interest in themselves as a people. One cannot hope, by the few brief facts given here, to do more than perhaps create a desire for further knowledge of the work. Should any desire, it could be obtained from Rev. E. R. Gribble, Yarrabah Mission Station, North Queensland; or Rev. J. Dixon, Balmain, Sydney, N.S.W.

There are now about 170 aborigines clothed, fed, and taught by the Mission. This requires a somewhat large staff of workers, as at present everything requires a great deal of supervision.

In addition to religious and the usual secular subjects of education, the men are taught pastoral and agricultural work, building, &c.; and there are now sixty acres of land under cultivation, and about thirty buildings, which have been erected by the natives with the help of the missionaries. The men are regularly drilled, put through a course of physical training, and encouraged in all manly games (native and European). The girls are taught washing and general domestic work, and their physical training is not neglected. Singing, sacred and secular, is taught with some success, and a small male band of five instruments has recently been started. Two of the men hold the bishop's licence as lay readers of the Church of England service; and about twenty Christian marriages have been performed.

American Notes.

THE "Chicago Bar-tenders' and Saloon-keepers' Total Abstinence Society" has been formed, with a membership of sixteen. From figures presented at the initial meeting, it is said to have been shown that fully one-third of the bar-tenders and the owners of saloons in the Windy City are abstainers. In many of the large saloons the proprietors will not employ a man who drinks.

By a rule recently put into force, the freight trainmen of the Chicago and North-Western Railroad were to be relieved from work on Sundays. According to a published statement, the officials expect the stimulus of a day's rest to result in a greater amount of freight being handled in six days than has hitherto been dealt with in seven. It is also anticipated that the moral effect of a Sunday at home will raise the standard of efficiency.

Barotsiland Mission.

LETTERS, dated January 7 and 14, announce the arrival of King Lewanika at his capital, Lealuyi, Upper Zambesi, returning from his visit to England. The people assembled in great numbers were frantic with joy. All accounts received so far agree that his journey to Europe, so far from harming him, has drawn him closer to the missionaries. During his stay in this country he wrote constantly to M. Coillard, speaking appreciatively of the warm welcome he received from the friends of mission-work in England. "It is to you, my father, that I owe all this, or else who, outside of my country could have known me? Your friends have made me their friend, and they have now become my friends." One of his servants, writing to a friend, exclaimed, after their wonderful visit to Scotland: "To-day we have seen with our own eyes what true Christianity really is, and how far back we are, and in what dreadful, pitiful darkness."

The first Sunday after he reached Seskeke, the border town of his dominions, Lewanika attended church as usual; and after a sermon from Rev. Louis Jalla from the text, "Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's," the King intimated that he would like to address his people. He did so, basing his remarks upon the missionary's address, saying how greatly he had been struck by the religious life in England, and especially by the Sunday observance — finding large, full churches in every town, and seeing King Edward himself crowned in a church. He added, "If you rejoice to-day, it is in God you must rejoice, and not in me; for it is God who has kept me from all evil everywhere, and has brought me safely back to you."

This declaration from the lips of one who has never made any public profession of Christianity is, at any rate, very encouraging. The general work of the mission still goes steadily on; "professors" and "inquirers" declare themselves at each of the six stations, though still only in twos and threes. About Eastertime a fresh party of missionaries will, D.V., start for the field with M. Adolphe Jalla, whose visits to this country with his late beloved wife have made him the friend of many. His return alone, leaving his two motherless little daughters behind, is a very sad one, and the prayers of Christians are earnestly asked for him and all the other workers.

Many will hear with regret that the founder of the Mission, Rev. F. Coillard, is far from being in good health. His eyes especially have been troubling him very much for several months, and he will have to visit the Cape for expert advice in the course of the year. The hon. sec. of the Mission is Miss Mackintosh, 5, Adamson Road, South Hampstead.

Gambling in America.—Much interest has been aroused in the United States by the action of the police and city authorities at St. Louis. Much of the betting was done in "pool rooms," which, by means of tape machines, were supplied with the latest racing news by telegraph. By the combined efforts of the circuit attorney and the police president, this information has been stopped, and betting in the "pool rooms" has almost entirely ceased in consequence.

The Roman Catholic Church in Italy.—In a long and eulogistic review of Rev. Dr. Robertson's book with the above title (Morgan & Scott), The Mission World says: "In this book on Italy we can clearly trace the cause of the decadence of Roman Catholic countries. By ample evidence Dr. Robertson shows the effect of Romish rule in degrading the Italian people. . . . . Apart from the folly of the Ritualist party there is among many men of culture at present a deference shown to the Church of Rome of which she is utterly unworthy. Her influence over the nations which she retained after the Reformation by wars and bitter persecutions has only been destructive. But for the Revolution France would have been utterly ruined by the influence of the Papacy; by her action in consequence of this influence Spain has become but a tenth-rate power. Italy was extinguished altogether as a power till her liberty was gained after the revolution of 1848 and the war of 1859. All the Roman Catholic parts of Europe have been degraded except when saved by revolution.

An Interesting Conversion.

IT happened in this way:—I was in Shanghai in November last, for a needful rest; but there was a special desire in my heart to be of service, and by God's grace to win some soul for the Lord Jesus Christ whilst away from my station in Chefoo.

The words, "ask," — "seek," — "knock," sent me afresh to the mercy-seat; and soon the answer came. An invitation to go on H.M.S. Pique (then in Shanghai), and address the men, was the first answer which came. So I went on board with some members of the Sailors' Mission, and gave a simple message on "Broken Vows and Promises."

Many of our sailor boys are given to making promises under pressure of varied circumstances, but a very small thing will drive them from their purpose. Satan is ever assailing them, and when we remember the little world in which they live, it is not to be wondered at that so many fail to "go-ahead." Let us more than ever bring them to God in prayer.

During my short talk, I said how often a shower of boots had broken up a sailor's purpose to seek God in prayer, &c., and I wound up with a call to decide for God whilst it was called "to-day." The meeting over, we left for the shore in a native ferry boat. One man, at least, was troubled after our departure; he was one of the marines. That night light and joy streamed into his heart.

Later that evening, S. asked for special leave to go on shore, and soon he found himself at the mission house, to tell the lady worker there that during the meeting all the past had come up before him, that in my address he had been "hit hard," and that now he had given himself up as a penitent at Christ's feet. It was a great pleasure to hear this, but another fact or two came out, showing how the Spirit of God used the Word, and this was an added pleasure. One worker there that evening was an old friend of S., and once upon a time they were marines together in the home country. When this friend was converted, his bitterest persecutor was this man, S., who tried to drive him from his purpose by petty annoyances (shying boots, &c.), but he was unsuccessful.

Our season of testimony was used that night by the Holy Ghost to bring back the past and change the man S. from a persecutor into a follower of Christ. On the Lord's Day, at the service on shore, we had another bright case, and I believe both are doing well.

My aim in writing this is to cheer workers who give themselves and their spare time to such service. Do not think the work is lost; The Spirit breatheth where He willeth. Never forget the promise in 1 Cor. iii. 8, "Every man his own reward—his own labour."

Face to Face.

I shall see my blessed Master
Face to face,
In the glory that is coming,
Face to face.
Oh, my heart leaps out to meet Him,
I shall hear Him, I shall greet Him,
I shall see Him face to face.

When I greet my blessed Master,
Face to face,
And I commune in the glory,
Face to face.
I shall thank Him that He sought me,
That to His fair home He brought me
When I greet Him face to face.

How I love to think I'll see Him
Face to face,
And I know He'll commune with me
Face to face;
On the banks of that calm river,
With my Master walking ever
I shall gaze upon His face.

I am waiting for my Master
Day by day,
I am watching, I am praying
Day by day.
Tell me, is He coming nearer,
For the eastern sky seems clearer,
As I watch it day by day? E. V. K.

The Late Dean Howell.

ALIKE as a preacher, pastor, patriot, bard, and orator, the late Dean Howell of St. David's stood out prominently in the principality of Wales. As a platform speaker, he also enjoyed a high reputation. David Howell was a native of Pencoed, in the parish of Llangan, Glamorganshire, and was born in 1831. Llangan was the centre of the work of one of the most saintly and powerful of the Evangelical revivalists and preachers of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, well known as David Jones of Llangan, the rector of the parish. The face of Dean Howell reminds us of the pictures of the preachers of that great religious revival in Wales, and to many the Dean seemed to be one of the old Welsh divines who had come out of his picture frame. The Dean's temperament was singularly like what we read of the spiritual giants of those days.

Dean Howell was educated at Cowbridge, and was trained for the ministry at the Abergavenny Diocesan Institute. Though the son of a Calvinistic Methodist, who was a strict Puritan, he was brought up almost entirely under the influence of his grandmother, a strong churchwoman. As a young man he was led to Christ through the influence of the late Archdeacon Griffiths, of Neath, himself a great orator, and a notable Welshman. Discovering the unusual power of the young man, Archdeacon Griffiths encouraged him to think of the ministry. His first curacy was at Neath under the Archdeacon, and he was not there very long before he became marked out as a preacher. In 1859 the Church Pastoral Aid Society selected him for the post of Association Secretary for Wales, in which he spent four years of active service, and became known everywhere as a preacher of rare power. During the revival of 1859 and 1860, Mr. Howell was greatly used of God in Wales. In 1861 he was presented to the living of Pwllheli, where he did successful work for three years.

In 1864 the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester appointed him to St. John's, Cardiff, an onerous and very difficult post. Cardiff had been growing rapidly in importance as a port, and as a result there was a large increase of population. Church work had not increased in anything like proper proportion, and Mr. Howell soon realised the magnitude of the task before him. His intense sympathy and personal magnetism quickly won the confidence of the people, and induced them to further his efforts for the spiritual welfare of the parish. During the eleven years of his ministry in Cardiff, he collected and expended about £30,000 in parochial work; and when he left, it was amid universal expressions of regret, and signal testimonies of respect and regard. There were then no fewer than thirteen weekly services, instead of four when he began; and six Church day-schools with over seventeen hundred children in attendance, as against two with about two hundred scholars at the outset of his ministry. The Sunday-school was actually started in his time, and so grew as to number eighteen hundred scholars, varying in age from five to seventy years.

In 1875, Bishop Hughes of St. Asaph appointed him to the vicarage of Wrexham, where he brought into exercise all his great powers and ripe experience. It was here, perhaps, that he did the greatest and most important work of his life. He very soon made himself a power in the town and neighbourhood, and the fine old parish church, one of the seven wonders of Wales, was crowded with hearers. He greatly increased the living agencies—curates and other parish workers; new churches and mission rooms were opened; and both the religious and civil life of the town received a great impetus through his influence. He was greatly beloved, by Church people and Nonconformists alike, and was the commanding figure of the town and district. He was accustomed to meet his curates on Monday mornings and arrange the particular churches in which he and they were to preach on the following Sunday. About Friday or Saturday, in spite of his strong endeavours to keep it secret, people began to discover at which of the churches the vicar would preach, and often on hearing of this he would suddenly alter the arrangements, and send one of the curates to preach where he himself was expected to be. But even this was ineffective to prevent the crowds from continually flocking to hear him.

THE LATE DEAN HOWELL.

From Photograph by Mr. Stanley Hurst, Shrewsbury and Wrexham.

During his time at Wrexham, two of Canon Aitken's most successful missions were held there. The Dean had a profound admiration for Mr. Aitken's power as a mission preacher, and those who worked through those two missions will remember the full preparation made beforehand, and the wonderful spiritual blessings vouchsafed. Whilst Mr. Howell was at Wrexham, he was appointed Canon Residentiary of St. Asaph's Cathedral, and later on Archdeacon of Wrexham, both by his friend Bishop Hughes. In 1892 he was led to accept the country living of Gresford, near Wrexham, and just as he was leaving he suffered the irreparable loss of his beloved wife, whose judgment and devotion had been the one human mainstay of her husband's life. Those who have had the privilege of being guests in the home will never forget the charm and force of her personality.

In 1897, Archdeacon Howell was appointed by Lord Salisbury to the Deanery of St. David's, and there he spent the last few years of his life. It was a wonderful change from the busy haunts of his earlier ministries to the solitude of a little village of one thousand people, far removed from railways and the other elements of modern life. Even there he could not rest, but set himself to the task of continuing the restoration of the cathedral, and also from time to time coming out to help his brethren in different parts of the country. The appointment to St. David's was felt by his friends to put an end to any hope of his ever becoming a bishop. It seemed almost intolerable that a man of his gifts should be buried in a village seventeen miles from a railway station, preaching to a handful of people, when he might have been influencing a diocese, and indeed the whole of Wales. As one who so thoroughly understood Welsh Nonconformity he would, as a bishop, have rendered very important service.

As a preacher in Welsh he was "easily the first" of all, even in preaching Wales, while in English he was undoubtedly in the very first rank of speakers. No one who heard him during his Wrexham days, when he was at the very height of his power, will ever forget the deep impression he made. Seldom have sermons been characterized by such a combination of qualities of thought, wisdom, spirituality, eloquence, and that indefinable Welsh fire, which is called hwyl, which no mere Saxon can ever hope to possess or even understand! But it was not only as a preacher that he excelled, for he was one of the most diligent of pastors. Not often is the combination of preacher and pastor so unmistakably manifested in the same man. His unfailing sympathy, his ripe experience, fervent spirit, tenderness of heart, and personal charm of manner, made him an ideal pastor, and very many owe all that they are to the great blessing of his personal influence.

His strong belief in religious education led him to undertake huge responsibilities in the maintenance of voluntary schools, and both at Cardiff and Wrexham capacious school buildings are an abiding testimony to his efforts in this direction. He often stated, both publicly and privately, that in forty years' experience as a Church school manager, having to deal with all sorts and conditions of men, he never once met with a so-called religious difficulty. Surely an unconscious but very real testimony to the man's fairness, and the trust which he elicited from others!

In considering his character and work, it should ever be remembered that he occupied an almost unique position in relation to Nonconformity. He was the son of one Calvinistic Methodist deacon, the brother of another, his sister became the wife of Dr. Saunders, the well-known Calvinistic Methodist leader in South Wales; and yet he himself was from the first brought up a member of the Church of England. These associations with Nonconformity held him in good stead amid the storm of controversy, and enabled him to appreciate and sympathize with the position of Nonconformists as few ministers of the Church of England could. He did his best to maintain a good understanding between Church and Dissent, even at the expense of being misjudged and maligned by a type of churchmen who could not appreciate his spirit, and who could see nothing but "schism" in Welsh Nonconformity.

A convinced and uncompromising Evangelical Protestant, he was fond of distinguishing between convictions and sympathies; and more than once said to me: "My convictions are part of myself, and I never can alter them; but my sympathies are as broad as I can make them." Though a believer in the union of Church and State, he took no part in the Disestablishment controversy after 1875, and it is well known that he greatly disliked some of the more recent and unspiritual forms of church defence. He felt that the warfare needed very different weapons, and he was never tired of urging that the true strength of the Church of England lay, not in her political organization or even in ecclesiastical position and influence, but in the spirituality of her life and ministry.

Dean Howell was an unmistakable Welsh patriot. His bardic name was "Llawdden," and in his earlier days he was a frequent and successful competitor at the Welsh Eisteddfodau, while in later times he was an adjudicator and ever-welcome speaker. It was a sight not to be forgotten when he rose to speak at one of these great Welsh gatherings. His hearty handshake, fine voice, flashing eye, and genial smile, will never be forgotten by those who met him. The reality of the man was seen in the fulness and thoroughness with which he prepared for his very scanty congregation in the little village of St. David's, just as he had done in the crowded congregations of his former spheres of work. He had a Bible-class for women, and an instruction class for the choir boys of the cathedral, and for these he prepared regularly and most carefully.

The great secret of all his influence was that he was a man of deep spiritual life. Again and again has he emphasized, both privately and publicly, the supreme need of the Holy Spirit as the one imperative requirement of all Christian service. Just before his death he was keenly interested in the arrangements for a Keswick Convention for Wales, to be held at Llandrindod Wells next August, and he was also watching with much sympathy the work of Dr. Torrey as it was then commencing in London after the great Australian revival. Those who have known and loved him never expect to look upon his like again.

Working Girls' Homes.

Dear Sir,—I venture to ask the hospitality of your columns to make known the real need of a Seaside Rest Home in connection with the "Homes for Working Girls in London," which have now been in operation for twenty-five years. Appeal is made to your readers in the full hope that the Rest Home will be kindly supplied by the presentation of a large, roomy, freehold house to the trustees (among whom are Lord Aberdeen, Lord Kinnaird, and the Hon. T. H. W. Pelham), or a sum of money to purchase the same.

In the eight Homes (with their 500 beds) some 37,000 young workwomen have lived; only the industrious can dwell in them, their object being to assist such as strive to help themselves. The proposed Rest Home (not a convalescent home) would be open to any girl or young woman needing recuperation, at a weekly charge for board and lodging of about 8s. 6d. Such a Rest Home is greatly required, as, like everybody else, our workwomen of all classes find that, after the tug and turmoil of the year, they are sadly run down. They pine for rest and change of air, but how to get them at a cost within their means is the difficulty.

Yours, &c.,

John Shrimpton, Founder and Director.

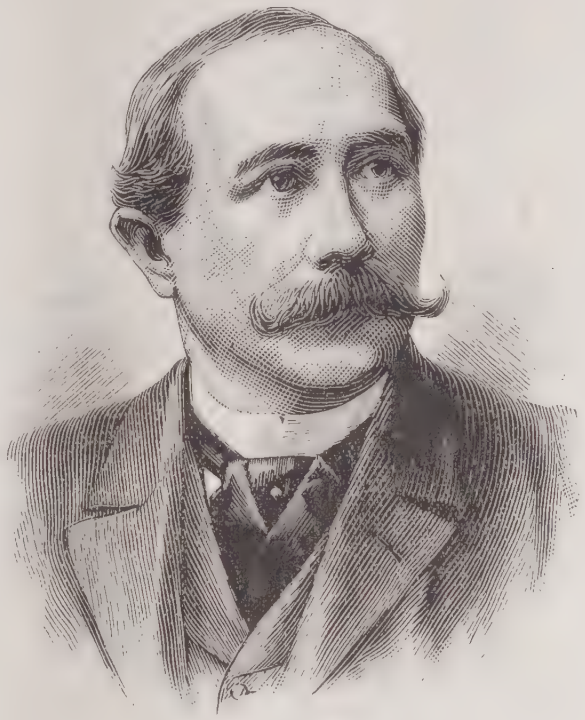
Digging Up Old Babylon.

THE WORK OF PROFESSOR HILPRECHT.

The nineteenth century brought many developments, and among them the recovery of languages that had been dead for thousands of years. During the latter half of the century the knowledge advanced from tongues to people; thousands of inscriptions, stately monuments and simple clay tablets, delivered their messages from far-off times, filling in the hiatuses of history, and clothing with life and animation forms that had been handed down for generations as heroic names and little more. When the eighteenth century ended, our knowledge of the great empires of ancient times was confined to Scripture references and uncertain and conflicting traditions which historians had endeavoured to digest into consistent and comprehensive narratives. To-day the traditional records are entirely superseded, and the Sacred Writings of the Old Testament are supported and supplemented by narratives supplied from inscriptions which have lain buried for millenniums from the sight and touch of men.



PROFESSOR HILPRECHT.

A hundred years ago, when unbelievers thought to explain away the Old Testament, travellers in Nineveh, Babylonia, and Egypt brought word that those lands were precisely in the desolate condition which the prophets of Israel predicted concerning them in the far-off days of their prosperity. The Providence which then sent confirmation of Scripture through the testimony of men absolutely disinterested—in some cases the travellers themselves were notorious unbelievers—has to-day raised up other witnesses and furnished proof along quite another line. Then prophecy was accredited, and set forth with an entail of marvellous fulfilment. Now, the turn has come for the purely historical portions of Scripture to receive unexpected confirmation. While scholars of one class have been analysing God's Word, and subjecting it to impatient and irreverent criticism, another body of men have devoted themselves to investigations of a more fruitful order, some in the Valley of the Nile, others in Palestine and Syria, and yet others in the widespreading regions between Damascus and the frontiers of Persia. Though these have not as yet finished their work, they have sent confusion into the ranks of critics who had mainly concerned themselves with subjective theorizings; and it looks as if unbelief will soon have to find other outlets for its latent energies.

Professor Hermann Volrath Hilprecht, whose portrait we give to-day, has for some years occupied the chair of Assyrian in the University of Pennsylvania; and when, in 1888, the first American expedition was sent to the wastes of old Babylon, he was designated as a member of the party. Since then he has directed very successful campaigns, and brought great spoil from the regions excavated. Whatever changes may have taken place in the personnel of the exploring companies, this man, since the day when he first rode over the mounds at Nippur, has had his heart and hand occupied with the records of persons and things of several thousand years ago. He now takes rank among the foremost authorities in cuneiform palæography, and the University with which he is so honourably connected, at present under the style of Director and Professor of Semitic Philology, has been greatly enriched by the material which he has sent from the sphere of his labours.

As to Nippur, it may safely be said that it has spoken to us from a more distant past than any city hitherto excavated. Its story goes back beyond the days before Abraham; in fact, it is the Calneh of Gen. x. 10. One hardly likes to entertain positive statements as to the time when the foundations of the city were laid; it is assuredly sufficient to class the place, as in Genesis, with Babel, Erech, and Accad, the whole forming the beginning of the kingdom of Nimrod, who was "a mighty one in the earth." A few years ago the characters named in this part of Genesis were readily described as mythical. The man who hazards that view to-day exposes himself to correction and derision. One by one, the cavillings of the learned and the doubts of the ignorant, have been set aside; and as Schliemann dug up Troy, so Hilprecht and others are digging up old Babylon. There are German and French exploration parties on the field, who, with the Americans, have divided great spoil during recent years.

Professor Hilprecht's party, as intimated, has done its work at Nippur. First, they excavated a Parthian palace, which had been raised on the site. Descending, they turned over the débris of many centuries, little guessing, as they proceeded, that city after city would be overhauled before the primal foundations were reached. At length, however, the facts were realized as follows:—Nippur, the silent mound, was, in fact, sixteen cities, built one upon another, and the work of investigation is by no means complete as yet. In the days of old Babylon, the temples were also libraries; law and literature, education and religion were all in priestly hands. The library of the great temple of Bel has been discovered, and by this time is, in large measure, removed to the United States, where the fuller message of the tablets will be ascertained. Professor Hilprecht promises us surprises. In a recent interview he said:—

We have unearthed 23,000 tablets, and I will make the deciphering of them my life work. The contents of these tablets, when deciphered, will altogether change the ideas of the world as to the state of civilization and knowledge of that early people. It will be seen that they knew then, 2300 B.C., that the earth was a globe, and that their astronomers took the same view of celestial phenomena as we take now. What we have done thus far in the work of deciphering, has given us a glimpse of marvels which await us in these tablets.

Within the last few months our most important discoveries were made. The day before I embarked for my homeward voyage, I had in my hand a tablet upon which were the minutest astronomical calculations as to the constellation Scorpion. These calculations as to the places and movements of the stars were remarkable, and showed pretty clearly that the astronomers of those days, 2300 B.C., were as proficient in their science in some respects as are those of to-day.

There are many views of Babylonian life. One scholar says the people were essentially trading and commercial, another that they were a pastoral and agricultural people. The truth is that they were all these; they were a great people, and their memorials show the many-sidedness of their life. Professor Hilprecht has discovered signs of their educational activity :—

One of the most interesting tablets is mathematical. The Babylonians, in their arithmetical tables, the multiplication table, for instance, went far beyond us. Our multiplication table stops at 12; 12 by 12 is the highest. The Babylonian tables went up to 60. Their children might have sung 60 by 60 in reciting the multiplication table. Indeed, for astronomical purposes, they carried the table out to 1300; that is, the results of multiplications up to 1300 by 1300 were tabulated. They wanted to know, at once, the result of large calculations. They did not want to be retarded in their work by arithmetical problems; that was why they extended the tables so far.

The Babylonian children would have been wonders in our view. Not only did they have to learn arithmetical tables carried out to four figures, but they also had to learn two languages, the Babylonian and the Sumerian, one a learned, the other a colloquial, language. And that was done in schools of the lowest grades; and not as our children learn Latin in the high school, by the mouthful, but so thoroughly as to be able to speak and write them.

Though much has been accomplished in the laying bare of ancient buildings, and the gathering of the exceedingly rich harvest of antiquities, yet at the present rate of operations, although, on an average, several hundred Arabs have been employed, it will require fully 100 years to excavate thoroughly this ancient city.

When we reflect that, until recent decades, our knowledge of the period prior to Abraham was entirely dependent upon the first eleven chapters of Genesis, and that here, in the great temple of Bel, is an entire library, which contains many thousands of volumes written in that early age, we can at least realize that the future generation will have considerable knowledge of those early days.

It would be difficult to estimate our obligations already to research on the mounds of Babylon and Assyria. The languages being related to old Hebrew, one might reckon upon important linguistic as well as other light coming from the cuneiform inscriptions. And though the calculations of unreasonable enthusiasm have not all been realized, the ever-growing expectations of patient and cautious scholars have found abundant justification. What the spade has done for Hebrew lexicography may be appreciated by a comparison of the Oxford Edition of Gesenius's Lexicon, now nearing completion, with any previous edition, English or German. Page after page, one hardly comes across a root to which an Assyrian cognate is not assigned, sometimes with real light being thrown upon the word in its usage and meaning. The service rendered by excavation to Scripture story, by way of illustration and by furnishing, from man's point of view, the reverse of such incidents as are narrated in the Divinely Inspired Record of Human Redemption, may be gathered from that excellent series of books published by the Religious Tract Society, under the general title, "By-Paths of Bible Knowledge," and from the "Records of the Past," edited by Dr. Sayce. (New Series, six volumes, Baysters.) In a deeply interesting and fully illustrated work, published this week, entitled Explorations in Bible Lands during the Nineteenth Century, Professor Hilprecht has co-operated with Drs. Hommel, Jensen, Steindorff, and Benzinger in the description of archæological research in various lands. (12s. 6d. net. T. & T. Clark.)

By a recent incident Professor Hilprecht was brought into prominence before great and small in the German Empire. He is a German, and eloquent as an orator and writer in the language of the Kaiser. While engaged in a lecturing tour, telling the story of American exploration in Babylonia, his attention was called to the extraordinary claims of Professor Friedrich Delitzsch in his now famous "Babel and Bible" lecture, delivered in the presence of the Emperor and other distinguished personages. Briefly, Delitzsch found the origination of Israelitish monotheism in the religious conceptions of Old Babylon. It was an amazing claim, especially from such a scholar as Delitzsch undoubtedly is. A host of Assyriologists raised their voices in dissent, and the suggestion was rightly repudiated.

Though not entering upon controversy, Hilprecht answered Delitzsch, and in a very effective manner. His word was accepted as that of a master; he was not an arm-chair scholar, but had spent years handling and reading the tablets and monuments upon whose message all depended. In the course of a lecture at Berlin, he unfolded the story of his labours, and in the words of one who was present, "he made Genesis xi. to live before us." For two and a half hours he held his audience spellbound, and many hearts were lifted up in renewed confidence in the old Book. The following day he repeated the lecture before the Geographical Society of Berlin; and, behold, in the city where a German savant had brought the faith of Israel and the foundations of Christian Revelation to the dust of comparison with a Paganism that was dark in its polytheism and impure in its religious conceptions, there now stood another German savant defending the Bible by placing the results of the latest research alongside its wonderful narratives and teachings!

In a word, Professor Hilprecht said, that which is essential to the religion of Israel cannot have been derived from the religion of Babylon. Not from the labyrinth of polytheistic superstition did the people of Israel derive the worship of the true God. The two sets of ideas have nothing in common. While expressing a large measure of admiration for the civilization of ancient Babylon, Dr. Hilprecht gave it as his conviction, first, that the whole nation fell asleep with the confession—"our gods are dead;" and secondly, that to represent Israel as owing its idea of one God to Babylon in its religious bankruptcy, was an absurdity. Thus his conclusions were the precise opposite of those which come of putting men's writings before those of the Creator, and which tend to promote unbelief of the Word of God.

Those who are indifferent to the sensibilities of such as love their Bibles, may make light of the escapades of higher critics and the rash inferences of archæologists. Having observed with sorrow whereunto these things often grow, and what they entail in spiritual distress and moral disorder, we take a more serious view of the quarrels of savants on religious matters. Above all, we think that original investigators should be "slow to speak," and then should not speak ex cathedra till they are sure. We pray God to give to all such a due sense of responsibility, not only to Him, but to Christian sentiment, that while, by their exertions, the Word of God may be illustrated and confirmed, the people of God may not be troubled in mind or scattered as sheep without a shepherd.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

FALKIRK.

In continuance of their campaign, Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones are now at Falkirk, where their meetings have been of a stirring and deeply spiritual character.

Beginning on Saturday week with a torch-light procession, headed by the Wright Memorial Brass Band, the mission continued to arouse interest far and wide. On the Sabbath following, Dr. Henry conducted large meetings, afternoon and night, in the Town Hall. The evening meeting was packed a quarter of an hour before the hour for beginning, and the doors were closed against several hundred people. The address was an eloquent and masterly one from the subject, "Lot pitching his tent towards Sodom." On the Monday there was again a great meeting. Dr. Henry spoke on "the great need of the time, a revival in the Church—a revival of our faith in the authority and integrity of the Bible.

At Tuesday night's meeting, which was both a very large and a very impressive one, Dr. Henry attributed the comparative apathy and indifference of the Church in regard to the drink question to its failure to realise the value of the human soul. The most insignificant human being is greater and of far greater value than the whole material universe, and it is because men fail to realise this that they are not moved to horror by the ravages of strong drink.

On the following evening the hall was again filled in every part, and the chair was occupied by Mr. M'Innes. Dr. Henry chose as the basis of his address the words of the apostle—"I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation." It was to the word "power" he wished to draw attention. In the original it is, of course, the word from which we derived the word dynamite.

As the meetings proceeded they gained in power. On Sabbath last the night meeting was a season of much blessing. In response to Dr. Henry's earnest appeals, no fewer than eighty-three persons decided for Christ.

The Falkirk Temperance News, in the course of a striking leader, says of Dr. Henry:—"Conscience is the one word which indicates the most outstanding feature of the work. It is impossible for any man whose conscience is not seared, be he drunkard, moderate drinker, or abstainer, to listen to his burning words without having his conscience touched. They are fitted to awaken deep searching of heart in the most earnest Christian, the most devoted temperance worker, as well as the most callous and indifferent, sitting 'at ease in Zion.' The man is not to be envied, however sincere his heart and purpose, who can listen to such words without having many stings of conscience. They are fitted to make the very best of us smite upon his breast and say 'God be merciful to me a sinner,' to make us say out, which of us has realized to the full the enormity of the drink sin? Which of us has done all that he could to rescue the perishing, and to remove this mountain of guilt from our Church and our nation? It is not only of sin, but of salvation, Dr. Henry speaks. No one can attend these meetings and say he has never been told the way of salvation. In clear and forcible language Christ is set forth the crucified Redeemer, through whom there is eternal life."

The same paper says of Mr. Armon Jones:—"In connection with the meetings the singing of Mr Jones is undoubtedly a great attraction. He is supposed to sing twice at each meeting, but in response to the call of the audience he has sung oftener, and his singing is evidently productive of fine moral and spiritual results."

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

FOURTH WEEK OF MEETINGS IN GLASGOW.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONERS.)

MOUNTAINS of unbelief have been levelled down as the days have gone by; valleys of doubt filled up; crooked things in business made straight; and the rough, morally-uneven places, where men stumble and fall, have been forsaken in favour of the ways of pleasantness and peace. Homes have been brightened, hearts gladdened, lives purified, and darkness has given place to light. Friends have rejoiced "o'er the dead made alive," and backsliders have been restored. By hundreds in Glasgow, the month of March, 1903, will never be forgotten. Its precious memories will remain, for it has been to them the time of their salvation.

Many of the workers have pleasing incidents to tell, and it is sometimes difficult to determine which joy has been the greater—the joy of the newly-delivered soul, or that of the worker who has been the means of leading another to Christ! Many missionaries have aided in getting to the meetings those who were led to the Saviour; and from the Soldiers' Home in Maryhill a number of soldiers were nightly in attendance, several of whom professed faith in Christ, one among others in khaki dress, who went through the war in South Africa and who has now enlisted in the holy war.

NO MORE STEALING.

One night, when the evangelists were in the City Hall, a man was hanging about in the Candleriggs with nothing special in view, save wondering what he could lay his hands on. He had at an earlier stage in his life been sentenced to ten years' penal servitude. Though he had been out of prison for some time, he was still on a ticket-of-leave, and under obligation to report himself to the police. Seeing the people stream into the Hall, he asked a policeman what was on, and, being told that two evangelists were conducting a Gospel meeting, he thought it might be a safe place for doing a stroke of business! He went in, and his conscience was pricked. The worker who dealt with him afterwards, and to whom he told his story, had no reason to doubt the genuineness of the profession he made of accepting Christ. The man assured him that the first thing he would do would be to go and report himself to the police, the time to do so being overdue. The sermon Dr. Torrey preached that night was on False Refuges, and was an awakening word. We heard its value commented on afterwards, ere we learned that a ticket-of-leave man had come under the power of it.

CONVERSIONS IN A RAILWAY CARRIAGE.

A gentleman was travelling to Balloch a week ago by train, and in the carriage beside him were three young lads to whom he felt he would like to speak. Pulling out a religious paper containing a photo of Mr. Alexander, he said to the lads, as he showed them the picture, "Do you know who that is?" "That's the singer that's with Dr. Torrey," said one of the lads; adding, "My mother was converted at one of their meetings." This opened the door for spiritual conversation, and the result was that the lads one by one professed to receive Jesus as their Saviour; and the four knelt on the floor as the train sped on its way, uniting their hearts in grateful prayer. On the following night the gentleman saw one of the lads in the meeting, and, pointing him out to a worker, he said: "You might speak to that lad, and hear what he says." The lad, brightly and without any hesitation, told that he had trusted Jesus the day before, greatly to the joy of his friend, who was waiting some distance off to hear the news.

REALIZING THAT REST IS GIVEN.

A young woman was asked to come to the mission while the first week's meetings were in progress. She attended the meeting for "women only" on Sabbath, March 8. There she heard the hymn, "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" The singing of it greatly touched her. She had never heard anything like it before; for, though a regular church attender, she knew nothing of the hymnology of Gospel meetings, even "Sacred Songs and Solos" being a book with which she had no acquaintance. On the following Wednesday, the first night she was free to get back, conviction was deepened; and on the next night, when Dr. Torrey preached from the text, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," it seemed the very message suited for her; yet she went away without entering into rest. As she rose to go out, she cast a longing eye towards the front seat where the anxious ones were gathering, and felt she would like to go, but lacked the courage. She was accosted by a lady worker, who said: "Are you a Christian?" and she answered that she was; but after having said so she broke down and wept.

That night in her own room she was perfectly overwhelmed with deep spiritual anxiety. She read the Bible and prayed for long, but no light reached her. She cast herself at Jesus' feet, but no assurance came. In the morning the first thing that came to her mind was the preacher's text of the night before, and as she turned it over in her mind she said: "I came to Him last night. He must have given me rest." And thus the Day Star arose in her heart.

A PRACTICAL DIFFICULTY.

On Sabbath, March 22, as anxious ones from the men's meeting were finding their way into a side hall, a friend said to us as a young man passed in, "Speak to that fellow." Another worker on the look-out for souls stepped in first and spoke kind and cheering words to him. After awhile we joined in, and on doing so learned that the young fellow had a difficulty, that he was engaged in a licensed grocer's shop, and he had the feeling that selling whisky and following Christ would not go well together. We assured him that, if he trusted Christ, some way would open for him, though his faith might be tried.

Christ's Word was read to him—"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." So also was the Apostle's word—"He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" We assured him that bread and butter were included in the "all things." Eventually he seemed to reach the point of decision, and we had prayer with him, commending him to the Lord. It was our joy afterwards to learn that later in the evening, at a testimony meeting in St. George's Cross Tabernacle, he stood up and confessed Christ.

CASES OF RESTITUTION.

At one of the afternoon meetings Mr. Oatts told of three cases that had come under his notice within twenty-four hours in which restitution had been made. One was that of a lad who had the value of one shilling's worth of material on his conscience. The shilling was paid, and far more than a shilling's worth of blessing received. A workman, who had taken goods to the value of three shillings, made confession, and offered the money, but was told to put the three shillings in the plate. A woman had for a number of years appropriated, from a business which she kept for an elder sister, money which had in the aggregate amounted to £130. When led to Christ she handed over her bank-book to her sister, to free her mind from the burden that rested upon it.

The address on, "What, then, shall I do with Jesus?" brought an interesting letter from a lady who had been awakened under its searching power. About a week later, as Mr. Alexander sang a solo about "The Judgment Day," she took Christ as her Refuge, and entered into rest. An engagement to attend "a select dance" was at once cancelled.

The statement that an agnostic, who had in his dark days burned his Bible, had gone home, after professing to receive Christ, to burn his atheistic books, was received with some hearty "hallelujahs."

GROWING ATTENDANCES.

The greatly increased week-day audiences cheered the evangelists. At the business men's meetings the subject of "The Resurrection of Christ" was ably handled. The positions of Strauss, Renan, Baur, and other rationalistic thinkers were considered, and Dr. Torrey showed himself a master of detail. Some we conversed with were loud in their praises of the fresh and forceful treatment the subject had received. The afternoon addresses were on "The Second Coming of Christ." Whether the Church will pass through the great tribulation, or whether it will be caught up before that dread period arrives, came under review, as did other points on which many devout believers differ, but all were considered in a kindly way. "All were his brethren" he said, whatever views they held.

The rush to the meetings at night was tremendous. For only three of the nights was St. Andrew's Hall available—Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday—the meetings on the two remaining nights being transferred to the City Hall, and the crowds necessitating arrangements being made for two meetings on these occasions. On Tuesday and Wednesday, half-an-hour before the advertised hour, the huge hall was packed, and hundreds were turned away. Some who could not get in made use of the occasion to carry on open-air meetings. The address on Tuesday night was on "Hell;" and on Wednesday night on "God's blockade on the road to hell," based on 2 Peter iii. 9.

WILLING HELPERS.

The evangelists will not be forgotten in the day of reward; for their excellent and earnest ministry in word and song has been used of God to accomplish great things; and they have gathered around them a host of prayerful, watchful, eager soul-winners whose untiring endeavour has largely contributed towards swelling the aggregate result of the mission. Without such help the manifested outcome would have been very much less. Business gentlemen who conduct Gospel work at their own expense could be seen intermingling and working side by side with plain working-men, the love of Christ constraining all in the service of winning souls. Many ladies have also shown their deep interest in praying and speaking with the anxious, as well as in helping out to the front seats wavering and halting ones.

Quite a number of ministers have been able to lend a helping hand. On one night we saw Dr. Howie sitting on the front seat among the penitents, dealing with an anxious soul; while near by sat Rev. John Sloan with another. On other nights we have seen Revs. John McCracken (Young Street), Alex. Gilchrist (Springburn), George Jeffrey (Cambridge Street), D. M. Macintyre (Finnieston), John Coutts (Whiteinch), and many other ministerial friends, all of whom have rendered valuable help by their presence, their genuine sympathy, and their practical help. Almost nightly could be seen Pastor D. J. Findlay, Mr. C. H. Judd, of the China Inland Mission; Mr. Peter Whytock, of the Congo Balolo Mission, and others not so widely known, all doing their best to further in individual lives the interests of the Kingdom that is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace, and joy, in the Holy Ghost. Unstinted help was rendered by the principal, staff, and students of the Bible Training Institute. The unity of the spirit has been shown in workers from different denominations standing shoulder to shoulder.

together against the common foe, and in working as with one heart in fraternal amity for the saving of souls.

THANKS FROM BUSINESS MEN.

At the closing meeting for business men the building was full, and a few stood around the doors. The hymn, "There's not a friend like the lowly Jesus," had been used very frequently, and on the closing day, under Mr. Alexander's inspiring leadership, it was once more sung with great spirit. It had evidently caught on, and its inspiring refrain will not soon die away.

Mr. Alexander having called for testimonies from "anybody who has anything definite to say," a young man rose and said that Dr. Torrey's addresses had been the means of strengthening his faith. "I feel," he said, "as if he had put a rock beneath my feet." Two others expressed the same feeling. Ex-Bailie Dickson rose to ask for a vote of thanks to Dr. Torrey and his colleague for their services among the business men. He believed they had been sent of God to do the work. The motion was seconded by Mr. J. H. N. Graham, of Larbert House, and was cordially responded to.

The concluding address, which was then given on "The Resurrection of Christ," was a distinctly valuable and eminently helpful word; and one and another gave, in conversation afterwards, expression to their appreciation. It is difficult to say which were the better, and which the more appreciated, the addresses on "Why I believe the Bible to be the Word of God," or those on "The Resurrection of Christ"; but it is safe to say that both sets were excellent, and many will cherish the memory of them as valuable contributions towards the confirming of their faith.

A RUSH TO HEAR THE GOSPEL.

The meetings the same evening in the City Hall were largely attended and fruitful in result. At the women's meeting at 6.30, one woman with a smiling face rose and told how happy she had been since trusting Christ three weeks before. The address delivered by Dr. Torrey was on "Heaven, and how to get there," and very many afterwards professed to accept Him who has said: "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life; no one cometh unto the Father but by Me."

As the women were filing out of the hall by the Albion Street end, the doors at the Candleriggs end having been thrown open, the men who had been crowding round the doors for some time surged in like a perfect sea. Hundreds upon hundreds rushed in as if a panic had seized them, jumping over the seats before the women could clear out of the passages, everyone seemingly more eager than another to get well forward. It was a sight seldom witnessed, that of men crushing in to hear the Word of God sung and spoken. Would God it were seen oftener! Dr. Torrey, in the course of his address, made the remark that the place likest to heaven on earth was a home where love reigned. Then he added: "Some of you old bachelors, get married and prove it." This remark fairly enlivened the men. They enjoyed it immensely. At the close of an earnest address a number of men came forward and confessed Christ.

A CHRISTIAN WORKER'S IDEAL.

On Friday forenoon Dr. Torrey addressed the students in the Bible Training Institute. Some of his words were as follows: "Here I feel quite at home. I have been from home nearly eighteen months, and this is the most home-like place I have struck since. When at home, every morning for five days a week I talk to a class such as this in the Chicago Bible Institute. What are you here for? Not simply to study the Bible, but to be soul-winners. If you go out and don't be soul-winners, you will misrepresent the Institute. There is a tendency to become mere students and professional Christian workers. Have one idea—a passion for souls. Let it be the one delight of your life to rescue the perishing. The Master left us an example; 'the Son of Man is come to seek, and to save that which was lost.' Let this be the business of your life, as it was of His."

Mr. Alexander, in a few words of kindly greeting, thanked the students for their valuable help in the Mission; and earnestly urged them to be men of God, men of prayer, and diligent students of the work.

At night a great concourse of women gathered in the City Hall at 6.30, and Mr. Alexander made things bright for them by getting them to sing different hymns which have become great favourites during the mission. At the close, many went into the inquiry-room.

A little more time was allowed for the large congregation of women to disperse than on the previous night, so that when the men rushed in, which they did in great style, they found the passages cleared with nothing to impede their ingress. During Mr. Alexander's half-hour he made large drafts on their vocal powers, and they responded heartily. The chorus, "Tell mother I'll be there," was sung over and over again, and is beyond a doubt imprinted for life on the memory of many who sang it. Dr. Torrey's address on "Eternal Life or the Wrath of God—Which?" based on John iii. 36, was used of God to bring precious souls into the realm of decision. J. C.

CONCLUDING MEETINGS.

Sabbath morning broke boisterous and blustering but this did not deter a vast throng of earnest people from trooping to the early meeting in St. Andrew's Hall at 9.30. In fact, long before that, the "trooping of colours"—mostly of sombre hue, however—had commenced.

The audience comprised Christian workers, prominent and otherwise, from all over the city together with converts and sympathisers reaching in all to well nigh three thousand persons. As is usual in Dr. Torrey's meetings the large number of men was as noticeable as ever, as also the representation of the various grades of the social scale happily united in seeking spiritual help and food.

Dr. Torrey is nothing if not intensely practical, and his terse address upon the elements essential to successful soul-winning was a gem of its kind. On former occasions he had dealt with the subject from its spiritual side, setting forth clearly the necessity of dependence on the guidance of the Divine hand. Now it was treated from the human side as he detailed born of soul-earnestness and sanctified common sense. It was startling to be assured that if each person present would lead one soul to Christ in the next twelve months, and each convert thus won did the same, in ten years every man, woman, and child in Glasgow would be converted—but the fact remains.

Having advised persistent prayer for indication as to the individual for whose conversion to labour, who would probably, but not invariably, be one of similar sex, age (or thereabout), and social station, to the worker, he urged as systematic endeavour to win that soul as is habitually shown by a young man who, having selected a lady in his mind whom he desires to make his wife, uses every art to cultivate her acquaintance, win her confidence, and finally possess her hand; or, as is evinced by the professional or commercial man who, with success in view, devises means to reach his goal. This line of argument is not often heard, but balanced by an adequate sense of reliance upon God and love for souls, it might well be emphasized more frequently than it is.

The same practical note pervaded the address at the 2 p.m. meeting for men only. Every available inch of sitting and standing room was occupied, while the edge of the platform was fringed with small boys picked out from the great audience that their seats might be taken by more burly forms; and even then men were almost invading each other's laps. The orchestra was partly filled with the ladies of the choir whose imaginary security was dispelled before long by the request that they should adjourn to a neighbouring hall for prayer, until their legitimate turn should come at four o'clock. As a crumb of comfort, they received, at Mr. Alexander's tactful suggestion, an expression of thanks from the rest of the audience "for their kindness in having come in to sing to them"—and beyond question their aid was in that respect most valuable. One of the hymns had been parts of which had been sung by various sections of the assembly, until Mr. Alexander asked the ladies only to sing the last verse, while "you men who have wandered into sin just try and imagine it is your mother's voice appealing to you." The effect was electric, and many a handkerchief was surreptitiously employed to wipe strong, hardened faces.

Jesus as a Hiding-place (Isa. xxxii. 2) from (a) tormenting conscience, (b) inward sin, (c) the power of Satan, and (d) the wrath to come, was faithfully exalted, each point being forcibly illustrated from the tragedies of human life, in an address to which the enormous crowd gave breathless heed.

Following this, Mr. Alexander sang with exceptionally deep feeling,

There were Ninety and Nine, and then the inquiry-room began to fill. Boldly men rose from their seats, regardless of four thousand pairs of eyes, and threaded their way to the place where they could be pointed to the Saviour, and there the Good Shepherd revealed Himself to not a few. Dr. Torrey had prayed at the commencement that it might be a Sabbath afternoon that would live in the memories of hundreds present. That prayer, we dare not doubt, will be fully answered.

TWENTY YEARS A DRUNKARD.

Early in the meeting Dr. Torrey had read a letter just received from a convert. The following extracts are an eloquent testimony to the deep ploughing of the evangelist's preaching, and the way in which God honours the faithful presentation of the Word which is "sharper than any two-edged sword":—

I cannot let you leave Glasgow without thanking you for being the means of my conversion. I have attended twenty-nine of your meetings. Drink was my great sin, and every day I was sinking lower and lower to perdition. My wife left me about a fortnight before I was saved, with these words: "You will never stop drinking; there is no hope for you!"

Now I don't think even you who have seen such wonderful things would believe that a man could be changed from a hopeless good-for-nothing to an earnest worker for Christ in so short a time. I am sometimes afraid the joy of living like this is too good to last; but as I trust in the Lord, I have no fear but He will take care of me.

The strange thing is that from the moment I was saved, I never felt the least desire to taste drink. I could never have given it up myself, for I have tried hard for twenty years to do so. After I accepted Christ, the drink gave me up! It shows the wonderful power of the Blood. . . . Not long ago, I was wishing I was dead; now I wish to live, that I may be able to do a little good to others, and if God spares me, I will try with His help to redeem a part of my wasted life.

Long before the inquiry-room was vacated, women began to pour into the great hall for their special meeting that was to follow; and half an hour before the advertised time the doors were closed and the service was in full swing. It was the same dense pack—only more so, if indeed that were possible—that listened to the searching question, "What will you do with Jesus?" After which the deeply-moved audience contributed inquirers by the score; and thus closed the efforts of a most eventful and fruitful day—the last of a long-to-be-remembered mission.

LONGER MISSIONS REQUIRED.

The fact is, there is every indication that if the evangelists could have prolonged their stay for another month, or even more, the tide of blessing would have risen higher and higher, and have reached homes and streets miles of which are as yet untouched. It is a strong argument for the cessation of brief "eight-day missions," which seldom reach much beyond the limits of the most easily impressed section of a community. Protracted effort must necessarily extend deeper and wider in the direction of the indifferent careless Godless thousands who never enter a religious meeting.

In Glasgow there is hope from the impending visit of Mr. George Clarke, who comes on Sunday next to Springburn and Govan for a fortnight at each place, while Messrs. Torrey and Alexander are at Aberdeen.

The evangelists have received, through Lord Overtoun, from the directors of the Evangelistic Association, a pressing invitation to return to the city for a long stay, at their earliest open date. G.

Other Evangelists at Work.

Rev. John McNeill at the "Edinburgh Castle" (Dr. Barnardo's).

Our hearts are filled with deep gratitude to the Lord for all His abounding goodness to us, by His servant, during the mission that has just closed. Truly it has been a season that will not easily be forgotten, for the Lord has sent His Word and healed very many. The messages delivered will live in the heart and lives of numbers of the great audiences that have met together, for the Alpha and Omega of them has been "Jesus Himself." This is the secret of all that the Lord has been pleased to do in our midst, for the believers have been made to rejoice with great joy, while backsliders have been restored, and a large company professed conversion to God. He has been lifted up, consequently men and women have been drawn to Him.

One of the gratifying features of the work has been the splendid numbers of men who have attended the services, also the growth and maintenance of the large congregations that have assembled night by night. Last Thursday was a night of great power, and many professed decision. Sunday was the closing day of the mission, and "the great day of the feast," when from morning till night great crowds met. In the afternoon over 2,000 men and women attended the service. With much power and pathos Mr. McNeill spoke to them about the cleansing of Naaman. The story was told in his own unique manner, and was splendidly set forth to convey the great truths of sin and salvation to his hearers. At the close a solemn appeal was made, and amid a hush of God's creating a large number of men and women declared their intention to yield to the Lord Jesus. It was a wonderful meeting.

At night the large hall, seating 3,000, was filled with an eager, earnest audience, and was the crowning one of the series. The solemn power of God's Spirit was mightily felt as the preacher declared the Gospel of Grace, by means of Rev. xxii. 17. Never will the word be forgotten, so mighty was it in the hand of God. It was not to be wondered at that numbers responded to the appeal for immediate decision.

A characteristic of Mr. McNeill's work is the way in which he converts the first service into an after meeting. We have often heard it said that Mr. McNeill has no second meeting; but that has not been so here—again and again has the first service been converted into an after meeting of a very solemn and effective kind. That fruit has resulted from the mission is evidenced by the large number of cards which have been voluntarily signed by the people in their homes, and returned at some service later on. These are still coming in. It is our desire to give our Lord all the praise for all this visit of His servant has meant to us.

Walter Notman, Superintendent.

The Weaver Brothers at Norwich.

Prayer and expectancy preceded the visit of the Weaver Brothers to Dereham Road Primitive Methodist Church, Norwich, and much blessing followed. Unfortunately Rev. A. W. Edwards was taken seriously ill, and was unable to participate in the inspiring services. The first Sunday, however, the church was crowded, and it was filled every week-night. Our expectations were more than fulfilled. The hearty song service must have restored to many "the joy of salvation." A gratifying feature of the services was the absence of sensationalism; a deep, solemn quiet pervading the meetings. The appeals were to the conscience. The addresses were given in a direct, powerful style, the aim of the preacher evidently being to obtain immediate decision. To God be the glory! There was a Power in the meetings which did not belong to man. When the opportunity was given numbers declared for Christ. About 150 names were taken of those who confessed Him, about 120 of these being over the age of fifteen, and nearly half were young men. It was most gratifying to see the way the young men and young women of the church undertook the work of the inquiry room. The faith of God's children was quickened and their love strengthened. The mission will be an everlasting remembrance in the minds of many. M.W.J.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Aberystwyth.

Mr. W. R. Lane's mission here (March 14-23) must be pronounced most effective.

The opening meeting for Christian workers was well attended, and every evening Shiloh Chapel (the largest in the town), was crowded by a thoroughly representative audience. Although held in a Welsh town, and conducted in English, the chief feature of the mission has been the friendly unity of different denominations in promoting its success. Much prayer had been going up to God for many weeks previously, both in private houses and public meetings.

In more than one case whole families have professed to receive blessing. The afternoon Bible readings were largely attended, and many are the testimonies of help received. The Sunday afternoon meeting, for men only, was a grand experience, Mr. Lane's address being listened to with rapt attention. Those who heard the various addresses cannot easily forget the tremendous impact with which they bore down upon the soul for immediate and absolute surrender to Christ. In anticipation of the great crowd that attended the limelight lecture, it was deemed advisable to engage the Pier Pavilion, and the same building was re-engaged for the last meeting, when the missioner gave an interesting account of his conversion and experiences while serving in the Coldstream Guards. Fully 1,500 people were present at this closing gathering. As a result of this mission, a thanksgiving service was held on Sunday evening, March 29, in Tabernacle Chapel, and was well attended.

Canon Hay Aitken at Cambridge.

Rev. Canon Aitken, according to his usual custom, arranged for his mission services in this town to extend over three Sundays, and so began a week earlier than the missioners in the other parishes, where the services are for ten days. From the large congregations assembling in Christ Church, where Canon Aitken preached each day, it is very evident that a great interest has been awakened, and there are evidences of definite conversion and the consecration to God of many souls.

The assistant missioners were Rev. J. M. Spicer, vicar of Malew, Isle of Man, and Mrs. Armitage, the latter taking the women's meetings. In the afternoon of Lord's Day week Canon Aitken addressed a men's meeting, Mrs. Armitage a meeting for women, while Mr. Spicer conducted a children's service, which was attended by about 600 young people. At night upwards of 1,000 persons were gathered in Christ Church.

A Gospel Temperance Mission.

A most useful mission with Bob Johnson, the converted "minstrel," has been held for ten days by the Tenterden and District Temperance Federation. It began at Appledore on March 16, and was continued at Smalhythe on the following day. A full meeting was held in Tenterden Town Hall on the 18th, under the presidency of the Mayor (Mr. J. R. Diggle, J.P.), who is also president of the Federation. Hearty co-operation was given by the ministers and workers of the Baptist and Wesleyan churches during the eight-days' mission at Tenterden, so that on the last night (Wednesday, 25th) the enthusiasm was at its highest, and the Town Hall could scarcely accommodate the number of people assembled. The Mayor again presided. Many pledges were signed, and much good work was done.

Work in Haddingtonshire.

Some weeks ago a notice appeared of a great work of grace in Prestonpans, the fruit of a special mission conducted by Mr. Hugh Morris. It seems fitting that a postscript should be added to record the fact that about a hundred of those impressed at the mission are, with a view to membership, attending "the communicants' class" of one of the local churches. The minister was in hearty sympathy with the movement, and he is being cheered with the way the young converts are coming forward.

Since leaving Prestonpans Mr. Morris has conducted missions in East Linton and in Whittingshame, remaining a fortnight in each place, and in both places the power of God in converting form has been seen. J. C.

Mr. Paget Wilkes and Mr. Thomas Hogben.

These servants of God have recently conducted a mission at the Baptist Chapel, Stanton Road, Barnes, with results that call for deep thanksgivings. Outward conditions were decidedly depressing; but the power of God was felt throughout, and a goodly number were led to seek Christ.

But there was a still more precious result. There are other missions—and this was one—where the chief result is the thorough preparation of a garden to receive a plant of priceless worth, when, in years to come, that plant fills the garden with beauty, and fruit, and restful shade, men look back and appreciate all the quiet work of draining, deep tillage, and fertilizing, that made such growth possible.

A number of the brethren have been brought to feel—"I must be a soul-winner, and I can be one only as I live and work in God. My first work, then, is to seek Him till I am altogether right with Him, and I stand an ever-ready messenger at his gateway." So a strong "One-by-One" Band of those who are intent on living before God to win souls, by prayer and work, promises to be the great outcome of this mission. It looks as if this little church has now been put on such direct, spiritual lines that she has only to follow them to reach really glorious results, despite the almost overwhelming difficulties of the neighbourhood. J. P. Clark, Pastor.

St. Polycarp's at Liverpool.

The eleven days' mission at St. Polycarp's Church, Liverpool, has now been concluded. Over 300 persons have professed faith in Christ. Backsliders have been restored, the weak strengthened, and the clergy and other workers greatly encouraged. A man whom the vicar (Rev. W. S. Jones) had spoken to about his soul, in gaol, some time ago, came to the Saviour, and is now rejoicing in the liberty that Christ gives. Among the anxious were many Romanists. The congregations were large from the beginning, and continued to increase until the close. So great has been the interest that, although Mr. McLean had to leave on account of other engagements, the ministers are arranging to continue the meetings for some weeks.

W. D.

Barnsbury Chapel, N.

Mr. Leonard Weaver's Mission at Barnsbury Chapel, N., is being blessed of God to the conversion of many sinners. All the past week the open-air services led by Mr. Bennett Anderson, followed by inside meetings conducted by Mr. Anderson and others, have been signally owned in the decisions which have taken place at each service.

On Thursday evening last Mr. A. Garstin gave a pathetically stirring address, and many were moved at his touching references to incidents during the illness of his late much-missed son.

Last Sunday Mr. Weaver took the three services (which were all well attended), and in the evening his appeal to a crowded congregation were very effective.

The North London Evangelistic and other choirs, including the Stratford Male Choir, have been helping us much in song during the week. Jos. Horne.

Mr. Josiah Nix at Lancaster.

The ten-days' mission conducted by Mr. Josiah Nix, in the Wesley Chapel, Sulyard Street, Lancaster, March 14 to 23, was a season of richest blessing to all who attended the services. The church has been quickened, sinners have been won, and God has been glorified. Including about 150 children under fifteen years of age, 353 persons passed through the inquiry rooms, and 529 pledges were taken. On Wednesday, March 18, an "At Home," held in the large school-room, was attended by nearly 300 shop assistants, of whom sixty-five signed the pledge. On Saturday evening, the 21st inst., Mr. Nix held one of his unique "merry" meetings. This was preceded by an open-air demonstration, with a torch-light procession, headed by the Salvation Army Band, marching through the principal streets from the chapel to the Market Square, where a short service was held. At the evening meeting, in the chapel, 200 pledge-cards were signed.

Rev. James Sprunt at Swindon.

Special services of an enthusiastic character have been held at Hay Lane Chapel, Swindon, conducted by Rev. James Sprunt. The evangelist's clear and earnest presentation of the Gospel has been blessed of God to many.

Among the new converts is one man who had not attended any place of worship for fifteen years. Both he and his wife, being fond of music, were attracted to the services by the announcement that the missioner would sing as well as preach.

We are also rejoicing at many signs of spiritual revival manifested in the lives of the members of the church as the direct result of Mr. Sprunt's earnest and happy efforts amongst us. A. J. H.

Mr. W. D. Dunn at Thurso.

Mr. W. D. Dunn has just concluded a month's mission in Thurso, which has been fraught with blessing to very many. He came on the joint invitation of the ministers and the Y.M.C.A., and the prayers offered up for blessing on the work were abundantly answered. From the beginning there was evidence of the Lord's presence, and the meetings steadily grew in attendances and power. Numbers, both young and old, have been led to decision, openly confessing Christ, and doubtless much fruit will yet be reaped, as many are confessedly awakened and in anxiety. The blessing has also spread to the country districts, and at the earnest invitation of friends in the neighbouring village of Castletown, Mr. Dunn preached there one afternoon, when at the close of the meeting a goodly number signified their desire to be the Lord's. So great was their hunger for the Word that a large number hired a brake and came to the Thurso meetings. Add to this, the facts that God's people have been stirred up and anew consecrated, that the workers have been brought closer together and their faith strengthened, and that many are being added to the church—then shall we not praise God and go forward? C. W.

About Spring.

Hymn—Sacred Songs and Solos, No. 169.

Read Song of Solomon ii., 11, 12; 1 Cor. xiii. 13.

DURING the last few days you will have noticed a marked difference in the appearance of the trees. The dull brown branches have begun to clothe themselves with green, and every morning shows some advance upon the day that went before. The flower-beds have also begun to show signs of life.

(1) Springtime is a time of Hope. We look at the tiny buds, and think how wonderful is the way they unfold and increase in size, until they expand themselves into leaves and flowers. It is a pretty picture of young life full of promise, like your own childhood. If you have good health and strength, you naturally look forward to a happy and, I hope, a useful life—one that you yourself will enjoy, and that will make you daily more pleasing to your friends and to God who loves you.

Hope is one of His good gifts, which helps to keep you bright and cheery, even in time of sadness in the present or uncertainty as to the future. As a rule the future does not trouble boys and girls very much, but hope is always with them and makes their hearts glad.

(2) Another lesson of Spring is Faith, which the Apostle Paul links with hope and love. Thus when you sow seeds or bulbs, or plant a little tree, you do so in faith that they will produce results with which you will be pleased. You cannot have hope as to anything in which you have not faith; and, of course, faith too must have something reasonable to build upon.

When I was five or six years old, I planted some feathers in the garden, and for three days I diligently watered them to "make them grow!" At first my mother looked on silently and smiled, probably thinking it was a harmless amusement, if a foolish one; but at last I made myself in such a wet mess during the process that she put a stop to it, and explained that feathers would only grow on birds! Then I learned that faith must be based on knowledge.

Another instance of faith based on ignorance comes to my mind. When the Parcels Post was first introduced, some people did not know that a parcel must be taken to the post-office; and at a town in which I was then living, a new refuse-box had just been put up in one of the streets. Some mischievous person chalked upon it the words, "Parcels Post Box," and when the dustmen cleared it a few days later, they found one or two parcels that had been placed in it by people whose faith had been misled by ignorance.

But when a gardener sows his seeds he knows, either from his own experience or from other people's knowledge, what the result is likely to be. Thus he exercises true faith, without which even hope is useless. Therefore, when Paul speaks about faith and hope in God, he bases them upon what is known of Him as revealed in His Word, and the experience of other saints, like Abraham and David. And when you see the buds and bloom of springtime, let them turn your hearts and minds to God, the Giver of all.

(3) Then Spring also speaks of work, which I know is not a favourite subject with some young people, but it is a very important one, all the same. When you see a tiny green point appearing above the ground, do you ever think how it has had to work to pierce its way up through the hard, resisting earth? But in spite of all difficulties it perseveres until it conquers.

Sometimes, I am sure, you find it "very hard to be good." Satan tries to prevent it; circumstances are trying; even friends are apt to misunderstand us. Then it is we especially need faith and hope—faith to believe we shall overcome; hope to encourage us until we do; and linked with these is love to God, for whose sake we seek to do right.

To him that o'ercometh
God giveth a crown.
Through faith we shall conquer,
Though often cast down.
Be thoughtful and earnest
Kind hearted and true.
Look ever to Jesus,
He'll carry you through.

(4) Only one more message of Spring will I add—that of Watchfulness. After the seeds are sown, great care has to be taken sometimes, to protect the early blooms from frost or blight. A few days of Spring sunshine encourage the buds to show themselves, and a frosty night, an east wind, or tiny insects on the leaves will hinder their progress, or perhaps destroy them altogether. Many a promising young life has been spoiled for lack of watchfulness against the frost and winds of temptation, or the deadly blight of sin. That is why Jesus so often warned His disciples to "Watch."

Life is full of temptation; you meet it every day—inwardly in your own heart, outwardly from your school-fellows and companions. If you have given your heart to Jesus and have got His Divine life in you, watch earnestly lest Satan stunt your growth. If you have fallen into sin, come to Him for forgiveness and fresh supplies of grace. If you have never yet learned to love Him, put your faith in Him to save you; so that your glad young life may not be wasted, but that in Him it may be made a glorious success, and bloom like the garden of the Lord, or like trees planted by rivers of water. Uncle Tom.

Word Pictures.

1. In this picture we see a man standing in the midst of his friends, directing two of them on an errand. He gives them full instructions, and they set off. After a while we see them coming back, having fulfilled their leader's command. They then form a procession, and journey towards the city. (a) Who was the man? (b) Who were his friends? (c) For what reason did he send two of them away? (d) To what city were they going?

2. What is this picture? It is night, but we can see a quiet hillside. A company of men are talking together in low voices, and near them some animals are lying asleep. A strange thing happens, and the men are filled with fear. (a) Who were the men? (b) Why were they in that place? (c) What caused their fear? (d) How were they calmed?

3. We have here a woodland scene. Before us are some fine trees and a river, also a group of young men busy cutting down some of the trees, and making them into beams with which to build a house. Suddenly there is a cry; one has had an accident, and is in trouble. Their leader goes to the rescue, and with a word and a slight action happiness is restored. (a) What river was it? (b) Who were the young men? (c) Who was their leader? (d) What accident happened? (e) How was the matter put right?

[Those under ten, answer any four questions; under thirteen, any eight. Chapter and verse must be given.]

Christ's Teaching about Beneficence (Matt. vi. 1-4; Luke x. 25-37).

WE cannot live alone. No one of us can be entirely independent of others. I am not only a centre, but I am part of another man's circumference; and every other man, woman, or child I know is part of my circumference. We are members one of another. In other words, we all have neighbours. The first table of the Law had to do with our relations to God, and the second with our relations to men; and a complete human life, which has windows opening to the Infinite Creator, must have doors opening on the street towards our finite fellow-creatures.

When we talk about neighbours and neighbourliness, we naturally think of those who live next door, and we are apt to reduce the Divine command to those who reside in the same street. If these are very comfortable and well-to-do, it seems as though there is not much scope for helping them.

This definition of neighbours, however, is altogether too narrow and contracted, as our Lord shows in the parable of the Good Samaritan. The lawyer asked who was his neighbour, and Jesus said, "Be a neighbour to someone else. If you will neighbour others, you will find plenty of people who will neighbour you." And if it be asked what kind of people am I to neighbour, the answer comes, "Make no distinction of race or creed (John iv. 9); but wherever you come across a man who has been stripped, beaten, and robbed, and is half-dead, don't wait for other men to succour him, but bind up his wounds, minister to him, and treat him as though you loved him with the natural love of brotherhood."

Too often in the past we have helped to beat, strip, and rob men. We have beaten them with our clever sarcasms, we have stripped them of what little respectability they had by our tale-bearing, and we have robbed them of their good name; but from now we are to remember that they are somebody's brothers, husbands, lovers—that, above all, they are God's, and we must treat them with self-denying love.

It is an exquisite touch of the Master that a Samaritan is held up as the model of this God-like love. It is as though he said, "Look out for the love of God in the least likely spots, and from the least likely people. Like the corn, it will root itself and grow in every soil. There is more generous feeling in the world than you know. You may be disappointed alike in priest, and Levite; they are officials, and officialism always shrivels and withers men; but you will find the true love of God and man in the Samaritan."

The true spirit of neighbourliness does not simply pay other people to do distasteful work for the miserable. A rich man might have paid for an agent to be up-and-down on that dangerous road to look after such cases, and it would have been a good investment of capital for God, especially if he did not brag about it (Matt. vi. 1-4); but it would not be really so blessed in its effect on his own character, or on the men who were helped, as personal ministry would be. We ought to combine the two, because our personal experience of such cases will enable us to direct our agents, and live in their efforts, so that they may become our own. Perhaps the best of all will be to get elected on the County Council, or the magistrates' bench, that we may put down the gangs of thieves, which infest the way down from Jerusalem to Jericho. And that may lead to the investigation of the causes of their bandit-life, which may result from a sad lack of schools and reformatories, or because there are social wrongs which need righting. Therefore, we may be loving our neighbours while we are engaged in committees, and going through the disagreeables of a contested election.

Remember that money is by no means the best way of helping your poor neighbours. It may be needful to pay for board and lodging for a night or two; but what men need most is compassion, sympathy, your own hand-help. "Silver and gold have I none," has been the confession of some of the greatest benefactors of the race. Above all, it was true of the Lord Himself, who became poor that He might really help us, as He never could have done had He been rich. Let us Gentiles be specially tender to His wounded, beaten nation. England must never turn against the Jew!

"In School and Playground": Five-minute Talks with Young People. By G. E. Morgan, M.A. After reading this useful little work, Rev. F. C. Spurr writes: "There is not a dull line in it. The writer has kept alive within him the ardour of youth, and this is the chief merit of the book, that it is so thoroughly sympathetic with boy and girl life. That ever-increasing number of ministers who are searching for material for children's addresses will find this book a veritable gold mine." (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

International S.S. Lesson.

Sunday, April 12, 1903.

The Resurrection (1 Cor. xv. 20, 21; 50-58). Golden Text (1 Cor. xv. 20).

EVERYWHERE the Apostle Paul went he preached the Resurrection of Christ. The heathen knew no such doctrine, the Jews disputed about it, the Sadducees denying it altogether; hence the converts to Christianity from heathen or Jew found it difficult to adopt and receive the doctrine. So also did the disciples of Jesus when first they heard their Master speak of it (Mark ix. 10)

In Corinth some believed it, also some distinctly rejected this truth (v. 12); and it was to the churches at Thessalonica and Corinth Paul wrote with the greatest fulness and power on the resurrection, showing that it is the keystone of the Christian faith, and that if it failed the whole structure must have fallen away (19).

Paul announces the resurrection as a fact beyond dispute; had proved it from prophecy, testimony of eye-witnesses, and his own personal inspiration (1 Thess. iv. 15; Gal. i. 12). From nature, the grain of corn (Job xix. 25-27; Isa. xxv. 8; Hosea xiii. 14; Psa. xvii. 15; Acts i. 3; 1 Cor. xv. 4-8).

I. "The first-fruit" (Lev. xxiii. 10). The first sheaf of grain as the pledge and proof of the coming harvest. So the risen Christ as the "first" sheaf (Acts xxvi. 23). Proof that the dead can be raised, pledge that they shall be raised and in like form.

II. The means. Satan worked through Adam to bring death on the human race, God worketh through Christ to bring life, and repair the damage done by the curse (Col. i. 18). "First born from the dead."

III. The manner. The natural, physical body cannot have place in the spiritual heavenly kingdom. It holds the seeds of decay, change, dissolution; is perishable, not prepared for eternal existence.

IV. The mystery. Not to be fully understood or explained, but is partially symbolised in the spring flowers, the butterfly, or the ear of corn. All will be changed, not necessarily through death and the grave. Instantaneous, complete. Same personality, but condition of body changed. Tabernacle and house (2 Cor. v. 1) contrasted—earthy, in dishonour, in weakness, vile, natural, corruptible, mortal; with heavenly, in glory, in power, glorious, spiritual, incorruption, immortality (Phil. iii. 21).

V. The victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ. He fulfilled the law, removed the curse, conquered death, and the power of the grave. "Declared to be the Son of God with power" (Rom. i. 4).

VI. Our thanks for the victory assured. Works that will endure, stand the fire. "Be recompensed in the resurrection" (Luke xiv. 14, Matt. xxv. 31-46). "Only what is done for Jesus will last."

Lessons.

1. The resurrection of Jesus has been called Jehovah's signature of receipt for the ransom paid for sinners (Acts ii. 24). "Not redeemed with corruptible things" (1 Pet. i. 18-19).

2. "Christ is risen!" "Ye are risen with Him." If our bodies are laid in the grave they are secure in Him (Psa. xvi. 10) and as safe.

3. The harvest field is full of sheaves like to the first (1 John iii. 2; Job. xix. 26).

4. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth" (Col. iii. 1). Walk, and talk, and work as risen ones.

5. How can I lose the fear of death? By trusting my soul to the Conqueror of Death (1 Thess. iv. 14). He died to do away with the sting, let Him cure it in me. "Cleanse me from its guilt and power." Neither viper or wasp can hurt when the sting is taken out. "The King of Terrors" (Job xviii. 14) without his goad becomes the door-opener into the presence of the Lord.

1. The patriarch Job said, "I know that my Redeemer liveth . . . in my flesh I shall see God." 2. The beloved John heard a voice from the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, and "One like unto the Son of man," saying, "I am He that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore." 3. Paul yearned for the touch of "His right hand" (Rev. i. 17). "That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection" (Phil. iii. 10); and echoed the patriarch's triumph-song, "I know whom I have believed" (2 Tim. i. 12). 4. Is our reply Gal. ii. 20? with, "I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me." "Seeing he ever liveth (Heb. vii. 24-25). "Victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Henceforth may I live, not to myself, but unto Him which died for me, and rose again (2 Cor. v. 10, 15).

"Your labour is not in vain in the Lord." —The father pays the nurse, though the child dies; the doctor has his fee, though the patient dies; and the vinedresser has his reward, though the vines wither. So will God deal with faithful ministers (2 Cor. ii. 15; Isa. xlix. 2-4).—Thomas Brooks (the Puritan).

NATURE'S RESURRECTION.

A lover of nature has recently written, that with the coming of spring she is accustomed to go to a certain country spot that she may welcome the advent. It represents her "season," and she would not exchange the time for anything else in the world. Turn where one may, the spirit of hope and new life may be found bursting over the country; tender flashes of virgin green, and drifts of white, beautiful blossom. The ground is studded with simple primroses, and the white anemones seem to be hanging their pure, delicate heads in timid consciousness of the surrounding beauty. To anyone with an eye for nature, every country lane is just now displaying a resurrection from the death of winter. And if God so clothes the fields in a risen beauty, shall He not much more clothe His people in resurrection splendour? "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept" (v. 20).

VICTORY THROUGH CHRIST.

When William Carey lay dying he was visited by Rev. Alexander Duff, who talked with him of his past life and then knelt and prayed by his bedside. Leaving the room, Mr. Duff thought he heard himself recalled. He turned back, and the dying man addressed him in a whisper. "Mr. Duff, you have been talking about Doctor Carey—Doctor Carey. When I am gone say nothing about Doctor Carey. Speak about Dr. Carey's Saviour!" The missionary died triumphant, fearless of the grave, giving thanks to God through the Lord Jesus Christ. Let us ever thus place the Saviour in the foreground of our life.

THE LIGHT OF THE GRAVE.

In many parts of Germany, from the Imperial Palace to the humble cottage, fir trees, or at least the branches of trees, may be seen at Christmas time, with lights placed on the boughs. In other cases illuminations are put in the windows of houses, and both customs are maintained in memory of the great Light of the World. Small trees, decorated with lights, are also planted on the graves of loved ones, and on Christmas Eve a number of candles may be seen in some of the German cemeteries, burning in memory of departed relatives. The grave of a small child bears its illumined tree, a sign that the mother is thinking of her little one, now living in the sunlight of God's presence; and the parent, with an unmovable faith in the risen Christ, is able to say, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" (v. 55).

THE STING OF SIN.

Samuel Coleridge, who indulged in opium and thereby weakened and obscured his brilliant intellect, once wrote regarding the story of his vice. "For ten years," said he, "the agony of my spirit has been indescribable, the sense of my danger staring, but the conscience of my guilt was worse, far worse, than all. I have prayed, with drops of agony on my brow; trembling, not only before the justice of my Maker, but even before the mercy of my Redeemer." The Lord said to him, "I gave thee so many talents; what hast thou done with them?" Happily Coleridge was able afterwards to break away from the fearful habit of opium-eating; yet the curse caused him much agony of soul. Though "the sting of death is sin, thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (vv. 5, 6 and 7). Of ourselves we cannot be rid of sin; through our Saviour we may be more than conquerors, both in life and in death.

Oxford Notes.

OXFORD Wesleyan Methodism received an impetus on Thursday by the visit of Rev. S. Chadwick, of Leeds, who preached in the afternoon in the Wesley Memorial Church, and delivered a splendid address at night on the "Work of Our Lord." Oxford Methodism is keenly alive.

The Rector of All Saints', and City Lecturer, Rev. A. J. Carlyle, is giving a series of Sunday addresses on the "Relation of the Church of England to Nonconformist Churches." Sunday's address was, "The Christian Ministry." The preacher's broad-minded charity is, to no small extent, drawing Christian ministers closer together.

The Baptist Missionary Sunday for Oxford was in every way a success. On the following evening a meeting was held, over which the Mayor of Oxford presided, and Rev. G. F. Dann, of Bankipore, India, was the chief speaker. Referring to his own district, he said that out of nineteen millions of people in the province, the Baptist Missionary Society had the care of six millions; and for this immense multitude only five European missionaries were labouring. Yet, in spite of difficulties, the Christian population of India during the past ten years had increased 30 per cent.

Levity in Divine Things.

In these days of various devices to attract the masses to the House of God, is there not some danger of overshadowing the seriousness and reverence due to the solemn and sacred subject of man, the sinner, in his relation to God, his Creator, Redeemer, and Judge?

The jesting word, the flippant manner, courted by some speakers, including even ministers and clergy, are in my judgment devices worthy of a Mr. Worldly-Wiseman; assuredly they receive no countenance from the prophets, apostles, and evangelists of Scripture, still less from the example of the Lord Jesus Christ. Such pitiful attempts at wit and "brightness" tickle the ear of the groundlings, "make the unskilful laugh," and cannot but make "the judicious grieve," while they greatly shock the feeling of reverence in seriously constituted minds.

It may be said that Rowland Hill and Charles Haddon Spurgeon frequently indulged in this "brightness," and yet they were very godly and useful men. But I remark that numbers of such things as were attributed (often by enemies) to both these excellent men were utterly unfounded; and that it may be doubted whether occasional instances of them really helped, or to some extent marred, their great and useful work. Anyway, they certainly have no countenance in Scripture, but on the contrary are directly opposed to its holy counsels to Christian ministers, and evangelists. Consider, for instance, the special comments of Paul on the subject in his pastoral epistles, and take his example in all his sermons and addresses. Well might the poet Cowper, alluding to the very subject of this paper say:—

He that negotiates between God and man,
As God's ambassador, the grand concerns
Of judgment and of mercy, should beware
Of lightness in his speech. 'Tis pitiful
To court a grin, when you should woo a soul;
To break a jest when pity would inspire
Pathetic exhortation; and to address
The skittish fancy with facetious tales,
When sent with God's commission to the heart!
So did not Paul. Direct me to a quip
Or merry turn in all he ever wrote,
And I consent you take it for your text,
Your only one, till sides and benches fail.
No: he was serious in a serious cause,
And understood too well the weighty terms
That he had taken in charge. He would not stoop
To conquer those by jocular exploits,
Whom truth and soberness assailed in vain.*

APOSTOLIC COUNSELS.

Concerning the Apostle's counsels to ministers on the subject, it would be well to reflect on such as these:—"A bishop must be . . . . sober" (sóphrona — sober-minded). "Likewise the deacons must be grave." "Refuse profane and old wives' fables, and exercise thyself rather unto godliness." "Let no man despise thy youth, but be thou an example to the believers in word, in conversation." "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings." "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed . . . but shun profane and vain babblings; for they will increase unto more ungodliness." "Foolish and unlearned questions avoid." "Preach the Word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine . . . but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry." "A bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God . . . sober, just, holy, temperate . . . holding fast the faithful word, as he hath been taught, that he may be able, by sound doctrine, both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers. For there are many unruly and vain talkers . . . whose mouths must be stopped." "But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine: that the aged men be sober, grave." "Young men likewise exhort to be sober-minded: in all things shewing thyself to be a pattern . . . in doctrine shewing uncorruptness, gravity . . . sound speech that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you."

The reader of these inspired counsels will observe the stress that the Apostle lays on those repeated words, gravity and sobermindedness, that is, habits of mind and of manner totally opposed to the levity of much that goes under the name of "brightness."

THE NEED OF REVERENCE.

Let it not be thought, however, that I am an advocate for dulness and gloom in either manner or speech. But it is quite possible to be bright in every Christian sense without frothing over into levity and into "foolish talking and jesting which are not convenient." There seems, in short, to be a growing absence of reverence, even in holy things. This is seen increasingly not only in the world, in which reverence for parental authority, and every kind of authority, seems more and more to be set at nought; but it is seen too often even in religious communities, and even in professedly worshipping assemblies, ay, and even in the pulpit of the Christian teacher and preacher. There is a growing lack of the fear of God.

The late Dr. Dale felt this painfully in his latter days. Said he sorrowfully to his friend, Dr. Berry, not long before his death, "Berry, nobody fears God now!" What he meant was, that there was an ominous familiarity with God and Divine things that was very incompatible with that reverence and holy awe that characterized Christians in his earlier years, such as was seen, for instance, in his old colleague and dear friend John Angell James.

Perhaps it arises in a great measure from a too one-sided preaching of the love of God, and of the freeness of salvation by faith only. I say, too one-sided. These great truths cannot indeed be preached too fully; but there is such a thing as "the proportion of faith." And even those great truths need to be balanced or set beside other truths—truths as great in their way and as important—I mean truths respecting sin, and the holiness and justice and even wrath of God.

If we would have more reverence and less of that unseemly "brightness" I have spoken of, we must bestow greater care on the "whole counsel of God." Especially must we study the Divine methods—the Law before the Gospel (and in order to its effectual reception); Elijah before Elisha; John before Jesus; the 7th of Romans before the 8th. Then we shall be more likely to "stand in awe of God's Word." I commend to the "bright" school a word on Psa. lxxxix. 7. "God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are about Him."

* The Task. Book II.

The Land of Pretty Soon.

I know a land where the streets are paved
With the things we meant to achieve,
It is walled with the money we meant to have saved,
And the pleasures for which we grieve.
The kind words unspoken, the promises broken,
And many a coveted boon,
Are stowed away in that land somewhere—
The land of "pretty soon."

There are uncut jewels of possible fame
Lying about in the dust;
And many a noble and lofty aim,
Covered with mould and rust.
And oh! this place, while it seems so near,
Is farther away than the moon;
Though our purpose is fair, yet we never get there—
To the land of "pretty soon."

The road that leads to that mystic land
Is strewn with pitiful wrecks,
And the ships that have sailed for its shining strand
Bear skeletons on their decks.
Tho' near it seems in fancy's dreams,
It is further at night than at noon;
Oh, let us beware of that land down there—
The land of "pretty soon."

Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

The Evangelization Society.

In the course of a newly-issued paper Mr. John Wood, hon. sec., writes: "Scarcely a morning passes without our receiving many letters of encouragement, of the work in which the Society is engaged with such signal tokens of blessing. Our first letter is from the extreme north of England, viz., from the county of Durham, in which a friend writes:—

"We are delighted to say that our new and larger building has been as full as our smaller one was sixteen years ago; indeed, it has never been so crowded. On Sunday evenings it has been densely packed, side-rooms and passages being also crammed. The whole district seems to have been stirred. One man in the village—and he a prominent one—who makes no profession of religion, has been heard inviting people to the meetings, coming himself. The mission has certainly made a great stir, yet it is a district usually indifferent to the claims of God. We have had what we have been praying and longing for. As to the results, we wish to speak with all caution, but as far as man can see, it has been very productive of fruit."

From Cranbrook:—"Mr. J——'s work among us has been a great blessing to many. Several in whom I have had special interest, and whose conversion I have daily expected, have decided during the mission. For such I have great hope, having no fear of the danger of slipping away which is so common in large missions, because the whole of our work has been carried on quietly and thoroughly. Your evangelist suited in every particular, and was the very man I should have chosen for a mission in this town. Straight, bold, fearless, with a winning note, he has won the hearts of pastor and people. We are deeply indebted to your Society for your wise choice of a man."

The following facts may be of interest: Number of places supplied with evangelists annually, between 1,100 and 1,200; meetings taken annually, about 20,000; evangelists used, about 250; annual attendances, between two and three millions; cost per meeting, about 10s. 6d.

Soldiers at Pirbright.

A WORK very fruitful in blessing is being carried forward by Rev. W. E. Wells (Baptist Soldiers and Sailors' Society) in various military centres, chiefly amongst the regiments of Guards, at the depôt, and at the well-known London barracks.

If the meetings are sometimes small, scarcely a week passes without some fine young fellow seeking Christ, or remaining behind for prayer. At the Surrey Depôt, numbers have assembled in the Anglican vestry or other room in barracks, and many seasons of soul-refreshing have been experienced.

A father writes gratefully recording the great change in his son. A soldier writes to tell of the thankful praise of himself, his wife, and two little ones who rejoice in the love of God revealed in Jesus Christ. These are typical instances. Mr. Wells' aim is to strengthen the men in the truth, and fortify them against existing evil.

Without exception, the officers have shown sympathy and rendered help, thus making the heart of the worker glad and praiseful.

The Secretary of State for War, with other authorities, has granted a piece of land at Pirbright Camp for the erection of an iron room, which is essential for the carrying on of the work.

The building and furnishing will cost £200, and here Bible-classes, Sunday afternoon meetings, and other necessary services, will be held to further and strengthen the good work. Mr. Wells' address is 49, Cornwall Road, W.

A Missionary Need.—Mr. P. L. Clarke, a missionary from the Congo, and who is at present on furlough, seeks to arouse deeper interest among friends at home in the efforts which are being made to evangelize in this region. Help towards securing a magic lantern to illustrate his lectures on life and work in Congo Land will be gratefully received. Address—Harley House, Bow Road, E.

Reception to General Booth.

PROBABLY never was the Royal Albert Hall filled with a more enthusiastic or picturesque audience than that which crowded every available corner on Monday evening. The occasion was the reception of General Booth on his return from a tour of over five months in America. Even with accommodation for over nine thousand people, it was found necessary to limit the attendance of officers and members of the Salvation Army itself to representative detachments; and after every effort had been made to welcome outside friends who desired to show their good will, large numbers of applications for tickets had been declined.

The stalls were filled with workers wearing sashes of the Army's special colours—red, yellow, and blue—who gathered round banners indicating that they belonged to the Women's Social department, the Cadet Corps, the Junior or Adult Soldiers' sections, &c. The orchestra was occupied by women wearing dresses characteristic of various Continental and Eastern lands. In connection with the musical festival, of which the first portion of the proceedings consisted, the presence of a number of bands provided attractive variety. The various hymns were sung with the greatest possible heartiness; and, if some of the voices were not marked by special tunefulness, there could be no doubt that a true song of praise was rising up to God.

The appearance of the General, who wears well his seventy-four years, was the occasion of a special outburst of applause; and then a fine spectacular display took place as—headed by the Chief of the Staff and Mrs. Booth—detachments of the various sections of the Army advanced to greet and welcome their beloved head, saluting him as they passed on behalf of their fellow-labourers. Among prominent figures were Commissioners Coombs, Pollard, Nicol, Howard Carleton, and Railton; with Colonels Hay, Wilson, Eadie, Reed, and Mrs. Colonel Hay. First of the representatives of the Women's Social Work was Commissioner Cox, while Colonel and Mrs. Sturgess were in the front for corresponding efforts among men. The helpers at the Hadleigh Land and Industrial Colony were headed by Colonel and Mrs. Lamb.

The fact was announced that the contributions to the Self-Denial Fund from the United Kingdom had this year amounted to £55,170 18s. 11¼d., an amount which establishes a new record in the list of the Army's achievements, representing an increase of £6,000.

The address by General Booth was full of thanksgiving to God for the things he had been privileged to see in the Western Hemisphere. A personal and touching interest was introduced as he referred to meetings with his daughter, the Field Commissioner in Canada; as well as with Commander and Consul Booth-Tucker, who are at the head of the organization in the United States.

He could report well of the Salvationists in both countries. They were glad to see him; and he did not think that the welcome they gave him in New York Harbour, and repeated in Toronto and elsewhere along the route, could well be outdone. In addition to affection for himself, he brought the assurance of the love of the officers and soldiers in America for their British comrades. They stood together in devotion to God, in loyalty to the principles of the Army, in determination to carry out its orders and regulations, and in the task of furnishing their share of the men and means required for carrying on the Salvation War throughout the world.

Thankfulness was expressed for the cordial reception accorded by the newspaper, religious, artizan, and "better-off" worlds. He had come back convinced that there was a great future before the Army in the New World. There is something about the peculiar make-up of the American that fits the Salvation Army. He had, however, returned to the old country with his heart as full of love for it as ever, wide-awake to his great responsibilities, and determined by the grace of God to meet them up to the level of his ability.

Missionary Demonstration.

"REGIONS BEYOND" ENTERPRISES.

REVIEWING the history of the home and foreign missionary enterprises which have emanated from Harley House, Dr. Harry Guinness only repeats what is acknowledged by all who are familiar with the work when he says:—"If the story of all the answered prayers could find a fitting record, if the marvels of Divine guidance and provision could be marshalled before our gaze, we should have as striking an example of modern miracle as could well be found. Surely the vitality of a missionary movement which has outlived the pressure and difficulties of so many years can alone be found in the Divine heart of compassion for the perishing, and the upbearing strength of the arm of God." It was, therefore, with a consciousness of the praise and thanksgiving due to Almighty God that the Directors and Foreign Councils of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union invited friends and supporters to assemble at Exeter Hall on Monday last, to participate in the anniversary celebrations.

For the afternoon gathering a large number came together, Mr. T. A. Denny presiding. Mrs. Newell, who has seen service in Cuzco, described what had been undertaken and accomplished there and in other parts of Peru. Other speakers were Mrs. Ruskin and Mr. and Mrs. Gamman, from Bongandanga, who told of much encouraging progress in the work on the Upper Congo. Rev. F. S. Webster gave the address to the workers, offering some wise and profitable counsel. A conversazione was succeeded by an enthusiastic meeting in the Large Hall, which was all but crowded. Lord Kinnaird, who was in the chair, voiced the gratitude to God felt by all, that He had imparted health and strength to those responsible for directing the enterprises of the Union. The record of Harley House was a testimony to the continuity of the goodness of God, and it is fervently hoped that 1903 will witness even a larger measure of Divine blessing on the undertakings of the society.

Mr. Algernon E. Ruskin related some of his experiences in Bongandanga. He reiterated the truth that there can be no success without sacrifice, and recalled the sufferings of the pioneers in the work in Congo Land. But the laying down of their lives had been followed by others being raised up to continue their labours, the fruits of which are being manifested to-day. One of the most recent developments is the translation of the Scriptures into the Lomongo language, and the speaker asked the chairman to accept the first copy of St. Mark's Gospel.

While the absence of the founder and director of the Union was regretted, the reappearance of Dr. Harry Guinness was the occasion of much rejoicing, and it was pleasing to note how complete has been his recovery from so serious and protracted an illness. His report of the work of the Union was one of unique interest, showing that during the year additional stations on the Congo have been opened up, and the reconstructed steamer Livingstone has been launched. Since the last anniversary thirteen missionaries have been sent out—the largest number in any year. In far-away Congo Land some 1,500 children are gathered daily in the mission schools of the Union, and one of the most interesting limelight views, with which Dr. Guinness' report was illustrated, was a group of these little darkies with Mrs. Ruskin in the centre.

Illustrations of the efforts which are being made in Cuzco, Peru, followed, and attention was called to the project of the missionaries there who have decided to perpetuate the memory of their late beloved colleague—Mr. Newell—by fitting up and furnishing a hall for the meetings. Turning to India Dr. Guinness presented a painful contrast between Christian organization and effort in that empire and our own land. England has one-tenth the population of India, yet fifteen times as many ministers. Other phases of the Harley House work, at home and abroad, were expounded, and the meeting closed with a timely and devotional address by Rev. J. W. Ewing.

About Books.

LIFE OF EDWARD WHITE.

REV. EDWARD WHITE was in many respects a remarkable man. His piety was transparent, and his intellectual power great; his modesty also was as charming as his influence was far-reaching. Mr. Frederick Ash Freer, who for some years had the privilege of association with Mr. White in Church fellowship and Christian work, and enjoyed his intimate friendship until life's close, has produced a biography of great interest and value, with the title, Edward White: His Life and Work. (6s. net. Elliot Stock.)

Those who regarded Mr. White as simply a doctrinaire, ready to criticise others or contend for unpopular views, will find much to surprise them in this handsome volume. The portrait which appears as frontispiece gives promise of the story of a whole-souled, large-hearted man, who was a pastor as well as a theologian, a philanthropist as well as a controversialist. A Free Churchman from conviction, Mr. White exercised the ministry for nearly sixty years, and for about five-sixths of that period in the Metropolis, where he was held in high esteem by thinkers and workers of all denominations, and so honoured by his immediate friends as to be called to the chair of the Congregational Union of England and Wales.

Mr. Freer has endeavoured to make his book as much as possible a self-revelation on the part of its subject; and certain it is that the letters and journals which are here reproduced enable the reader to see the man as he actually was—shrewd and strenuous, courteous and cultured. A Christian of high principle and unswerving purpose, believing that he served the Lord both in controversy and in the more practical engagements of life, Edward White was beloved by many who differed from him on points of doctrine, and was followed in ministerial practice by such as diverged widely from him on eschatological questions.

Among the letters given in this volume are some which Mr. White wrote to The Christian in the later years of his life—on Scripture Study and Interpretation, and the Locality of the Pentecostal Outpouring of the Spirit; his view on the latter subject being that the outpouring took place in the Temple precincts, in fact, in Solomon's Portico. Mr. White's distrust of the Higher Criticism was enunciated with vigour, and in terms that were reasonable and just. Taken as a whole, this volume is singularly attractive. The practical worker will find therein an outline of approved methods as applied by a strong man; to the student the book will come as an important contribution to the history of dogma in the nineteenth century.

Messrs. Cassell are publishing, in fortnightly parts, (6d. net) their excellent work, Familiar Wild Birds, by W. Swaysland. Enriched with Notes on Birds' Eggs, by Richard Kearton, F.Z.S., and coloured plates by Archibald Thorburn, and others, this is a very attractive publication. The twenty parts will contain 160 plates, which are life-like representations. Each illustration is accompanied by four pages of text descriptive of the birds, with information as to their habits, appearance, and the districts in which they are found.

Good service has already been rendered by previous editions of Rev. J. Heywood Horsburgh's "Do Not Say," and we trust its appearance in a new and enlarged edition means that the book is now setting out on a fresh career of usefulness. Missionaries and others who are met with excuses for the neglecting of the heathen, will find all the usual trite sayings, as well as more out-of-the-way objections, answered by one who knows them well. The plea for workers is powerful and far-reaching, and if this book could be circulated widely among young Christians, the result would be an awakening to a new and fuller sense of responsibility. (3d. Marshall Brothers.)

In connection with the approaching celebration of the centenary of the Sunday School Union, the story of the period has been put into most concise and attractive form by the senior honorary secretary, Mr. W. H. Groser—A Hundred Years' Work for the Children. (2s. 6d. S. S. U.) The portraits, and there is a long series of them, revive many memories of men who were leaders in the good work, and who have now passed to their reward, while at the same time reminding us of our obligations to some who are still with us. Those who are unacquainted with the field which is occupied, will be surprised at the many-sidedness of an organization which is too often understood to fill only a narrow groove. Officials and speakers at meetings will find here the facts they want; but teachers, parents, and indeed, all who are interested in the highest welfare of the boys and girls, will also find this a deeply interesting volume.

Mr. J. Ball has experienced blessing, particularly among the young people, at Aylsham ; a number professed faith in the Lord Jesus.

A three-days' mission has been conducted in the Congregational Chapel, Hurstmonceux, Sussex, by Mr. Pouncey, of the Evangelization Society. Much blessing has accompanied the services, and both pastor and people thank God for the good accomplished.

John Branton, Pastor.

A correspondent writes :—"An eight-days' mission, conducted by Miss Huxtable in connection with the Kensal Town Branch of the Y.W.C.A., was most helpful to Christians, and about fifty souls professed conversion. We praise God for His presence and power which were manifested in the midst."

In connection with the Temperance Mission recently conducted by Mr. Tennyson Smith in the Town Hall. Grimsby, 540 persons signed the following "Temperance Ironsides" pledge : — "As a Christian abstainer I pledge myself to use my influence to aid Churches of Christ to free themselves from all complicity with the liquor traffic."

Rev. W. G. Pope, of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union, has conducted a very encouraging week of special services at Hillsborough Baptist Church, Sheffield. The members have been greatly helped by the Bible readings, and souls have been led to Christ by the earnest Gospel preaching of God's servant. The concluding missionary lecture was greatly appreciated.

A very encouraging fortnight's mission has been held at Cranford Baptist Chapel (Pastor A. H. B. Cook), conducted by Mr. H. Collins, of the Evangelization Society. Many have professed conversion, the church was expectant, and God has not disappointed. Most encouraging to the missioner were the testimonies given by friends at the closing praise meeting to the effect that nearly thirteen years ago, when Mr. Collins was holding a mission there, they gave their hearts to the Lord.

An eleven-days' mission, full of interest and blessing, has just been conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne at Immanuel Baptist Church, Southsea. The week evening meetings were well attended, and at some of the Sunday services the chapel was so crowded that many who came could not gain entrance. The seven afternoon Bible readings were much appreciated, and were well attended. About one hundred people gave in their names as inquirers, and it is believed that many more will yet sign and return the inquirer's cards. C.

Rev. W. Bryan Brown, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, has concluded a very effective ten-days' mission in the parish of Hurdsfield, near Macclesfield, of which Rev. W. Laycock is vicar. All the services were well attended, and the mission aroused a fervent feeling of religious interest, which cannot but be attended with beneficial results. Each afternoon and evening the mission preacher distributed tracts dealing with the subject of his addresses, and a large number of memorial cards were given away on the last day of the mission, many personally thanking him for the benefits they had received as a result of his efforts.

An eight-days' Mission has been held at Clarendon Mission Hall, Notting Hill, by the Angel Brothers and Mr. James Keene. The meetings were well attended, and the Holy Spirit's presence and power were felt each evening. The preaching was plain and direct. Homely illustrations were used, and altogether it was such that working people could well understand. Mr. Keene sang very earnestly each evening. It will interest those friends who have been praying for this Mission, as a result of a reference in The Christian, to know that God owned His Word, and that a number sought salvation. The whole work has received blessing.

Charles Bayly, City Missionary.

A week's mission has been held at Warblington Street Mission and Institute, Portsmouth, by Mr. W. Copley Steane. The attendances were good, and many souls were led to Christ. The rapt attention of the children afforded evidence of the interest that was aroused. One evening Mr. Steane promised prizes to the boy and girl who respectively brought in an object with the most apt quotation from Scripture. One girl brought a cup, with the text Matt. xxvi. 39, and a boy brought a small red banner inscribed with the word "Love," and the text, Canticles ii. 4. Altogether there were about thirty objects with most appropriate texts. Mr. Steane manifested a special aptitude for dealing with the young people, who, in their turn, were drawn to him. The adult meetings were also well attended, and several professed faith in Christ. Good work is being done at the Institute, which is situated in the poorest district of Portsmouth. The police say that since it has been established their work in the neighbourhood is considerably lessened. C. C. Comber, Superintendent.

Church of England.

Archdeacon Sinclair is to preach at Christ Church, Endell Street, W.C., on Sunday, April 5, at 7 p.m.

Rev. Canon R. B. Girdlestone is retiring from St. John's, Downshire Hill, at midsummer, on the completion of his fourteenth year of ministration there.

The London headquarters of the "Christian Scientists," have been acquired by the Church Army. The premises adjoin the block of buildings near Marble Arch already occupied by the Society, and are required for the extension of the headquarters and training homes. Including necessary alterations, this will cost about £10,000.

The Bishop of Gloucester (Dr. Ellicott) has been presented with a congratulatory address, signed by nearly 1,000 clergy and church officials of the diocese, on his having completed forty years of episcopal service. There was a very large attendance of clergy and laity. The Dean of Gloucester presided. The Archbishop of Canterbury sent his "glad and grateful congratulations on the fulfilment of so many years of strenuous and faithful service to Church and realm"

An excellent view of the ancient church of St. Giles, Cripplegate, E.C., is now obtainable, the City Corporation having removed the old shops which for nearly 300 years shut in the building. The land in front of the church is of considerable value, and it is hoped that some arrangement may be arrived at whereby only a small portion of it need be reoccupied by business premises. Mr. Deputy Baddeley has offered to place a statue of Milton on the land formerly occupied by the shops.

At Rye Park Mission, Hoddesdon, Herts, (Rev. W. H. Wood, curate in charge), the iron church is crowded, and the one room available for a Sunday-school is overcrowded. Mr. Wood is endeavouring to secure a site on which to erect suitable school premises. A "Palestine Exhibition" is being organized in connection with the effort, and is to be held in the Drill Hall, Ware, April 14-17. Mr. Wood says, "No other denomination has a place of worship among our 1,700 working people.

Congregational.

Rev. H. M. Hughes has been elected minister of the Welsh Tabernacle, King's Cross, W.C.

Rev. C. Silvester Horne has accepted the post of superintendent of the mission centre at Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham Court Road, W.

The office of president of the Lancashire Independent College, Manchester, has been accepted by Rev. Professor Adeney, of New and Hackney Colleges.

The manual of Carrs Lane Church, Birmingham (Rev. J. H. Jowett), shows there are 1,088 members on the church roll, compared with 1,044 in January, 1902. The general receipts were £2,757. Contributions to the London Missionary Society amounted to £640.

During the past four months the Sussex Congregational Union has conducted services in the North Street Hall, Hailsham. Recently Revs. C. New, T. Towers, and A. T. Saville met a small company for the formation of a Church. After enrolling members, the Lord's Supper was observed and the first Church meeting held.

Mr. Bernard Turner, of the L.M.S., and who is to sail for Central Africa within a few days, is a member of a family in which the missionary spirit is strikingly manifest. His father is Rev. G. Lyon Turner, of Algernon Road, Lewisham, who was chairman of the Metropolitan Auxiliary of the L.M.S. a year or two ago; his sister is Miss Ethel Turner, whose work among the Bhotiyas of the Himalaya district has roused great interest in missionary circles; and his elder brother is Dr. G. Reynolds Turner, who went out two years ago to start the medical mission in Hui-an, South China.

Rev. C. P. Way, of Sarisbury, Southampton, has recently been the recipient of a tricycle, the gift of Mr. C. T. Montefiore, whose estate is in this flourishing village, and who, though a Jew, has always shown a deep interest in the minister and congregation. The pastor will find the machine of great service to him in his work, especially now that he has undertaken the hon. superintendence of the handsome new church at Locksheath, in addition to his own charge. This building, erected largely through the generosity of Mr. B. Nicholson, of Gosport, was opened on January 15 last, without a congregation or any organization whatever, and already has a congregation of over two hundred, with close on one hundred scholars in the Sunday school. A Church will be formed in the course of a week or two with a membership of forty or fifty, twenty of whom have been recently brought in by means of a gracious revival, which is still going on.

Baptist.

Rev. B. J. Gibbon reports a membership of 604 at Bloomsbury Chapel, W.C. "What is very satisfactory is the fact that the overwhelming majority of the newcomers (75 out of 104) have joined us on a first profession of their Christian faith, and that they come from all branches of the church's work—not a few from our mission hall." Mr. Gibbon adds that "the condition and outlook of the church at the commencement of this year are more satisfactory than I have ever known them." For all purposes £2,908 was raised during the year.

The annual meeting of Haddon Hall, Bermondsey New Road, S.E. (president, Mr. W. Olney), has just been held, Mr. S. Barrow, J.P., presiding. The report states : "The twelve months just finished has been one of the most fruitful in spiritual results which God has ever given to the work. During the seventeen months since the new hall was opened we have baptized sixty-four." After pointing out that "a large number of friends who have found the Saviour amongst us" have settled elsewhere, the reports proceeds :—"In our Sunday-school also are a large number of children who, we believe, have received the grace of God during the twelve months, for their changed lives testify to the fact, but who are yet too young to receive the permission of their parents for baptism and church membership. These spiritual results are due to God graciously fulfilling His promise to answer prayer. It is an ordinary thing for over 100 persons to assemble for prayer, both on the Tuesday and Saturday evenings. Our present membership is 325."

Sister Vera, of the One-by-One Prayer Union, has just concluded a very successful prayer mission at the Almond Street Baptist Church, Newport, Mon. Commencing on Sunday morning, March 22, at 9.45, she addressed four or five meetings of young people in the afternoon and evening, and at 7.30 addressed the church on the advantages of adopting the principles of the One-by-One method of prayer. On Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday afternoons and evenings Sister Vera conducted and spoke at well-attended meetings of earnest Christians. At all the gatherings the power of God's Holy Spirit was very manifest, and the message went home to the hearts of the hearers. The subjects produced great heart searching, and will be the means of increasing the activity of the Church workers, and the large Sunday school with an increased unity for special and definite prayer. During the mission Sister Vera gave several helpful addresses to young people, and at the close it was gratefully acknowledged that the Lord had indeed visited His people. Sister Vera's visit to this church will never be forgotten by those who had the privilege of attending these meetings.

Methodist.

The Wesley Deaconess Home at Ilkley is, after Conference, to have Dr. Stephenson's undivided attention. About 100 deaconesses are now at work. Two are in Johannesburg, two are in Ceylon, and the rest are working in connection with missions and circuits in this country.

The returns of the Primitive Methodist churches in Great Britain for the Connexional year which has just closed show that three districts—Norwich, Bristol, and Grimsby—have a united decrease of thirteen, the other circuits showing an increase of 2,664, making the net gain 2,646. The largest increase (379) is for the Sunderland and Newcastle district. The membership for the entire connexion is now nearly 200,000.

The quarterly meeting of the West London Mission was held last week, Rev. Charles Ensor Walters in the chair. The reports of the state of the work of the Mission were most encouraging. The attendance at the classes has risen. The membership has gone up this quarter by about seventy, although in the special circumstances of the year only a small increase can be counted for the last twelve months. Strong testimony was borne to the zeal of Mr. Walters in the conduct of the work since Mr. Hughes's death.

For a long time the Sheffield Wesleyan (Albert Hall) Mission has been in a difficulty with regard to the establishment of a permanent home for the work. Mr. Thomas Cole has generously offered a fine block of premises adjoining the old Norfolk Street Chapel, and worth some £6,000, on condition that the committee secured the transfer of the Norfolk Street premises to the Mission as well. This has now been happily accomplished. Should Conference sanction the scheme, it is probable that at an early date the whole site will be cleared.

Presbyterian.

Dr. Monro Gibson will leave England early in May for a much-needed change in Canada, and will be absent from the St. John's Wood pulpit until the third week of July.

A medical mission has been started in a poor district in connection with Prospect Street Church, Hull (Rev. J. J. Mackay). Two doctors who are identified with the congregation are giving their services. The Church reports an income of £1,509, and a membership of 522.

An enthusiastic missionary demonstration was held on Wednesday last week in the Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool. The chief speakers were Revs. Hugh Black (of Edinburgh), Alex. Connell (of Regent Square), and Dr. J. C. Gibson—who in the course of a stirring address spoke of his twenty-nine years of mission work in China.

The first public meeting of the Newcastle Presbytery Temperance Council was held on Saturday week, when a large audience assembled. Rev. Joseph Rorke, president, said that in the Presbytery there are at present thirty-two ministers and 170 elders who have given in their names as abstainers, and the churches are taking an active interest in temperance work.

Fallen Asleep.

On March 25, at Tottenham, Rev. William Turner, widely known and esteemed for his thirty-two years' devoted ministry in the Primitive Methodist Connexion, aged sixty. As a preacher and lecturer he was in constant demand in many parts of the country, particularly in the Midlands, where most of his ministerial career was spent.

Notices.

Rev. F. James, who has just returned to this country from China (and is now residing at "Degan," Naylor Road, Whetstone, Middlesex), desires to thank the unknown friend who has for eighteen years regularly sent him The Christian.

In the Light of the Resurrection. The Resurrection of our Lord illuminated the whole track of His earthly life, and gives proportion and meaning to events which could never, without that light, be understood. After the Transfiguration He imposed silence upon the three men who witnessed it, "until the Son of Man be risen again from the dead." Then they might speak. The Resurrection is the summit of our Lord's work, and from it—and it alone—is it possible to view the whole of what lies beneath. It is just because Rationalists and others explain away the Resurrection that they find the figure of the Saviour a standing enigma to them. He who takes his stand upon Resurrection ground, will soon perceive the beauty of all Christian truth.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey. We recently reported the serious illness of Mr. I. D. Sankey. General physical exhaustion, combined with disease of the optic nerve, has brought the well-known evangelist very low. Much prayer has ascended to our Heavenly Father on behalf of the sufferer, and it is a joy to report some improvement. A cablegram despatched to us from New York on Monday last was in the following terms :—

Health slowly improving. Blind; hope for right eye.

We are sure that many of our readers will continue in prayer to God that, if it be His will, the life and powers of our dear friend may be preserved for further service.

Pastor and Evangelist. At his first meeting with his people, after an absence of seven months, Rev. F. B. Meyer declared last Thursday that, as one outcome of his wanderings, he had resolved to devote himself more closely than ever to his pastoral work, and to the development of the various congregational agencies. Having gathered much from his contact with others, he believes this may be carried home with profit to his own congregation. Many can testify, again, that what he learned and experienced at home has borne rich fruit among strangers. We have seen recently, in the cases of Mr. Meyer and Dr. Torrey, that the gift of an evangelist may be united with another, and even brief intervals in pastoral or other work used in this way may be signally owned of God. There may be a useful lesson here for many of our churches. We doubt not that there are ministers elsewhere to whom such a time would be one of refreshment and invigoration, while the after-result upon their own congregations would be most beneficial.

The Problem of the City Church. The acceptance by Rev. C. Silvester Horne of the post of superintendent of a great mission church at Whitefield's Tabernacle, opens up a new chapter in the problem of the "city church." It is an example which we hope will be extensively followed. We have for long contended that the very best men should be appointed to the most difficult spheres. It is easy enough for an ordinary man to succeed in a suburb, where people more naturally attend a place of worship, but for the central town or city church, men of exceptional power are required. Where money is a difficulty, there must be, as in the present instance, support given by the larger body behind. It is only in thorough co-operation that these central and strategic positions can be held for Christ.

Lord Halifax and Anti-Clericalism. The article by Lord Halifax in this month's Nineteenth Century clearly shows that the party to which he belongs fails to understand the real meaning of that anti-clericalism against which he and they so vehemently protest. His lordship sees in this modern movement an evidence that the world is repudiating Divine teaching. It is rather a proof that people have at last discovered the difference between gold and dross; and, while many of them, unhappily, are not eager for the gold, they are determined not to have the dross. We deeply regret that any reject Divine teaching, but the present religious indifference is largely due to reaction against the assumptions and superstitions of priestism.

The Aim of High Anglicanism. When he deals directly with the aim of the party he represents, Lord Halifax speaks without ambiguity. Protestantism is a lodger within the Church, "an anomaly within itself hardly tolerable, which hampers the Church in her office of proclaiming the truth at every turn." The English Bishops are charged with losing "all sense of the duty" they owe "to the primate of Christendom" (the Pope!). The ordination of Roman priests is to be accepted as legitimate. "The English Communion Service is on precisely the same principle as the Roman Mass." It is as well, after all, to have such a candid statement. We know exactly where we are. For Romanizers there is only one honourable way out of the difficulty—to go to Rome. But they are grievously mistaken if they imagine the English people will tolerate the present sinister attempts to subject them again to the Papal yoke.

The only Priesthood. In face of the growing boldness of the sacerdotalist, it is well to consider continually how far the claims of the priest can be supported from the New Testament. The men there recorded as having done the work of rebuking, comforting, expounding the Scriptures, warning, threatening, or administering charity, are called, and call themselves with absolute indifference, deacons, bishops, elders, evangelists, according to what they are doing at the time of speaking. Mr. Ruskin has said :—

There is one thing which, as officers, or as separate from the rest of the flock, they never call themselves—which it would have been impossible, as so separate, they ever should have called themselves—that is, Priests. . . .

All believers are priests unto God ; they are God's heritage (or clergy) through faith in the blood of Christ.

Romanism at Home. An esteemed correspondent writes, with reference to Dr. Robertson's remarkable book, "The Roman Catholic Church in Italy" :—

Allow me to urge the widespread dissemination of Dr. Robertson's book. If our statesmen and the clergy of the Established Church could be induced to read it, how differently the Church of Rome would be regarded! If the eyes of the English nation could be opened to the iniquities of Romanism, those foreign prisons for English girls, which are outside the law of the land, would not be allowed a footing here.

The Oracles of God. The large attendance at Dr. Pierson's course of lectures should afford great encouragement. Hearers will find much preparatory help by reading the Doctor's very thoughtful volume, Many Infallible Proofs (2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d., Morgan & Scott). It is strongly recommended by the Bible League, and is one of the most effective antidotes to the agnosticism, scepticism, and infidelity which are so disastrously affecting the young minds of this generation.

"Things as They Are." Those who know Miss Amy Wilson-Carmichael and her work in India are looking forward with keen interest to the appearance of her new book, "Things as They Are." (6s. Morgan & Scott.) Having read the sheets with great care, we are expecting much good to result from the publication (announced for April 21). While fully admitting that many social and other improvements have been effected in India during our own time, the pages show to what an alarming extent sin and sorrow prevail among the people. "Things as they are" in India show the power of the devil's rule in the land, and should provoke the children of God to "work while it is day" in sending forth the light and truth of the Gospel.

The Living Link with Missions. That veteran, Rev. Charles Williams, of Accrington, who, at seventy-five years of age, has undertaken one of the most important enterprises of his life—that of visiting the churches on behalf of the great missionary work—has just been giving impressions of his campaign. Inter alia, he emphasizes one thing which, we are persuaded, would do as much as anything else to keep alive the interest in missions. He says :—

It is well that a Sunday-school should have its own native evangelist or day-school teacher to support: that a church able to meet the charge should maintain its own missionary or missionaries: that a Sunday-school class or C.E. Society should subscribe for its own orphan boy or girl, or Congo boy, who is being trained for service. This deepens interest, and makes it personal.

Of course, it is not at all a new suggestion. Many churches already adopt it. What is wanted is the extension of the principle. Any who think it cannot be undertaken by single, small churches, should read the story of the Moravian Missions, where they will comprehend the greatness of this kind of possibility. It is certain that no missionary magazine or missionary deputation (necessary as these are) could forge so vital a link with the foreign field as this.

A Lesson from Birmingham. In connection with the agitation for the diminution of licences in Birmingham, a scathing description is given in Drawn unto Death (Birmingham News and Printing Co.) of the state of affairs in one of the plague-spots of the city, known as the Floodgate Street Area :—

Among a population of 7,000 there are forty-five public-houses, being one for every 155 persons (only eighty-eight of whom are over eighteen years of age), the average for the city being one to 243. Of the 7,000, over 2,500 persons have within a year claimed the attention of the authorities or charitable agencies.

With abject poverty and misery on every hand, it is admitted by the trade that the expenditure in the public-houses amounts to 2s. per adult per week. Mr. Arthur Chamberlain contends, however, that this would not give a living wage to the publicans, and the real figure is probably at least 3s. It is well for the public to know what use is being made of licences for which compensation will be asked. The Government is wavering in its attitude to compensation ; and the present position calls for the closest attention.

Commercial Integrity. The exhaustive judgment delivered by Mr. Justice Buckley in the matter of the Telescriptor Syndicate deals in no sparing manner with some plain principles affecting commercial morality. The Times says that this judgment discloses a state of affairs which, unfortunately, will not surprise those who are at all acquainted with the ways of the company promoter. The fact that these ways have become so common, and are so frequently winked at, only adds to the gravity of the situation. The many revelations lately in the courts of the manner in which a great deal of business is carried on shows how little conscience enters into many commercial transactions. The mad haste to be rich at any cost will yet exact a fearful price from us in many ways, chiefly in the atrophy of the moral sense. Unscrupulous getting and contempt for God always go together. Our Lord's bitterest enemies were the Pharisees, of whom the evangelist says, "They were covetous, and they derided Him" (Luke xvi. 14). "Better is a little righteousness than great revenues without right" (Prov. xvi. 8).

Juvenile Smoking. Energetic steps are being taken in Canada to deal with this evil in view of the following statement :—

Evidence of the growth of this habit and its ruinous effects on girls as well as boys led the W.C T.U. of Canada to organize with the object of seriously grappling with the evil. Its circulars elicited replies from physicians, educators, and leading men throughout the country, showing that the practice was extending to boys and girls of all ages from eight years upwards. Three murders by youths in two years were attributed to the demoralising influences of cigarettes.

Many cases of utter mental and physical wreck are reported by doctors. In a number of public schools it is reported that there is secret cigarette smoking by girls, who carry the habit into their homes with the most serious consequences. Others, making no attempt at concealment, smoke in defiance of parental entreaties.

The Dominion Legislature has gone so far as to adopt a motion in favour of prohibiting the import and manufacture, as well as the sale, of cigarettes ; efforts to restrict the sale, merely, having failed. It remains to be seen whether so drastic a Bill will be allowed to pass. Certainly there is cause to save the children from themselves on both sides of the sea.

Easter Poems.

EASTER.

"The Lord hath triumphed gloriously,"
Hath travelled all alone,
Through each dark scene, 'gainst each dread foe
Till all hath been o'erthrown.

Above the silence of the tomb,
Above each grief and fear,
There comes His gracious, glad "all hail!"
Our listening souls to cheer.

Behold Him with adoring love,
And reverential awe ;
"All power" is given unto Him,
"All power" for evermore.

All power to save, all power to keep,
All power to sanctify ;
And then in "heavenly places" bright,
To crown eternally.

Rejoice, this glorious Easter morn ;
Thine shall the victory be,
O trusting soul, since He, thy Lord,
Hath triumphed gloriously.

THE PASCHAL LAMB.

Now let the world the message hear,
The Paschal Lamb is slain ;
Tho' no more offered year by year,
He hath not died in vain!

His precious life for us He gave,
That all might ransomed be ;
Then rose triumphant from the grave,
The pledge of victory.

Go, spread the tidings all around,
That life thro' Him is given ;
A Saviour hath for us been found
To ope' our way to Heaven!

He rose, and still for us He lives,
A light to shine within ;
For He the Holy Spirit gives
To cleanse our souls from sin.

And holiness of life thro' Him,
May yet our portion be :
In Christ, unless our sight be dim,
Our hope of heaven we see.

Then let our joyful praise abound,
The Lamb for us is slain ;
Go, spread the glad "Hosanna" round,
For Christ o'er all shall reign!

Clevedon, Somerset. Wm. Kitching.

"OUR PASSOVER."

"Christ, our Passover, is slain,"
Loud creation's wail!
Nature reels, awhile convulsed!
Rent the Temple's veil!

"Christ, our Passover, is slain"
Earth has sealed its doom ;
Once—the paradise of God,
Now the Saviour's tomb.

"Christ, our Passover, is slain,"
Conquering as He died ;
Now, in resurrection power,
Raised and glorified!

THE FEAST.

(1 Cor. v. 7).

We keep the feast—
A blest foretaste of paradise,
A feast upon a sacrifice,
A feast for which One paid the price,
In red-blood drops and agonies—
A costly feast!

We keep the feast—
So dear to those who know its worth,
Far sweeter than the sweets of earth,
Far gladder than the strains of mirth,
"God's plenty" in a land of dearth—
A bounteous feast!

We keep the feast—
A feast of peace for all distressed
By sin, who seek the Saviour's breast ;
A feast for souls new born and blest,
A feast of love, and deep heart-rest—
A fragrant feast!

We keep the feast—
Not merely at an Eastertide,
But here we revel and abide
With hearts each day more satisfied,
Till Christ shall draw us to His side—
For heaven's long feast!

"AS HE JOURNEYED."

It was the longest journey,
That trav'ller ever went,
When earthward from the glory,
The Saviour's steps were bent.
Before the world's foundation
The highest place He took,
Because that world had fallen,
The glory He forsook.

Midst all heaven's radiant beings,
Not one had stood so high,
Not one on earth so lowly,
As when He stooped to die.
He left the golden summit,
To tread the deep descent,
He fathomed deepest darkness,
When to the grave He went.

He passed the shining angels,
He passed earth's princes by,
Was numbered with transgressors,
And chose with them to die.
The Throne and all its glory—
He counted not the loss,
For joy that did await Him,
He thus endured the cross.

Because He stooped so lowly,
And death obedient bore,
His God doth high exalt Him,
The First for evermore.
Alone He left the brightness,
The dark'ning path to tread,
But in His glad ascension,
The members join their Head.

From highest point of heaven,
To lowest depth of earth,
That costly journey tells us,
What His redeemed were worth.
O, wondrous, wondrous journey,
He took for you and me!
That where He is in glory,
There might His loved ones be.

Lord Jesus, mightiest Trav'ller,
We marvel at Thy grace,
That Thou didst leave heaven's highest,
To take earth's lowest place ;
That Thou didst come where we were,
And bear our deepest need,
That we might sit where Thou art,
Yea, this was love indeed!

Ada R. Habershon.

CALVARY.

"It pleased the Lord to bruise Him."

"Smite the Shepherd!"—awful word!
Sin may not be put aside ;
Holy, holy, holy Lord!
Thy Son was crucified!
Yes ; He was slain by Thy decree,
That I from sin might ransom'd be—
Thy Son was crucified!

Sinless Offering for sin!
God forsakes Thee, men deride ;
Gall without and grief within—
Thy portion, Crucified!
For Thou wast slain for me, for me ;
Made sin that I might sinless be,
Like Thee, O Crucified!

God, the sinner's Substitute!—
Print of nail and pierced side
Seal the everlasting truth
That Thou wast crucified!
Yes ; Thou didst take the place for me
Of doom upon th' accursed tree,
When Thou wast crucified!

Law's dread penalty is paid,
Law's obedience satisfied ;
See the place where He was laid—
The Judge, the Crucified!
Lo! guilt is gone and I am free!
His judgment was to victory—
The Judge was crucified!

Father, Abba Father! Thou,
Whom the Son hath glorified!
Mine the access to Thee now,
Through Him the Crucified.
He wrought Thy will upon the tree,
The will that knits my heart to Thee.
In Him, the Crucified.

Put Thy sword into its sheath,
Sovereign God, whom man defied!
"Finished is the work"—of death,
In Christ, Thy Crucified.
For He was slain by Thy decree :
He bore the judgment wrath for me—
Thy Christ, the Crucified!

The Angel at the Tomb.

A THOUGHT FOR EASTER.

THE appearance of the angelic visitants at the tomb of our Lord fulfilled a three-fold purpose. First and foremost, their errand was to announce the resurrection of Jesus of Nazareth—"He is not here; He is risen." Second, they inspired comfort in the troubled hearts of those who loved Him—"Fear not ye!" "Be not affrighted!" Third, they drove terror into the hearts of His enemies—"The keepers did shake, and became as dead."

Puerile indeed were the efforts of men to retain Him in the grave, as they "made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch." Well might Pilate say, "Make it as sure as ye can"! But "the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it"—indicating fearlessness, triumph, and contempt for human strategy. He sat and waited—even as afterwards Christ Himself "sat down at the right hand of God, from henceforth expecting (awaiting) until His enemies be made His footstool."

The fact of His resurrection was beyond dispute—attested not only by His friends but by His enemies—those who had all to lose by admitting this "notable miracle" to be true, when it was declared at a place and time which rendered a false claim easy of disproof.

At this point of fact, commenced the parting of the ways. Here saint and sinner met, the one to rejoice, the other to fear; and thenceforth their ways increasingly diverged. One of the conditions of salvation is to "believe in thine heart that God raised Him from the dead" (Rom. x. 9). Belief—salvation and peace; disbelief—trembling and fear; these are the marks by which saint or sinner is known.

Have we not here a message for ourselves? Do the presence and witness of the angel bring comfort to our believing hearts? The same form whose "countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow" appeared to the eyes of each; yet how diametrically opposite the impression he conveyed. The keepers had faces white indeed, but they did not shine. The more they looked, the more they trembled, until they "became as dead." But, though fearful at first, the loving women soon dried their tears, and with great joy "did run to bring His disciples word."

What is the lesson of Easter to the world to-day? Is it not the same as in the olden time? Men may receive or spurn it as they will, but the unchanging fact remains the same; and their peace or unrest of heart is determined by their attitude towards it. With irresistible power the Apostles drove it home to hardened haughty souls at the outset of their ministry. Some became white with rage; others bowed in holy fear; but "God hath raised Him from the dead!" was ever the keynote of the preachers' word.

Yet whilst mentally assured of this epoch-making fact ourselves, do we always show before the world that it is a living fact indeed? To accept it as a doctrine, is one thing; to be experimentally impregnated with it, is another. If it is not a dynamic force in our hearts and lives, the ungodly may be expected to get the better of their fear, and treat it as an "old wives' fable." The followers of Christ—men and women alike—were as surprised as the keepers at the empty tomb. They had not anticipated so marvellous an event. The women "brought spices" to complete the embalming of the body; the disciples treated "their words as idle tales and believed them not." We may lament the indifference and scepticism of the man of the world, but is not this to some extent the outcome of our own? Not until the world recognises the practical results of our professed belief, will it realise that we possess something it wots not of. Only by our unshaken confidence will it be led to doubt its own security.

Our experiences may not be all cast in the same mould. Peter and John did not see the angels; they came too late. Neither did they at first see Jesus; He had left too early. John arrived at the tomb before Peter; but Peter entered in. The other nine apparently did not venture there at all, and of these Thomas doubted more than any. The women saw the angels, but not Jesus; Mary saw both—and she the greatest sinner. Yet all, save Judas, reaped the blessing of His rising. There is no condition of soul, save wilful rejection, that may not find its solace on the Easter morn. Experiences may differ, mental attitudes may vary, advantages may be denied to one that another enjoys; but for one and all the Sun of Righteousness arises with healing in His beams. "Therefore, let us not judge one another any more; but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way." For "every one of us shall give account of himself to God" (Rom. xiv. 13, 12).

Nor are we dependent upon the testimony of angels merely. The Lord Himself appeared. From the angel the disciples "knew in part," but with His appearance that which was in part was done away. So with us. Many influences may tend to establish and confirm our faith; but nothing short of the vision of Christ will render it unassailable. "Then were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord"—"With great power gave the Apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus; and great grace was upon all . . . possessors of lands and houses sold them . . . and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need" (Acts iv. 33-35). Here was practical Christianity indeed, of which the world could not help but take account.

Do those who have not seen Him "fear and quake"? If not, why not? Is it not because His people do not live in the assurance and joy of the Lord? Argument will fail; angelic testimony will only half-convince; but if the Lord Himself is truly represented by those who love His appearing, the world will be curious, will demand an explanation, and will wistfully inquire what it is that makes His people's face to shine.

Is not this worth living for? Let Easter be to us far more than an exchange of pretty cards, a few days' rest, or a brief sojourn by the sea. Let "the POWER of His resurrection" permeate our hearts and lives; then our own doubts and fears will flee; with gladness and great joy we shall pursue our daily calling; and men around us will come to fear, when they see that God is with us. And peradventure they shall seek Him too. G.

Queen Victoria's Desire.—The late Dean Farrar related with much interest a story showing the deep religious feeling of Victoria the Good. On one occasion, as one of Her Majesty's chaplains, while preaching before her at Windsor, he made the Second Advent of Christ the subject of his discourse. After the service, the Queen, always a most attentive listener, spoke to him on the topic which he had chosen, and said: "Oh, how I wish that the Lord might come during my lifetime!" "Why," asked Dr. Farrar, "does your Majesty feel this very earnest desire?" The Queen replied with quivering lips, and her whole countenance lighted by deep emotion, "I should so love to lay my crown at His feet!"

Humbled—Exalted.

BY REV. DAVID BARON.

In an exposition of Isaiah xlix., running in successive issues of his quarterly magazine, The Scattered Nation, Rev. David Baron presents much sound and timely teaching. Dealing with verses 7 to 12, in which the despised One at length receives the worship of princes, the writer says:—

THOUGH Maker and Ruler of the worlds, our Lord Jesus, during His life on earth, voluntarily subjected Himself to human laws and human authority; and at the end, the Jewish hierarchy—Pontius Pilate and Herod—treated Him as if He were wholly given over to their will. Did not Pilate say: "I have power to crucify Thee and I have power to release Thee," as if He were his bond-servant? And our Lord used no restraint, but simply answered: "Thou couldest have no power against Me, except it were given thee from above," and submitted Himself to the authority of the tyrant. Thus did the Son of God, for our salvation, "empty Himself" of His divine prerogatives, and "take upon Him-self the form of a servant . . . and being found in fashion as a man, humbled Himself, becoming obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross."

But, as there is no humiliation like that into which the Son of God descended, so is there no glory to be compared to His; and this is brought out in the second half of verse 7:—

> Kings shall see and arise,
> Princes and they shall worship,
> Because of Jehovah that is faithful;
> The Holy One of Israel who hath chosen thee.

Kings and princes "shall see" that the One whom man humbled, God has exalted; that He who was despised of man, and abhorred of the nation, is, after all, He whom the Holy One of Israel hath chosen; that in spite of their vain counsels, and their individual and united efforts, His kingdom progresses, and is destined to triumph—and they shall "arise" from their thrones in token of reverence, and shall signify their submission and allegiance by prostrating themselves before Him in worship; and all this "because of Jehovah that is faithful" to His covenants and promises, "even the Holy One," who will never draw back from His word, and shall, by espousing and vindicating His servants' cause, make it manifest in the sight of the whole world, that He hath chosen Him!

In a measure this has already been fulfilled. Because he hath humbled Himself, becoming obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, therefore also God hath highly exalted Him, and given unto Him the Name which is above every name; that in the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things on earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

Already, before the crucified Nazarene, kings must rise from their thrones, and princes fall in the dust; not, indeed, necessarily because their hearts have been subdued by His grace, or their eyes open to His essential glory as the Son of God, but because they have found out from experience that it is no longer safe to resist His power. But even though the obedience be feigned, and the worship be outward, it is still a testimony to Christ's exaltation, and to the faithfulnesss of Jehovah, in lifting Him out of the valley of humiliation, and appointing Him His "Firstborn, higher than the kings of the earth." But we are looking forward to a fuller, more visible, and universal fulfilment, when He, the "despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," shall be the acknowledged King over the whole earth, and when—

> He shall have dominion also from sea to sea,
> And from the river unto the ends of the earth.
> They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before Him;
> And His enemies shall lick the dust.
> The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents;
> The kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts;
> Yea, all kings shall fall down before Him;
> All nations shall serve Him." (Psa. lxxii. 8-11.)

The Wesley Bicentenary.—3.

By Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE,
Author of "George Whitefield, Field-Preacher."

WESLEY was a rigid and fearless disciplinarian. Many may and do object to the class-meeting as inquisitorial, and tending to produce unreality and even rank hypocrisy; but his object in starting it was that the members might cheer and encourage one another, and, above all, that any cases of backsliding and unworthy conduct might be speedily discovered, inquired into, and dealt with. He had a fear of unchecked and unreproved sin. The process of pruning was in his eyes altogether necessary and useful; dead branches must come down.

In trying to appraise the class-meeting at its true value, we must remember that while its open revelation of experience is positively terrifying to some natures, it is not so to others; it was not so to Wesley himself. As soon as he was converted, he told his experience; and he always seemed to live in the open air. He certainly could not be charged with squeamishness. The sins of the early times might differ in some respects from those of modern times; but that did not abolish the need for the true and faithful souls reproving, warning, rebuking, and, if need be, even cutting off the unfaithful. Every wise means must be employed to produce a sense of sin and a change of conduct; these failing, the Society must refuse fellowship to the unworthy. In his time Wesley seems to have done much of this hard work himself. He was fearless enough, and impartial enough, for any such task; and he called upon his preachers to be the same.

EARLY METHODIST DISCIPLINE.

The Society at Newcastle-on-Tyne was always a favourite with Wesley, but its condition often gave him serious concern. Thus as early as 1743 he expelled as many as sixty-four members for various faults; two for swearing, two for Sabbath-breaking, seventeen for drunkenness, two for retailing spirituous liquors, three for quarrelling, one for beating his wife, three for wilful lying, four for railing, one for laziness, and twenty-nine for lightness and carelessness.

How many churches would now cut off a member for selling spirituous liquors? And yet this trade is confessedly one of the greatest curses of the English people, and one of the worst hindrances to the spread of the Gospel abroad. Who ever hears of a church member being expelled for railing, or for laziness, or for lightness and carelessness? Oh, the Christian profession was a "serious" thing then. When anyone became a Christian, it used to be said that he had "become serious."

The faith of those days had something to bow the soul down as well as lift it up; it brought responsibilities with it which might not be lightly neglected. Whether Wesley would have tolerated the modern fashion of going from home at "the week end," perhaps travelling on Sunday to do it, and neglecting work and worship, may be safely answered in the negative. He would have seen something shocking in Sunday School teachers going off for a Sunday's pleasure without providing a substitute for their classes, leaving their children like parents without natural affection. The many forms of self-pleasing that abound in our day would have been marks of degeneracy, signs of worse disasters to follow, unless the grace of God should send a revival.

In 1788, at the age of eighty-five, he warmly commends one of his "assistants" for expelling those members who had married "ungodly persons—a real evil which we can never tolerate."

SIMPLICITY OF LIVING.

In this age that glorifies material possessions and sensuous pleasures, it is refreshing to come upon a Christian teacher who inculcates by word and example the duty and the loveliness of simple living, and who insists that laying up money is a sin. He rose early, ate and drank sparingly, worked hard, gave away all he made (supposed to have been between £20,000 and £30,000), and died a poor man—literally, not relatively or comparatively or metaphorically, poor. He never preached what he did not practise. It will be worth while hearing what he says about making money, saving money, and using money.

He points out that the graces which come into existence as soon as a man becomes a Christian, all tend to improve his worldly position. He becomes temperate, industrious, truthful, honest: and these make him valuable both as master and servant. These may be called the acquisitive graces. For all worldly purposes, a good man is more useful than a bad one. There are publicans who will only employ total abstainers. Simple goodness solves the hardest "problems" of society by never creating them. Vice or sin in some one, on the part of the poor or the rich, or both, is the root of the poverty problem, the land problem, and the housing problem. But while Christianity makes the individual a better money-making instrument, it seeks also to make him master of his money, a faithful steward of it, a loving, unselfish servant of all men. The appeal of money is to selfishness, and the sins to which it tempts are too seldom exposed and condemned; indeed, they are by the common ethical standard. Here and there, elect souls, like John Woolman, George Fox, and St. Francis, have seen far enough into the heart of Christianity and into the actual meaning of life to know that hoarding money is not acceptable to God or good for man.

Wesley said that in three score years he did not remember to have heard one sermon on the subject, neither had any author treated of it. Two or three had just touched upon it—he himself had touched upon it frequently in preaching; but now, he adds, "It is high time I should at length speak as strongly and explicitly as I can, in order to leave a full and clear testimony behind me whenever it pleases God to call me hence."

O ye Methodists, hear the word of the Lord! I have a message from God to all men; but to you above all. For above forty years I have been a servant to you and your fathers. And I have not been as a reed shaken by the wind; I have not varied in my testimony. I have testified to you the very same thing from the first day even until now. But who hath believed our report? I fear not many rich. I fear there is need to apply to some of you those terrible words of the Apostle: "Go to, now, ye rich men! weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire." Certainly it will, unless you both save all you can, and give all you can. But who of you hath considered this, since you first heard the will of the Lord concerning it?

A year later, at the age of 79, he writes:—

Money-lovers are the pest of every Christian society. They have been the main cause of destroying every revival of religion. They will destroy us if we do not put them away. A man not worth a shilling enters our Society. Yet he freely gives a penny a week. Five years after, he is worth scores of pounds; he gives a penny a week still. I must think this man covetous unless he assures me he bestows his charity some other way. For everyone is covetous whose beneficence does not increase in the same proportion as his substance.

THE DECEITFULNESS OF RICHES.

When Wesley was eighty-one years of age, he bore this sad testimony:—

Of all the temptations, none so struck at the whole work of God as the deceitfulness of riches; a thousand melancholy proofs of which I have seen within these last fifty years. I have not known three score rich persons, perhaps not half the number, during three score years, who, as far as I can judge, were not less holy than they would have been had they been poor. By riches I mean not thousands of pounds, but any more than will procure the conveniences of life. . . . Having gained and saved all you can, give all you can, else your money will eat your flesh as fire, and sink you to the uttermost hell! Oh, beware of laying up treasures upon earth! Is it not treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath?

His advice when he was eighty-four years of age has in it wisdom; which, if followed, would save fathers and mothers from bitter disappointment and their children from becoming useless worldlings:—

If you have a family, seriously consider before God how much each member of it wants, in order to have what is needful for life and godliness. And, in general, do not allow them less nor much more than you allow yourself. This being done, fix your purpose to gain no more. I charge you in the name of God, do not increase your substance! As it comes daily or yearly, so let it go; otherwise you lay up treasures upon earth. . . . You will have no reward in heaven for what you lay up; you will for what you lay out.

Mr. Cuff's Home-Coming.

HIS WORK IN SHOREDITCH.

AFTER an absence of seven months, Rev. William Cuff has returned to England in greatly improved health; and on Thursday last he was welcomed back to the Shoreditch Tabernacle by a very large gathering. The gladness with which Mr. and Mrs. Cuff were greeted was heightened by the fact that during their absence the work in connection with the Tabernacle has been well maintained, all the departments going on smoothly and prosperously. The people have kept well together, the pulpit having been supplied by Dr. Harry Guinness, Rev. E. G. Gange, Dr. M. Macgregor, and others. The tourists visited many of the chief towns, and also a large number of the churches, in Queensland, Victoria, New South Wales, Western Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand. Wherever they went, they were cordially received by ministers and people, and what they saw and heard made them regard the religious outlook as hopeful.

Prior to the evening meeting, at which Mr. G. Cartwright, one of the deacons, presided, Mr. and Mrs. Cuff met and shook hands with the friends in the large hall adjoining the chapel. At the later meeting, Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, in course of a brief address, said he came as an unbidden guest; he came because he felt he should like to be there on behalf of the Baptist Union and of the Baptist denomination, to tell Mr. and Mrs. Cuff how much they were loved. They looked on Dr. Maclaren as their greatest expositor, Dr. Clifford was their chief political exponent, and Mr. Cuff represented the best way of getting at, and of dealing with, the masses of the people.

Mr. Cartwright made sympathetic reference to the late Mr. W. R. Fox, one of Mr. Cuff's best helpers, who died in the Shoreditch Tabernacle some weeks ago while conducting a meeting. Mr. Fox was greatly interested in the mission work in the surrounding densely-populated neighbourhood.

There are now eight stations, and the work carried on in connection with them reaches large numbers of the poorest of the people in Bethnal Green and Shoreditch. The operations are far-reaching and effective, and worthy of that aid from outside friends which is at all times necessary. A large number of voluntary helpers give their services, and prove their fitness for steady aggressive work. Of these friends the late Mr. W. R. Fox was at once a leader and a guide. He and his brother, who survives him, made it a custom to invite the workers—some 250 persons—once a quarter to reunions.

Colony of Mercy for Epileptics.—The scheme for the establishment in Scotland of a Colony of Mercy for Epileptics has met with a generous response; and after much inquiry, Mr. William Quarrier has acquired a suitable farm of 213 acres, adjoining the Orphan Homes of Scotland and the Consumptive Sanatoria. The cost of the land is £9,600, of which £8,300 had been received at the time of purchase. Similar schemes have already been successfully carried out in England, America, and Germany. The plan includes separate homes for men and women, and executive building and workshops. In each home twenty or twenty-four colonists will be accommodated, and a small charge will be made for maintenance, payable by relatives or friends interested in special cases. If sufficient funds are sent in, some who are unable to pay will also be received. In addition to the £1,300 to complete the payment for the farm, £4,000 is required for an executive building and church hall, with £2,000 for each separate home. Many applications have been received on behalf of sufferers, among whom, by Christian influence, treatment, and outdoor occupations, a measure of cure may be hoped for.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, April 12. Job vi.

WHAT a contrast is furnished in this chapter between our Christian joy, in the thought of the empty grave and of the risen Lord, and the bitter lamentation of this sad and suffering soul. We rejoice in the Easter light; he is yet in the valley of the shadow of death.

The burden of his complaint is the ill-treatment meted out by his friends. They had accused him of speaking rashly, but they had not measured the greatness of his pain (4), or they would have seen it to be as natural as the braying and lowing of hungry and suffering beasts (5). A man would not take insipid food without complaint; how much more reason had he to complain whose tears were his meat day and night (6, 7)! So bitter were his pains that he would welcome death, and exult in the throes of dissolution (8-10). It could hardly be otherwise than that he should succumb, since he had only the ordinary strength of mortals, and both strength and wisdom were exhausted (11-13).

He next characterizes the assistance of his friends as winter brooks, turbid with melted ice and snow, which bitterly disappoint the travellers who had hoped to find water, and perish beside the dry heaps of stones (17). They had found fault with his words, which, under his circumstances, were not a true index to his heart (26); but a look into his face would have sufficed to attest his innocence of the sin of which they accused him (28-30)!

From these complaints of faithlessness and disappointment, we turn to Him who, having been made perfect through suffering, has become "the Author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him," and was called unto the Melchizedek priesthood (Heb. v. 10). The Aaronic priesthood finished with the last sigh of the cross; the Melchizedek begins with Easter Day and lasts for ever.

MONDAY, April 13. Job vii.

When the sun is in the sky, and joy-notes thrill the air, let us not forget the sufferers in their darkened rooms, who possess months of vanity, and to whom wearisome nights are appointed. You will not find them among the merry-makers. Like the wounded wild things of the forest, they hide themselves; but they are not far from any of us, as they trample in the wine-press of pain the fruit which yields the wine of life.

The servant eagerly longs for the lengthening shadow, which warns him that his day of labour is at an end, and we may allow ourselves to anticipate the hour of our reward and deliverance. Oh, to be where dark sin cannot master, or Satan annoy! Oh, to stand on the further side of the sea of glass—

> Free from a world of death and sin
> With God, eternally shut in!

In plaintive words, which have so often been on the lips of heavy sufferers, Job tells the story of his sorrow and bitterness. The sufferer addresses God directly—almost suggesting at first that He was persecuting him without cause. Let those who have been disposed to think Him unmindful and hard in His dealings, ponder these words. Even this saint of patience has trodden that path before them, but he came out right at last. But a softer tone succeeds; he realizes that he has sinned, pleads to be forgiven, and asks that the word of forgiving love may not tarry, lest it be too late. The Psalmist uses a similar expression to 17, 18, but with a more wholesome application (Psa. viii. 4; cxliv. 3)!

TUESDAY, April 14. Job viii.

Bildad now takes up the argument, appealing to the experience of former generations to show that special suffering, like Job's, indicated special sin, however deeply concealed. He felt that God could not pervert judgment, and that the sudden destruction of Job's children proved that they had transgressed.

Verses 11-13 are probably quoted from an old poem, embodying the sententious observation of some elder generation, which compared the ungodly to the rapid growth and more rapid destruction of the papyrus plant (which we commemorate in paper). Verses 14, 15, compare the state of the ungodly to the slight fabric of the spider's web, fine-spun, flimsy, and woven out of itself, which, though its tiny inmate holds it fast in the storm, cannot endure. Verses 16-19 employ yet another comparison—that of the weeds, which grow to rank luxuriance, spreading over heaps of stones, and even walls, which they are figuratively said to see in the distance, and creep towards; but the very earth is ashamed of them, as presently they lie withered on the path. So the friends of the ungodly hypocrite are ashamed of him; and soon their place is filled by others.

Throughout Bildad's address there are glad glimpses of the blessings which will accrue to the repentant and humble soul. There is no doubt that God will awake for those who seek diligently unto Him; He cannot cast away the whole-hearted man, who lives only to do His will; He will fill the mouth of His saints with laughter, and their lips with shouting. Wait a little, suffering child of God! He who hath smitten thee, will bind thee up; and thou shalt receive from the Lord's hand the cup which brims with salvation (Ps. cxvi. 13).

WEDNESDAY, April 15. Job ix.

Job's friends had laid down the proposition, that his sufferings indicated that he was a sinful man, and he accepts their position, acknowledging that it may be so, since God cannot pervert judgment. Here, however, he demands how man can seem otherwise than sinful in the presence of the Great and Holy God. He disclaims special sinnership, but is willing enough to confess that in the presence of the Infinite, mortal man cannot answer for one of a thousand of the charges which may be made against him.

Let us ponder the sublimity of the conceptions of God, given in this magnificent passage. To God are attributed the earthquake that rocks the pillars on which the world rests (6); the eclipse which hides the heavenly bodies (7); the storm in which He bows the heavens and treads majestically on the waves (8); and the location of the constellations (9). Who can dare to argue with or call to account so great a God as this (10-19)? Even though a man be outwardly and inwardly righteous (that is, so far as to the measure of his light), yet in such a Presence, the heart of the most perfect must condemn him. "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves . . . God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all."

We cannot but feel that this old-world thinker has a truer view of that conscious imperfection and sin, which must be experienced by every mortal who has a right appreciation of the Holiness of God, than those have, who refuse to say the Lord's Prayer, because it contains a petition for forgiveness!

> Ah, how can I, whose native sphere
> Is dark, whose mind is dim,
> Before the Ineffable appear,
> And on my naked spirit bear
> The uncreated beam!

Truly we need a Daysman, a Mediator, who can stand on a level with God and us, and lay His hand upon us both (33; 1 Tim. ii, 5).

THURSDAY, April 16. Job x.

We who stand behind the scenes, know why God allowed his servant to be afflicted so terribly. We understand that God was meeting the challenge of the adversary. Of course, if Job had known this, he would have refrained his speech, and borne the heavy afflictions that rained down upon him, with comparative equanimity.

In this chapter, he accuses God of persecuting his own workmanship (3); of pursuing him with repeated strokes, as though He had not time enough to wait between them, but must hurry on to achieve His design (5); of reversing the careful providence, which had watched over his earlier years (12); of hunting and playing with him as a wild beast with his prey (16, 17); and asks that he may be allowed speedily to enter the land of Sheol (18-22).

As we read these complaints, we may remember days in our lives when we uttered similar ones; but we are without excuse. And when we are tempted in this direction, it is for us to remember that probably we are being tried, to teach the manifold wisdom of God; and that the works of God should be made manifest in us (Eph. iii. 10; John ix. 3). It will enable us to endure, if we remember that God has conferred on us high honour, by choosing us to show that we can stand the fire, like those iron safes, blackened with smoke, which the makers place in shop windows to prove the stability of their workmanship.

FRIDAY, April 17. Job xi.

Zophar feels that he must press home on Job the charge of his sinfulness in God's sight. There is much of the Pharisee in his attitude. We cannot but detect a vein of self-congratulation running through his thoughts and words, that since he was not exposed to such sufferings as his poor friend, therefore he might reckon himself as pure and holy in the sight of the Almighty. Your sufferings, O child of God, do not prove you to be the chief of sinners, do not even prove that your Father has a controversy with you. He has a secret purpose in it all, which He will explain to you some day. In the meanwhile, trust Him. Even prosperity, on the other hand, does not prove that you are blameless and faultless; but that for some reason God is screening you from the storm.

What magnificence of thought and diction is employed in Zophar's description of the greatness of God (7-11)! But there is even more sublimity and consolation in his words when we combine them with Eph. iii. 18, 19. O heavenly spaces, ye are full of love! If we ascend into heaven, love is there, or into the depth, it is there; or if we cross the ocean, it is broader, deeper, further!

Ponder the blessed words which follow! One day we shall lift up our faces without spot, we shall remember our misery only as the passage of swift mountain-floods, and our darkness shall be as the morning. God shall wipe away all tears from all faces.

SATURDAY, April 18. Job xii.

Job now sets himself to disprove Zophar's contention that wickedness invariably causes insecurity in men's dwellings; and in doing so he bitterly complains that his friends mocked at him so contemptuously. He says that they remind him of those who are glad enough of a torch when their foot is slipping in the dark, but cast it aside when they reach their quarters. (The meaning of verse 5.)

He shows that those who rob are often most prosperous (6), and that nature teaches that the animals and plants, which are most sturdy in their self-assertion, are most secure. Is not the vulture more secure than the dove, the lion than the ox, the shark than the dolphin, the rose than the thorn which tears it? In all such cases, you cannot explain the mystery except by referring it to the will of God, whose reasons are past finding out. Thus do similar mysteries beset human life.

There is a glimpse here of the modern phrase—"the survival of the fittest"; which always needs to be taken along with that scheme of redeeming love, which stoops over the helpless and unfit to succour and save.

The speaker still further illustrates his point from human life, showing that the lives of counsellors, judges, kings, priests, princes, and elders are exposed to the same apparent anomalies and inequalities of treatment; so that a wide survey of life compels the conclusion that there are reasons for God's dealings which are not within the range of human logic; and these reasons are partially answered in the cup that Jesus drank, and the cross He bore, which suggest that suffering has a redemptive aspect—a preparatory discipline through which God's anointed ones may have to pass for the sake of others. Pathos in Essence.

PUTNEY HOSPITAL FOR INCURABLES.

I STOOD last Sunday evening in the beautiful great drawing-room of the once ducal Melrose Hall, now enlarged and transformed into a Hospital Home for more than 200 incurable men and women, to conduct Divine service. In front of me, row beyond row, were scores of invalid chairs, in each a man or woman, who enters it in the morning on rising and remains prisoner there until the hour for retiring. A few inmates, whose internal complaints did not hinder their walking about, occupied an easy chair here and there.

By contrast, in groups near the desk, stood nurses and attendants, in white caps and aprons, looking the embodiment of health and vigour. On them fell the burden of song, aided by a beautiful organ. The walls of the handsomely-ceiled room were hung with pictures. Soft carpet covered the floor, and there was a general air of comfort and even luxury. What was all that to the ladies who, largely from rheumatism and through other causes, were practically helpless, and dependent on the loving service of attendants? A few can write, and I had recently received a letter from one, enclosing ten shillings in pennies, that an expectant young mother might first wear a wedding ring, with prayer for her highest advancement.

They welcome visitors, and a wise hospital management permit subscribers every day between twelve and six, and others from two to six. My recent acquaintance with the hospital, with its 40 men and 170 women, has been a veritable baptism of blessing. In this room of five beds, pleasantly furnished, each patient's table covered with photographs and mementoes, lies Miss E——, a little old lady who has stayed there forty years. She speaks in soft whispers; but her mind is very wide awake. Her sister, suffering in other ways, has been resident thirty-two years, and is one of the "walking" patients, so much valued by the helpless — carrying news and messages, and rendering little acts of service.

FORTY-NINE YEARS AN INMATE!

One patient has been in the hospital since its origination by that pioneer in practical philanthropy, Dr. Andrew Reed, forty-nine years ago. Is any better testimony needed to the excellence of the arrangements and to the wise oversight of matron and medical officer? But the chief factor is restfulness of mind. It is difficult to get into the hospital. Subscribers have one vote for each half-guinea, and there are always twenty deserving cases for one vacant bed. But once in, all is found; and the annual expenditure per patient is £73.

The patients come mainly from the middle class. Most have friends; some can get "home" for holidays, and are permitted to spend two or three months in the year in that way. Others are more lonely. Each visit brings new acquaintances. On my last I carried a message from a City business man to a former member of an Islington church. She was shy, and wondered how I had heard of her; and another patient—who has been benefiting by the Tallerman treatment—explained what a good, true soul she was. Many sweet friendships spring up between inmates of the same or of other rooms, and they offer introductions.

In one room, I called on a sufferer of sunny temper who had a niece and nephew in Mr. R. T. Smith's Homes for Motherless Children, whom she visits just one summer day a year. The second time, she said, "Could you speak to my friend in the corner?" This was an old lady, rather deaf, and a great sufferer. When she found I valued her Saviour, she told me of her conversion, and greatly rejoiced when I said I would relate her story in my next mission address. Then she whispered, "I'm tired, I can't say more," and fell back on her pillow.

Visitors break the monotony. Rev. R. Henley, vicar of Putney, has been a friend more than thirty years, and he and his curates conduct the Anglican services. But the hospital is unsectarian, and Nonconformist ministers take their part. One lady comes nearly every afternoon in her carriage, and remains in the hospital while two patients go for a drive. There are lovely grounds outside the spacious buildings, a wing to which was opened last November by H.R.H. Princess Christian. Mr. Andrew, the secretary for forty years, at his death bequeathed his whole fortune of £5,000, and a second parlour for the women is named the "Andrew" Day Room.

Besides the resident inmates, 700 outsiders in various English counties receive pensions of £20 a year; but of these I have no space to write. The interested reader, however, might send a postcard to Mr. W. David Newton, Secretary, 106, Queen Victoria Street, and would promptly receive an illustrated booklet. The entire yearly expenditure is £33,000, of which only £3,500 comes from interest on capitals. Many generous friends leave legacies, but there is much immediate need for funds.

The purpose of this brief sketch, however, is to try to pass on to others the joy I have experienced from making the personal acquaintance of the suffering patients, many of deep spiritual nature, and to suggest a visit to the hospital. The L.S.W.R. has a station at Putney, less than a mile from the gates, and many 'buses reach the same spot. Miss Hamilton, the new matron, would extend a cordial welcome.

Evangelists in Conference.

AT a gathering of evangelists and other Christian workers at the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., on Wednesday afternoon last week, earnest consideration was given to problems bearing upon the spiritual well-being of the evangelist, and the effectiveness of his labours.

Mr. A. GARSTIN presided at the Noon Prayer-meeting preceding the Conference, when an address was given by Mr. HENRY VARLEY, upon the instruction set forth in 2 Tim. ii. Dealing also with the Parable of the Talents, Mr. Varley asked: "What are we trading with; our Lord's resources or our own?" If audiences are to be truly satisfied, in the best sense, we must draw continually upon the power of God, for we must be "partakers" before we can be "imparters."

Mr. G. E. MORGAN, who presided over the Conference, read 2 Tim. iii. 13 to iv. 5; and drew helpful lessons for the evangelist, who is to "be throughly furnished unto all good works"; the topics then considered being—

THE EVANGELIST—HIS MESSAGE AND EQUIPMENT.

Two leading thoughts were (1) The increased results that would follow more extended missions, as compared with efforts of eight or ten days' duration; (2) the desirability of every evangelist being in communion with some church or fellowship of believers.

As to the first, it was pointed out as a frequent experience that a mission concludes when in reality it has "only just begun." During the first day or two, the audience is chiefly composed of Christians; after which the most impressionable are touched; and by the time the more careless or sin-stained begin to be reached the mission comes to an end. Numbers are brought up to, but not over, the line of decision; and like a receding wave they go back and are lost—for that time at least.

The second point is not less important. There is an increase of men of the "free-lance" type, who are amenable to no authority, and even less so to the counsel of those experienced in the work. The evangelistic ranks need "weeding out;" and if ever "the survival of the fittest" were called for, it surely is in this respect to-day.

As a pastor present urged, it would be a great strength to a missioner to have the members of a church fellowship upholding him in prayer while out upon his missions; in addition it would "give the church something definite to pray for."

We earnestly hope that all the evangelists who were present will take these practical counsels to heart, and lay their case before God with the prayer, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

Mr. Meyer on His Outlook.

A GATHERING of unusual interest took place last Thursday at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, S.E., when an affectionate farewell was taken of Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson at the conclusion of his interim charge of the pastorate for seven months, and an enthusiastic welcome was extended to Rev. F. B. Meyer on his return after his tour in America and on the Continent of Europe. The mingled feelings of the members were touchingly described by Mr. T. H. ATTLEY, who presided, as he referred to the regret with which they parted with Dr. Pierson, and the joy with which they saw Mr. Meyer once more among them.

After expressing the deep satisfaction with which he looked back over the period he had spent at Christ Church, Dr. PIERSON summed up his stewardship, so far at least, as his intention was concerned, in the words, "speaking the truth in love" (Eph. iv. 15).

To preaching, truth is the topic; to practising, truth is the ethic; to prayer, truth is the logic; and to the presidency of the Holy Ghost, we must look for the dynamic. Preaching is the truth in the message, practising is the truth in the conduct, prayer is the truth in worship, and the Holy Ghost is the Truth in power. It is an immensely important thing that the first of all our desires in the Church of God should be that truth should sustain its normal relation to our preaching, practising, praying, and the consciousness of the presence of the Spirit of God in all assemblies.

Philosophers have been for ages seeking to ascertain the universal forces, such as gravitation, which is tendency to a centre; cohesion, which is mutual attraction of atoms; crystalization, which is matter assuming beautiful forms; chemical affinity, which regulates the combination of atoms in new forms. When we come to the domain of life, we rise through the vegetable, the animal, and the rational to the spiritual. Love occupies the top of this pyramid, as the greatest of spiritual forces.

Very warm expressions of regard for Dr. Pierson were voiced by Mr. Robert Palmer, the senior elder; by Mr. Meyer, who presented Dr. Pierson with splendidly bound copies of the Englishman's Hebrew and Greek Concordances; by Mr. T. A. Denny; and by Rev. A. W. Evans.

MAKING A FRESH START.

After expressing with deep feeling his gratitude for the fact that he had been enabled to return in perfect health, Mr. MEYER said he had come back also with a deeper understanding of the things of man, and a more profound faith in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Speaking of the period on which he is now entering as his "second innings" in the pastorate, Mr. Meyer assured his people that they would not now have to turn to the columns of THE CHRISTIAN for his itinerary, as, for the first time for many years, he had no long journey in front. It had been driven home on his heart that he was more of a pastor than an evangelist, and he desired more and more to be known in the homes of the people.

He did not think that while figures of the Religious Census showed an ebb of the people from the churches, there is any ebb from Christ; but we cannot afford to allow the present state of affairs to continue. There must be some way out of the present anxiety and difficulty; and he would do his best to bridge over the gulf between Christ Church and the mass of humanity living around. It must be more than ever the home and the meeting place of the neighbourhood.

Turning to the Education Act, Mr. Meyer showed that he was determined to throw himself unreservedly into the agitation for the repeal of the measure. While there were many clergymen in the Church of England who were his dear friends, and whom he could trust, he would protest emphatically against the control of primary education being so largely handed over to the Anglican priest, who was all the more to be dreaded because he belonged to a Protestant Church. Personally, his attitude would be one of uncompromising resistance.

Other Lands.

Missionaries at Algiers.

OUR visit to Algiers afforded an opportunity for attending a Conference of Missionaries located in that city, and others within fifty miles.

It was arranged that on Wednesday we should spend the morning—9.30 to 11.30—in prayer and praise, with a brief address from Mr. W. R. Rainy (son of Principal Rainy, of Edinburgh), who spoke very helpfully on John xvii. 3. The afternoon was set apart chiefly for addresses, and the evening for a meeting for French Christians.

On the following morning the missionaries and other friends gathered for conversation on their work—its encouragements and its difficulties; and this was by no means the least useful and interesting part of the Conference.

Others took part besides those named. The absence of Miss Trotter, an independent lady wholly given up to the Lord's work in Algiers (would that there were more such!), was much regretted. Our old friend, Mr. W. J. Orsman, with his large experience, would have been with us but for indisposition. Mr. Moore, also a diligent missionary at Algiers, was sick, and badly needing change.

In the afternoon Rev. Mr. Sutherland, the Presbyterian minister for the season at Algiers, who presided, gave an instructive and edifying address on the Apostle Peter, before and after Pentecost.

Mr. R. C. Morgan spoke of the mighty Angel of the Covenant, the rainbow-crowned Angel of Rev. x., with the Little Book lying opened on His hand, which, having eaten up, the seer must prophesy, for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.

Mr. W. Summers, representative of the British and Foreign Bible Society for North Africa, gave a remarkably full and experimental exposition of "Luther's Psalm" (xlvi.), noting the threefold division marked by the repeated "Selah." (1) Unbounded and unshaken trust in God. (2) Experience based on and explained by Scripture. The river which makes glad the city of God was explained to be the Word of God. (3) It is the experienced soul who understands God in, and by, His works of war and peace.

The evening was devoted to the French Christians. Mr. Cuendet spoke of the Vine and the branches. Mr. Cook, French missionary, spoke of the person and work of the Holy Spirit; and an address by Mr. Summers concluded a very profitable meeting.

Discouragements and Prospects.

The real "conference," however, took place on Thursday morning. It was an informal and informing conversation chiefly by the missionaries, respecting their varied experiences in their work. It was opened by Mr. Cuendet, of the North Africa Mission, who read 1 Cor. xv. 58. Missionaries, he said, sometimes felt discouraged by apparent failures, because they took the burden upon themselves, instead of casting it on God. The command was not to go and convert the world, but to go and preach the Gospel to every creature. There had been comparatively few conversions among the Mohammedans. They were disappointed in seeing Kabyles of whom they had great hopes go away apparently giving it all up. But we cannot tell what may be going on in hearts touched by the Holy Spirit. God is faithful, and His Word will not return void.

Mr. Cook, French missionary, of Il Malen, El Kseur, Prov. of Constantine, agreed that there are many discouragements from people outside. Some of these say, "It is no use trying to convert Mohammedans." Others say, "Let them alone; they worship one God; they are well enough as they are." And religious people do not always strengthen the missionaries' hands. A minister presiding at a meeting introduced him thus: "It is strange that a field should have been ploughed and sown for fourteen years, and yet no fruit should be coming up. Our brother, Mr. Cook, who comes from that part will now speak to us." That was not a very encouraging introduction. Hopeful cases sometimes turn out to be frauds; people who listen with interest the first time do not appear on a second visit. Yet the influence is there, and spreads and deepens with each succeeding generation. Throwing great stones into a river or the sea seems a hopeless operation; but they form the foundation of a bridge or of a breakwater. Again, as long as the ice is melting, the thermometer kept in it stands at freezing point; but when the ice is melted the thermometer rises suddenly. We have taught children who are now married and have children of their own. The bridge and the breakwater will be seen by-and-bye, and the thermometer will rise suddenly all in due time.

Solomon said that two are better than one; for if they fall the one will help up his fellow . . . and how can one be warm alone? Our Lord sent out the twelve and the seventy-two-and-two. It is the Divine plan. At the speaker's station there are eighty-five boys and ninety girls under instruction. It is not possible to have them from two villages together; the boys would fight, the girls scratch. Mr. Cook as well as the English missionaries emphasized the necessity of French missionaries; fifty would find work at once. Pray for these.

Mr. Lacub, Taberouth, Kabylia, doubted not that in eternity it would be found that many seemingly true converts would turn out hypocrites, and others who seemed untouched by the Gospel would be found among the saved. The Roman Catholics make it easy for their soi-disant converts to appear Christians, so that it is difficult to say how much of Christ and how much temporal advantage led to their profession. The solitariness of missionaries in the mountains of Kabylia was spoken of, and prayer asked for them. In the villages they listen, glad to hear the Kabyli language spoken. They are grateful for medicines; but it is most difficult to speak of Christ as the Son of God. This Mohammedans hate. There are six evangelical stations in all Kabylia; the Roman Catholics have seven. Let those who come out come not because they feel the need of the people, but because God sends them.

Facts and Experiences.

In answer to a question whether Kabyles become Romanists, Mr. Cuendet said that he had had a long talk with one such. Next day he came to say he was searching for the truth. One of the white fathers told Mr. Cook that it is necessary to enforce confession. They were able to hold the men through the confessions of the women. This reminds one of Michelet's "Priests, Women, and Families," and other similar revelations.

Mr. Griffiths, Tazmalt, Prov. of Constantine, mentioned a young man who, after seeming a hopeful inquirer, turned round and said, "I will have no more to do with you, nor your medicines. You don't believe in Mahomet." But afterwards he came back, was taught to read, and converted. Some charge was brought against him which was not sustained. There is nothing in his life to discredit his profession. He had said, "Now, I do not believe; but when I do, I will not be afraid to say so. Everybody shall know that I am converted." He has a great love for God's Word, and is held in respect by his companions. Other encouraging instances were referred to.

Miss Smith, Djemaa Sahridj, mentioned one who was a very reticent and even sullen lad. When she and her companion, Miss Cox, told him that they would probably have to leave on account of the opposition, he seemed distressed, and though he had made no confession of Christ, he said, "I would rather die than you should go away." Later he came again and expressed his conviction and confession of Christ in a Kabyle proverb: "When the rock is whole it is a rock, when it is split it is split." It was his way of saying that he had fallen upon the Rock which is Christ, and had been broken. He became a very useful colporteur, and has never belied his confession.

The opinion was expressed by several at the Conference and by others whom we met elsewhere that some forms of industrial work are absolutely necessary in order to keep the young people from drifting into employments prejudicial to their continuance in the faith. Those who remain under mission influences are those who stand the best. It seemed like a revelation to some that the Apostle Paul had found and affirmed the same need of industrial occupation in his Epistle to Titus (iii. 14, marg.): "Let ours also learn to profess honest trades for necessary uses, that they be not unfruitful."

Egypt and Morocco.

Mr. Summers represented two countries—Egypt and Morocco. He might have spoken of the many years' experience he had had in Alexandria, but referring first to Morocco, he said that in the last fifteen years a most encouraging work had gathered round Miss Herdman, the latter part of whose life was spent in Fez. Her great confidence lay in the circulation of the Scriptures, of which she accomplished the distribution of 300,000 copies. It used to be thought she was too credulous as to results. Perhaps she was; yet there were many unquestionable conversions—not less than a hundred—a large proportion of whom she had never seen. Two of them became colporteurs of the British and Foreign Bible Society. He was far more hopeful of results now than when he came out. In Egypt the most encouraging work was done by native converts. He urged that results should be looked for. If we did we should see them far more than if we did not. As regards methods, it is well to be intensive rather than extensive. Seek to gather round you a circle of acquaintance, however small at first, who may be influenced by your life and example. For the home life of the missionary is quite as important as his words. The people look for the translation of the preaching in the life lived in the home and in the family. Therefore, a small constituency who know you well is far more effective in spreading the Gospel than a large number of more or less casual acquaintance.

Mr. Rainy remarked that every mission began with a lengthy period of foundation-laying. It is not only necessary to the upbuilding of any work, but it is God's way of training His servants in patience and experience. How little the apostles knew after their three years of companionship with Jesus Himself. But how much they learned during the forty days after His resurrection. Mr. Rainy endorsed all that had been said as to not being discouraged by apparent failures, and definitely looking for results, encouraging themselves in large conceptions of the Lord's work, holding themselves in readiness for His return at any time.

The closing half-hour was spent in brotherly fellowship round the Lord's Table. R. C. M.

The Care of Famine Orphans.

FOLLOWING the announcement made a few weeks ago that he had severed his connection with the Methodist Episcopal mission, Rev. J. C. Lawson writes:

"Associated with me are Mr. E. B. Lavelette, Mr. D. E. Osborn and wife, and Mrs. Lawson. We have also a few native helpers. There are about 150 orphan boys whom we are teaching carpentry, boot and shoe making, and printing. These are the three industries on which we are at present laying strees. We are asking the Lord for land, buildings, machinery, foreign and native workers, and for the support of the boys the Master has committed to our charge. He has never failed us, and we know He will not do so in the future. Although the boys are very busy in learning trades we take special pains with their spiritual condition, and are much encouraged. We want to see the conversion of all of them. Mrs. Lawson is much better. She is busily at work, but needs a change in the homeland, and we are planning to sail with her and the children in April or May.

A Swiss Evangelist.

PASTEUR FRANK THOMAS IN LONDON.

THE visit to London of Pasteur Frank Thomas, of Geneva, affords occasion to bring before our readers some particulars of the career of a remarkable man. By the time this paper is issued, the Pasteur will have delivered a course of addresses at Exeter Hall in connection with the French Y.M.C.A. on "Individual and Social Duty."

Mr. Thomas is the most popular evangelist of French-speaking Europe. He was born in 1862, coming of one of the oldest and best esteemed Genevese families. His father, who is still living, was a pastor, and the deeply Christian atmosphere of his early training led him, as a youth, to personal faith in Christ. After completing his theological studies at Geneva and Montauban, he was called to the pastorate of a village in the Canton of Vaud. He was quick to notice the terrible evil caused by alcoholism, and became one of the most energetic workers in connection with the Blue Cross Society.

For five years the Pasteur discharged a fruitful ministry in his rural parish, and only left it in response to a call from the Evangélisation Populaire at Geneva, in 1891. This Society was already carrying on an interesting evangelistic work, with the object of reaching those who were not in the habit of attending places of worship, but were disposed to live in ignorance of God and in indifference to his claims. By calling Mr. Thomas, the Society purposed extending its operations to all classes of the community. From the start, Mr. Thomas's labours were full of blessing. They included evangelistic meetings, temperance gatherings, Bible-classes, and sermons, not only in Geneva, but in various other places; and the churches in which he preached were always too small to seat the overflowing audiences that assembled.

The people were struck, in the first place, with the simplicity of the preacher's sermons—unconventional as they are, in construction and delivery. The Pasteur makes no point of literary beauty; but aims at Biblical exposition, in order to bring the truth home to the simplest mind. All the same, his preaching has attracted such of the cultured and learned as are tired of the monotony of pursuing antiquated methods. Mr. Thomas, however, is not merely a popular preacher, but a powerful evangelist. He attacks sin in all its forms, and with extraordinary vigour, leading his hearers to the foot of the Cross, and to a living and personal faith in Christ. Doubtless, he is not the only one to preach Christ in French-speaking countries, but in Switzerland he is held to fill the place which was occupied by C. H. Spurgeon in England.

A splendid opportunity for enlarged service came in 1896, when the Great National Exhibition was held at Geneva. Thousands of people were attracted to the city; and in anticipation of their coming, Christian ingenuity and devotion were earnestly exercised. It was determined to present the Gospel to the pleasure-seekers, and the spacious Victoria Hall was taken for that purpose. This Concert Hall, which Geneva owes to the munificence of Mr. Barton, late British Consul at Geneva, seats 2,000 persons, and had the advantage of being situated near the Exhibition quarters. From the first Sunday the Hall was full, and subsequently the congregations became so large that often before the time of service the doors had to be closed. Roman Catholics and freethinkers, the indifferent and lukewarm, crowded in, and there were encouraging results. All the good consequent upon this effort will not be known until the time when hidden things shall be revealed.

When the Exhibition came to an end, general regret was felt that the meetings should cease. Hence the formation of the Association Chrétienne, which is to-day directed by Mr. Thomas. This organization meets a long-felt need, and to its care and development the Pasteur devotes himself with all the diligence and energy of a consecrated worker. The enterprise has so extended that an assistant has lately been called to the Pasteur's aid. Mr. Thomas's activity outside Geneva is remarkable. Calls come to him from all parts—from Switzerland, France, Belgium, Italy, and Germany. His message is of Christ Crucified, and he draws his hearers irresistibly, by the power of his convictions, his absolutely sincere tone, and the communicative warmth of his heart. As theological professor at the Faculté Libre, he exercises an influence for good on the students.

Mr. Thomas has published a large number of works, which are highly appreciated. His themes cover a wide range of doctrine and practice, and his style is spiritual and vigorous. Some of the volumes are made up of sermons and addresses delivered by him, and published by request. We have read many of these books, large and small, and found great pleasure and not a little profit therein. We pray God's blessing upon the work of our influential friend. May more doors open to him, and may his word ever be in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance!

PASTEUR FRANK THOMAS.

The Gracious Call.

(Isa. lv.)

THE prophet brings before our notice the kingdom and offices of Christ, the glorious salvation He would bring to man. The great salvation which Christ completed is, indeed, a call of the greatest importance, and concerns us all; no matter what position we may occupy in life, or what is our nationality, the call is universal. We should give heed to the Saviour; we are invited, urged to come. Christ is able to give life and light; He is ready to give salvation. Do not turn a deaf ear to His call. Do not procrastinate, or it may be "Too late! too late! ye cannot enter now."

Let us press home a few thoughts:—

(1) Seek Jesus now.
(2) Seek Jesus and His pardon.
(3) Seek Jesus for peace and joy.
(4) Seek Jesus if you wish to be happy.
(5) Seek Jesus while He is near.
(6) Seek Jesus; He invites you now.

Christ receiveth sinful men,
Even me with all my sin;
Purged from every spot and stain,
Heaven with Him I enter in.

"Come unto Me, and I will give you rest." "Refuse not Him that speaketh."

Burning of Bibles in Brazil.

ON February 22 this year 214 copies of the Bible were publicly burned in the city of Pernambuco, in front of the most popular Romish Church in that city. I will quote a few lines written by the priest himself who burned the books. I give a literal translation from the Provincia, a daily paper, dated March 1:—"Burning of Bibles.—As had been announced, there was realized in the square of the Church of Penha, on the 22nd ult., at nine o'clock in the morning, in the presence of more than 2,000 people, the burning of 214 volumes of the Protestant Bible, amid enthusiastic cheers for the Catholic religion, the Immaculate Virgin Mary, and the High Priest Leo XIII.—cheers raised spontaneously by the Catholic people—who, far from being scandalized, applauded the act, &c."

Then follows a long column of vile abuse of the Protestants and Protestantism. This burning of Bibles was announced beforehand in the same paper in these terms: "The Bibles will be burnt by the monks in the public square in front of their splendid and majestic temple, on Sunday, February 22, after the religious services of the solemn session of the Anti-Protestant League. All those of the 'New Sect' [as Evangelicals are called] are invited to be present."

Among other things, this leading priest says of Evangelicals:—"Poor hypocrites! Blind leaders of the blind! The 'New Sect' shamefully deny the Divinity of Jesus Christ. Ye are of yesterday—wretched children of Luther and Calvin! But the Catholic Church dates back nineteen centuries, or rather to Eden. No justification was found possible at the tribunal of Christ for the leaders of the accursed Reformation, and shall there be any for their miserable followers? No!"

These articles are signed by Frei Celestino, a violent Italian friar, who has been placed at the head of this Anti-Protestant League, which was started a few months ago by the Bishop. But while Protestantism has been thus rudely attacked, and Bibles publicly burned by the priests, the cause of Christ has grown as never before.

Before leaving Brazil, a few months ago, I had the joy of receiving twelve converts to church fellowship on the last occasion I ministered there; and there was at that time a larger number of candidates before the church than I have ever known. And in a letter received last week, my colleague speaks of receiving that same evening fifteen candidates for baptism. The burning of Bibles serves to arouse the people to inquiry. I never saw more signs of spiritual awakening. James Fanstone.

Persecution in Spain.

DURING the second fortnight of March two Philippine friars held a mission in the village of Villaescusa, to counteract the influence of the Reformed congregations which had recently opened a school for the education of their children. As long as the children attended the public school under priestly influence, no objection was raised, but immediately on the inauguration of the Protestant school, opposition began, which reached its climax during the mission. A rigid boycott of the Reformers was commanded, and hostility showed itself in every possible way. On March 30 the secretary of the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society was dining in the house of the local minister, when everyone was startled by the report of a revolver fired close to the window. The minister rushed to the street, but could see no one. He called for help, and search was made for the miscreant, but without result. Providentially, no one was injured. If the object of the outrage was to prevent attendance at the service that night, it failed, for ninety brethren and sisters attended a most solemn service, at which an appropriate address on "Love your enemies," was delivered. Great excitement prevailed in the village owing to the incident. There are many signs of a popular rising against sacerdotalism and its fruits.

The Late Mr. John Thomson,

EVANGELIST.

On Saturday, February 28, we journeyed to Cockenzie, a small fishing village on the shores of the Frith of Forth, ten miles to the east of Edinburgh, to follow to their last resting-place the remains of John Thomson, for long and widely known in evangelistic circles as "the Cockenzie Fisherman." On the previous Wednesday, after an illness extending over several months, he had departed this life to be with Christ—which is far better for those who go, though oftentimes, as in his case, very great is the sorrow of those who are left behind.

Mr. Thomson was born in Cockenzie, in 1840; was led to Christ when nineteen years of age, his father and he being among the first converts when the 1859 revival swept over the village; and his bright and useful Christian career had extended over forty-three years when the end of his pilgrimage was reached.

His first religious impressions were received when he was fourteen years of age, while serving his apprenticeship at sea. This was at a meeting held on board ship at Stettin, in Prussia, when some sailors were giving testimony as to how they had been converted. For a year thereafter he endeavoured to maintain an interest in religious things, later on falling back into a careless state. The breath of 1859, however, again awakened him, and for a fortnight before the light of the new day broke upon his soul he was in great distress of soul. "Hae ye ony doobts?" said an old man to him one day. "I have that," he replied. "Weel, my son, ye're a' richt if ye hae doobts," said his questioner. But John Thomson did not feel he was all right; in fact, he felt he was all wrong, and he became so anxious that he could neither eat nor sleep. One morning, when out at the fishing ground, and while standing up in the boat, Acts xvi. 31 came to his mind: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." The Word was in the power of the Holy Ghost, and he said: "Lord, I believe in Jesus as my Saviour." At that very moment his burden rolled away, and he began to sing:

O happy day that fixed my choice!

When he came ashore the first thing he did was to kneel down, and the women folks who were standing around waiting on the boats coming in with the fish said: "Poor man, he's wrong in his mind." The story soon got round the village, and when it became known that he would be present at a cottage meeting at night, the house, consisting of three apartments, was crowded to the door. The "box" beds of the house were packed with children, and grown-up men and women crushed in wherever standing room could be found. Many came to see the man that was "daft." The meeting commenced at six o'clock, and lasted till one in the morning. He told what the Lord had done for him, and how the light had come to his soul. As he was telling his story he burst into tears and wept. Then the people fell to weeping, until the place was a real "Bochim"; and, before the meeting was brought to a close, seventeen people had professed to trust the Lord. It was a memorable and life-shaping period for him, for the joy he found that night in pointing others to the Saviour was a joy that he laid himself out to share all the rest of his life. He was a born evangelist, for it was his supreme delight to preach Christ, with the one aim of winning souls. Just as surely as Peter, the Galilean fisherman, was called to be a fisher of men, so was John Thomson, the Cockenzie fisherman.

In common with many of his class, his education had been neglected, even reading being an unacquired art. On turning to the Lord, however, spiritual quickening was accompanied by intellectual awakening, and ere long he was able to read for himself. Said an old fisherman on the funeral day, "It was a wonderfu' time, and Johnnie couldna read, but it wasna lang till he learned." Though to the end of his life his orthography was of the phonetic order, his diction when on the platform was at times a marvel to those who knew him best. He would on occasions, in the impassioned delivery of his message, speak as if the advantages of a grammatical and rhetorical training had been his in life's young day. Yet it was far otherwise.

Within a year or two of his own conversion, and when away at the fishing on the East Coast, he conducted, along with some of the men who were with him, an open-air service one Sabbath, near North Sunderland. His text was John iii. 16, and, while he was holding forth the Word of Life, a young lad drew near who was in the service of a gentleman in the neighbourhood. He stood a bit off and listened. He was afraid to come any nearer; but the bright young fisherman, with beaming face, interested him, and as the preacher rang out the glad tidings, that "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life," the Word was shot into the heart of the lad in the power of God. On his way home the lad knelt every few steps by the hedgerow and prayed to God for pardon and mercy, though it was two years afterwards before the way of salvation was clearly understood by him. That lad was W. D. Dunn, one of Scotland's chief evangelists, a man who has been used of God for nearly forty years in a marvellous way in bringing sinners to the Saviour. John Thomson did a good bit of fishing in his day, both on sea and on land, in catching fish and in catching men; but he rarely, if ever, had a better "shot," to use a fishing term, than on the day when he was used to awaken conviction in the heart and soul of W. D. Dunn.

Never having wholly abandoned his connection with the fishing industry on the business side, he was able to undertake a good deal of preaching among poor people at but small cost to them; and among the fishermen he often had wonderfully fruitful missions. To different places along the East Coast, from Peterhead and Fraserburgh in the north to Lowestoft and Yarmouth in the south, he carried again and again the blessed message of redeeming love. During the eighties, commencing in 1881 with a mission in Peterhead, he carried on many special missions, reaching westwards along the shores of the Moray Frith, that were signally owned of God in the salvation of men. Hundreds found reason to bless God for sending His servant among them. Christians were filled with fresh zeal, waverers were definitely helped, and the dead in sin were quickened into newness of life. Drunkenness, profanity, and other sins were forsaken, and a goodly life entered upon. The public-house was deserted in favour of the prayer meeting, and card-playing took wings to make room for Bible-reading. Such are the marks that accompany every true evangelist in greater or less measure.

In selecting texts to preach from, Mr. Thomson would dig into the Word of God, and lay hold of some that others seemed not to notice, and of these he would make wonderful use for setting forth the Gospel of the grace of God. One of his favourites was: "Abide thou with me, fear not: for he that seeketh my life seeketh thy life: but with me thou shalt be in safeguard" (1 Sam. xxii. 23). With such a text he easily found a road to Christ for both himself and his hearers, and in discoursing on it his delight was for the encouragement of the timid to set forth the saving power of One mightier than David, and under his eloquent appeals the fearing and the doubting would seek the shelter of David's Greater Sin.

Our brother's face itself was always a sermon, for one could easily see that he enjoyed the salvation he preached. He had a bright, cheerful countenance, whether on or off the platform; and his homely, happy, brotherly manner made him a great favourite wherever he went. He was affectionately esteemed over a wide area; but none loved him better than did the children of the Orphan Homes of Scotland, at Bridge of Weir. When there conducting the services in the children's church, if his visit extended over several days, he was ever ready to lend a helping hand at anything, doing a bit of painting or something else: and as in this way the children got a glimpse of him outside of his preacher's coat as well as in it, they loved him all the more.

The following incident may serve to show the love and regard they had for him. It became known during his illness that there was a debt of over £100 remaining on a mission-hall in Cockenzie, in the erection of which he had been mainly instrumental; and that, in view of his end, the obligation was burdening him. One of Mr. Quarrier's assistants, having learned how things stood, mentioned the matter to him, and he in turn to the children at the Homes, as well as to a few outside friends, with the result that the deficit was soon made up, and the burden lifted from the dying worker's mind. The children, and the "fathers" and "mothers" of the Homes contributed nearly £40 towards the liquidation of the debt, in token of the esteem in which they held him. The Christian workers at St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow, also took a share in its removal, for in few places was his bright, earnest ministry more popular and acceptable than in that hive of spiritual industry.

For two or three years Mr. Thomson's health had not been quite satisfactory, and there were indications that he was less equal to the strain of service than in earlier days; but it was not till last October, when conducting a mission in Hawick, that he was finally laid aside, a complicated kidney trouble being the cause of the breakdown. During the early stages of his ailment he was hopeful of pulling through; but, when his condition became grave, he cheerfully accepted the Will of God in the matter. Ten days before the end it was our privilege to see him, and to spend a little time in conversation and prayer. He happened to say, referring to his five months' illness, that he had weathered the storm wonderfully. He smiled and said, with reference to his body: "It's been a good ship;" and then he added, "and I have a good Captain." We parted amid tears. His end was peace.

On the funeral day we chanced to get a seat, ere setting out for the churchyard, in the same room in which we had seen him and prayed with him ten days before; and, happening to look at the face of the clock, there was brought vividly to our mind the memory of an old Scotch custom we had not seen carried out anywhere since our boyhood's days. The clock had been stopped at the hour the spirit had taken its flight. How wonderfully old customs survive!

Pastor D. J. Findlay, from Glasgow, conducted the service in the home, and at the grave. Several hundred fishermen showed their respect for the memory of our departed brother by following his remains. Several ministers of the Gospel were present, and every denomination was represented. The large company of mourners was a touching testimony to the grandeur of his devoted life. J. C.

The Oracles of God.

THE BIBLE'S MORAL AND SPIRITUAL TEACHING.

CONTINUING the argument of the previous week's lecture, Dr. Pierson spoke further on Friday last at Exeter Hall, on Isa. lv. 8-13.

"Thorns" and "briers" were signs of the curse (Gen. iii. 18), signs that man had fallen. Instead of these are to come the fir-tree, beautiful and useful, and the myrtle, graceful and fragrant. Things that are offensive and damning are to be displaced by things fruitful and lovely. Miracles, in their special mission of authenticating Christ's claims, may cease, but this moral miracle of regeneration "shall not be cut off" (v. 13).

THE MORAL FEATURES OF THE BIBLE.

Look at God's system of legislation—at the Decalogue in its wonderful completeness of moral law. The order is remarkable. First, there is to be no other God; then, no division of worship. The law is "dead set" against all visible representation of God, be it wrought by painter or sculptor, for the tendency of the mind is to stop at the image and thus be led directly to idolatry. Then, even the name of God is to be reverenced, and a fence of restriction is placed around the sacred time of the Sabbath, that men may look from things human to things Divine. The Sabbath is one of two things that have come down from a sinless Eden, the other is ideal marriage.

THE BIBLE AND HOME LIFE.

Next we come to the home life. In the days of childhood the parents stand as God to the little ones, hence it is easy to transfer obedience and love from the human parents to the Divine Father. One reason why there is so little of the Divine in family life is not because the children have outgrown parental government, but because they never knew it. Want of obedience in family life leads to lawlessness throughout society and the ignoring of God,

We note the order and graduation of the commandments that follow. Life is first to be guarded; next, family purity; then, property; and our neighbour's reputation. Then we come to the root of all—irregular, unholy desire. "Thou shalt not covet." What a marvellous compendium of duty is here! It is all reducible to two commandments, as our Lord said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." Love, then, is the fulfilling of the law. Is there any other moral code like this? No.

MORAL ADMINISTRATION.

Moral legislation implies moral administration. For the principles of God's providence in this we should turn to the book of Esther, where we find the Hand behind human affairs, which, while it permits adversity to come to the good and prosperity to the wicked, ultimately gives the awards of happiness to virtue and misery to wickedness. That Hand weaves the smallest matters into the Divine purpose, and administers "poetic retribution" so associated with the sin that there can be no mistake of its intention (as when Haman was hanged upon the very gallows which he had prepared for Mordecai). The Hand is invisible; we see the effects, but not the cause. Hence, although we do not read God's name in the book of Esther, we mark His acts.

DIVINE JUDGMENT.

You cannot pervert, or prevent the judgment of the all-seeing and all-knowing God of justice. His wrath is as holy as any other attribute. It is as much part of His perfection as His love. When men think of wrath, they think of a human passion, but on God's level. Yet it is not passion, but an eternal and immutable principle.

And what is God's method of reformation? It is not to strike this or that evil, but to lift the whole character. Christ's teaching put beneath humanity a lever greater than that of which Archimedes dreamed. God begins within. It is not the reformation of external behaviour, it is the regeneration of the heart.

"THE BIBLE SPECTRUM."

God's idea of moral character is to be found in a kind of "Bible spectrum." Truth is the first component; then the trinity of graces of 1 Corinthians xiii.—Faith, Hope, and Charity: Humility, the unconscious grace; Patience, the enduring one; and Mercy. To these we might add Reverence, the soul of worship. Oh, the completeness of this wonderful category!

Dr. Pierson briefly touched upon each of these characteristics. Commenting on Truth, he said, "We often hear of 'policy,' but the Bible knows nothing of it. If a thing is right, do it; if it is wrong, let it alone. The Bible is a transparent book, and teaches men to be transparently sincere." As to Humility, "it is said that one of Dr. Lyman Beecher's sons once preached for his father, but made a failure of the sermon. 'I'm humbled, father,' he said afterwards, 'it was a poor effort.' 'No,' replied the doctor, 'you are not humbled, you are only humiliated.' Many have no other idea of humility than humiliation." The reigning spirit about the throne of God is Love. It is the law of surrender of my own interest, giving myself to God.

A PERFECT STANDARD.

The Bible gives us a Divine standard, a perfect one. People ask to-day, What do we want with the Bible while we have got reason? Well, I have a watch that keeps, as I think, good time. But I see a chronometer and find by that that I am wrong. Then I find, further, that the chronometer itself needs adjusting. Conscience and reason are watches. The sincere judgment of devout souls is a chronometer, but you still need an infallible standard. The Bible is that, and the moment you give up your Bible, that standard is lost. Ruskin says that "it is the privilege of a reader to enter into the inmost thought of an author." When you want to commune with God, here is the Book which is the open door into the audience chamber of God. Yes, those who with humility will enter the low doorway, find themselves in the palace of the King.

The White Slave Traffic.

ON Thursday afternoon last week, in the Caxton Hall, Westminster, a conference was held of delegates from many philanthropic societies in London, to consider a scheme for carrying out the objects laid before the Home Secretary recently, and described in an issue of March 26.

The Earl of Aberdeen presided, and was influentially supported.

In some opening remarks, he expressed the hope that the conference would bring about a co-operative system, an alliance for a special purpose on the part of a large number of societies, which work in the same direction. This special movement would, he trusted, lead to that kind of direct, official, and governmental recognition which is considered necessary in order to carry out the important scheme of the International Bureau. The experiment, about to be undertaken, would be conducted with great care, and records and statistics of the work would be made, with governmental recognition in prospect. The Earl concluded by reading the following letters:—

From Mrs. Josephine Butler.

My Dear Mr. Coote,—I have read the report you have sent me of the deputation to the Home Secretary, with the keenest interest and with deep thankfulness. You can perhaps scarcely imagine how wonderful and delightful is such a report to one who is in the decline of life, and is perforce excluded from further active work; but who is able to look back some thirty-five years to the faint streak of dawn which then began to rise upon the great question of morality and justice, of which your special movement is now so important a part. Before that date very little was even known of the deep wrongs and shames existing among us and in all the cities of the world more or less. What a change we now see! What a wonderful advance since that first waking up of the nation's conscience—an awakening beginning with our own country and rapidly extending far beyond our shores.

Surely we may all thank God and take heart. If I had any opportunity of saying a personal word to the friends of justice and purity who will be assembled at your Conference it would be this: "That the nearer I approach to the term of my earthly life, the more clearly do I see that this great movement (in its several branches) is an important part of the advance of the Kingdom of God upon earth; and one of the many heralds of the approach of Him who is 'The Desire of all Nations,' and who shall establish His reign of perfect justice and peace. Every worker, even the humblest, in this our great cause may feel himself or herself an honoured instrument in such a work as this, however hard or unpleasant it may sometimes be."

I am delighted at the expression of confidence given by the Home Secretary in the work of women in this vigilance scheme. It is perfectly true that women will see things in connection with our betrayed sisters, which men do not so easily see; and that they will have an influence in dealing with them and drawing information from them which one could not expect men to have in the same way. From what I know of the London police, I think they will be glad to have the co-operation of women in such matters; for on the whole they are an honourable set of men, and many are inclined to do good where they can. I hope great things from this proposed step in advance.

From Miss Ellice Hopkins.

Dear Mr. Coote,—Let me, in the name of all women, thank you with tears in my eyes for all you have done and are doing for us women, who till now, till you and other noble men joined us, have had so few helpers; we have been "for a prey and none delivered; for a spoil and none said, 'Restore.'" I know nothing more wonderful in the history of our crusade against the degradation of women, which has been marked by many wonders of God's outstretched hand, than that you have been able to achieve this great European coalition against the infamous traffic in young girls trapped into ruin of body and soul. . . .

And now for a brief message to my fellow workers, if they will accept it from one who has laid down health and life for this cause, and "counts it all joy":—

First, have faith. Remember my favourite words of St. Teresa, when she was moved to form another house of prayer and good works, and was reminded that only three halfpence was left in the treasury—a statement to which she calmly replied: "Teresa and three halfpence can do nothing, but God and three halfpence can do all things." You are the three halfpence, but with God you can ransom a continent.

Second, have hope—the radiant child of faith. Attain through her the robust faith of Robert Browning:—

> This world's no blot, to us no blank;
> It means intensely and means good. . . .

Third, have love—stick together. Do not let differences of creed or diversity of operations divide you in fighting an evil which is not only infidelity to God, but infidelity to our own human nature, making the beast the master of the man. What I have found the greatest obstacle to steady associated work for our Lord's Kingdom on earth is, first, our wretched sectarian divisions, which make us constantly turn our arms against each other, instead of against the forces of evil; and, secondly, when we have got together on a committee, the moment something arises that we don't agree with, or some action is taken which we do not altogether endorse, the inveterate habit we have of resigning. Why, if the devil himself got on a committee on which I was sitting, I would sit tight to have the privilege of voting against him, and not let God's cause go by default! . . .

Let us work with one heart together against evil down here, bearing with each other in remembrance of the washing of the brains up there, of which we all stand in need.

Mr. Coote then explained the proposed scheme in detail, which involved the services of 100 ladies at certain railway stations and streets of London, and at the principal ports of embarkation.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

(BY OUR SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVES.)

THE CONVERTS' MEETING IN EDINBURGH.

THE sunset of a lovely spring day was illuminating Edinburgh when I arrived in time for the great meeting of converts which Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander had arranged to take on the conclusion of their visit to Glasgow. It has been said that "the reward of service is more service," and certainly the gratitude shown to the evangelists has taken the form of a request for more of their presence. They had left Glasgow on March 31 with a cordial invitation to come again as soon as they could; and now they were facing in the Synod Hall, Edinburgh, many hundreds who had been blessed by their visit last February.

Nearly an hour before the advertised time for commencing, every available seat had been taken. Tickets of admission had been sent to those persons who had given their names during the mission, and I was interested to note the wide variety they represented. Here a workingman and his wife; there a 'Varsity student; here a young lady of refinement, and there a rough lad of humble parentage. Of course, the converts were mostly under forty years of age—Dr. Starbuck has proved how exceedingly rare is the conversion of the middle-aged. But I was thankful to see many men and women who had been restored after backsliding, and were now rejoicing in newly-found joy. Up in the gallery sat several boys who had been brought to Christ in the Mission, and from them came the loudest cheers, after Mr. Alexander had told his touching story of two little Glasgow lads. The choir had rallied in splendid numbers, and they had plenty to do, for about a dozen hymns were sung during the meeting, besides several "extras" at its close.

A novelty which found great favour was the singing of a verse out of a hymn which had been a blessing to many in the audience. Mr. Alexander called for any hymns which had led the converts to Christ, and soon there was a perfect competition to name hymns. First, we had a verse from "Move forward;" then, a verse from "There's not a Friend," and in rapid succession came other requests. When "Lord, I'm coming home," was sung, there was such a deep feeling of emotion created that it had to be repeated. But I think that the effect of "Looking this way," was even more moving. Could we doubt that there were that night many "dear ones in glory looking this way"?

Promptly at eight o'clock the preliminary service of song ended. "You were only half-awake when we began," said Mr. Alexander to the audience, "but now you're wide-awake." Dr. Torrey ascended the platform amid the warmest of greetings, and was followed by Prof. A. R. Simpson (who had postponed a journey South in order to be present), Dr. John Smith, Rev. John Wemyss, Rev. James Mursell, Rev. J. Colclough, and Mr. W. Robertson. Simultaneously streams of people entered and filled all the standing room that was left.

It was a fine inspiring sight, for every face seemed to be lit with the happiness which belongs to children of the King. "There's a great day coming," sang the great congregation, with the thrilling question, "Are you ready for the Judgment Day?" Then Mr. W. M. Oatts, the indefatigable organizer of the Glasgow mission, told the story of the last four weeks' work in the second city of the Empire. Succinctly and brightly he summarized the record. Dr. Torrey had addressed seventy-two meetings, with an aggregate attendance of at least 150,000 persons, in the month. Ministers had been newly consecrated, the churches had been stirred, and hundreds of men and women had come to God. "We thank God for the month's mission, and we ask Him to continue His blessing," said Mr. Oatts in conclusion.

Rev. James Mursell led the congregation in prayer, and then Dr. Torrey said, "How many of you would like the 'Glory Song?'" Up went a forest of hands. The hymn was followed by "O think of the home over there!" Rev. John Wemyss announced special meetings for young converts. Then Mr. Alexander made different sections of the audience sing "I'll go where you want me to go," saying that if the converts really meant it all, their future usefulness would be assured. "Write that on your hearts, and you will be a ball of fire for God wherever you go." His solo was the favourite, "Some day the silver cord will break," and it made a deep effect.

Dr. Torrey's address, lasting an hour, cannot be summarized. It was a masterly, comprehensive instruction to converts, founded on 2 Peter iii. 18. With a vigour undiminished by the last three months' incessant work, Dr. Torrey spoke on all the steps essential to growth in the Christian life. No one was restless, no one left until the conclusion, and it is safe to add that no intelligent hearer will forget it.

Mr. Alexander told with mingled humour and pathos the story of two laddies in Glasgow who had caught the fire to the extent of holding on their own account an open-air service. One of the boys said he was called "Dr. Torrey" by his school-fellows, and he added that he had a friend who did the singing!

Prayer and "God be with you till we meet again" ended a memorable meeting in the religious history of Edinburgh.

BEGINNING IN ABERDEEN.

As the train conveying Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander to Aberdeen left Edinburgh, last Wednesday, a large group of friends sang "God be with you till we meet again," and verses from hymns which had laid hold of the people of Edinburgh. It was a pleasant farewell, brightening the dull and humid weather with its sunshine. About two o'clock the party reached Aberdeen, and received a cordial welcome from Mr. Gray C. Fraser and Mr. J. Montgomery. On their lips, as on those of many others, was the word "expectancy." They said that never in their experience had the city and the neighbourhood been so eager, or hopes so high for the success of the mission. Preparations of an elaborate nature had been made; but, better still, the spirit of prayer had risen to high tide in Aberdeen, meetings having recently been prolonged until after 11 p.m., with a fervour and faith which take no denial. The newspapers had been most friendly in according space week by week in anticipation of the mission, and, as was proved by the extremely cordial and lengthy reports in the Free Press and the Journal last Thursday, the Press was ready to aid the work by fair and accurate publicity.

THE FIRST MEETING.

Rain was falling heavily when the time for the commencement of the mission approached. But that made no difference to the crowd which thronged the music-hall long before the meeting began. The hall is a fine structure, decorated with artistic skill, and lighted brilliantly by electricity. It was filled in every part by an audience of 3,000 people when Mr. Fraser ascended the platform, followed by Dr. Torrey, Sir William Henderson, ex-Bailie Maitland, Mr. John Leith, Prof. Nicol, Revs. T. D. Watt, James Smith, B.D., W. D. Scott, B.D., Dr. H. R. Macintosh, H. M. Adam, B.D., James S. Stewart, D. Ritchie Key, M.A., Alexander Brown, W. S. Chadburn, S. G. Woodrow, and many of the leading ministers of the city.

The first note of the evening was struck by the hymn, "I surrender all," which Mr. Alexander taught the audience to sing. "If you mean it," said he, "you can have a revival right here." He set the Sunday-school teachers singing the chorus by themselves, and the volume of sound proved that the meeting had been described correctly as consisting of Christian workers. The Hundredth Psalm was then sung, and Prof. Nicol led the meeting in prayer, tenderly and appropriately. Then Mr. Fraser delivered a charming little address of welcome. "The hearty co-operation of the ministers of the Gospel of all denominations, the sympathy and willing aid of hundreds of Christian workers in the city, the gatherings for prayer, and the harmony and enthusiasm that had pervaded the meetings of the Executive Committee and all the sub-committees had been as exhilarating as mountain-breezes." Then Dr. Torrey called for the "Glory Song," and the choir of 500 seemed to learn it instantly, while the audience was not less ready to appropriate its catching melody. Mr. Alexander mentioned that a lady had wrapped a pair of boots in a hymn-sheet with this "Glory Song" printed on it, and it had led to the conversion of the shoemaker and his family.

THE KEYNOTE OF THE MISSION.

Dr. Torrey gave as the keynote of the mission, Psa. lxii. 5. If anything real was done in the work, God would do it, for He was always ready to quicken the Church and save perishing souls. But He worked on men through men, and therefore Christians must get right with God, they must pray, and they must place themselves at His complete disposal. Arguing with many a forcible illustration on the necessity for personal work, Dr. Torrey said it had these great advantages: (1) Any Christian can do it. He knew of a young woman who lay for six months dying, and in that time was used to the conversion of 100 persons, many of them her former companions in sin. (2) It could be done every day. He instanced Mr. Moody's rule to speak to someone about his soul every day. (3) It could be done everywhere, in the home, the shop, the train, the hotel, and the street. (4) It could reach all classes. With deep pathos, which hushed the great audience into strained attention, Dr. Torrey told the thrilling story of Mrs. Barney and the woman in prison whom she won to God by love. (5) It succeeds where everything else failed. A working-man had been able to impress a lady and gentleman who were leaving a service utterly unaffected by Dr. Torrey's sermon. (6) It produces abundant results. "Preaching is not in it compared to personal work. I am going to keep at you until you get to personal work," was Dr. Torrey's concluding sentence. A very striking address.

A FINE SPIRIT OF ENTHUSIASM.

Mr. Alexander told the audience that people in Edinburgh had said to him, "They are not very enthusiastic in Aberdeen. You will have to be content with their way of doing things." He was more than content, he said, for they had shown that night the deep spirit of prayerful expectation which was better than any excitement. Dr. Torrey asked those who would promise to pray and work for conversions in a definite way, to rise, and at least fifty rose. Then Mr. Alexander sang, "My Father knows," his voice filling the hall with a resonance quite extraordinary, and with the Benediction the first meeting concluded. The Christian citizens of Aberdeen are, like their granite, solid and strong. They mean to do their best for the mission, and the evangelists have begun their work under the happiest conditions.

The first afternoon meeting proved that, considering there is only a small proportion of the religious public in Aberdeen which can attend such gatherings, there are still several hundreds who will appreciate a meeting at three o'clock. The Music Hall looked, of course, very different from its crowded appearance of the night before, but I was glad to see several ministers present on the platform. Dr. Torrey, who never seems affected by the size of the audience, delivered with great freshness of illustration, an address on Prayer, emphasizing its absolute necessity, if the Christian Church were to exercise its full influence. He said that history outside of the Bible was just as full of demonstration that God answers prayer as the Bible itself; through all history had been manifested the hand of God. He recalled in vivid and picturesque language the case of the besieged people in Leyden, to whom there came, by a sudden change in the tide, the food they needed in their time of stress. He spoke of the Covenanters and Huguenots as affording other instances of answers to prayer; and then coming to more modern times, he mentioned the marvellous way in which provision had been forthcoming from God's people for the upkeep of thousands of orphans in George Müller's Homes. Professor Cowan, Rev. W. Mackintosh Mackay, and Rev. James Stewart offered prayer.

"GOD IS LOVE."

Nearly 3,000 people assembled in the evening, and, as was mentioned by the Free Press, a large proportion of them were middle-aged. "I surrender all" was the first hymn, and right well the audience and choir sang it. Then came "Hallelujah! what a Saviour," in which the tenors and basses took the verses, leaving the last lines to be sung with thrilling effect by the whole assembly. "If He is such a Saviour, why is He not your Saviour?" asked Mr. Alexander. Rev. James Ross led in prayer, and Mr. Alexander sang as his solo "The Wonderful Story." Dr. Torrey's theme was "God is Love"—the greatest sentence ever written. Especially impressive were his words on chastening. "If God cannot save you by any other means, He will save you by chastening you." He told a story of a man who had, on the death of his first child, promised to come to God; but had not. Then a second child passed away, and the stricken father held out no longer.

An incident relating to a young lady in the choir at one of Dr. Torrey's churches evidently touched the hearts of many. When the girl was intensely angry at having been prayed for in public, Dr. Torrey read to her, "He was wounded for our transgressions," and her pride gave way under a new realisation of Christ's love. Very tenderly Dr. Torrey urged all who had not come to the Saviour to delay no longer. In the midst of one of his impassioned sentences some disturbance was caused by a stone-deaf woman walking up to the front seats. He paused and spoke to the woman kindly, and said to the audience, "Don't let us be impatient when we are thinking of God's love." Then he resumed, as if nothing had happened, coming back to his subject with even greater power. "Our people are very hard to move," said one of the workers, "but I am certain they must be affected by Dr. Torrey's earnestness, and the sluice-gates will soon be opened."

HOW TO GET A REVIVAL.

The audiences at the meetings on Friday were not quite so large as on the preceding days, but it was only natural that there should be a slight reaction, and that the abnormal attendances of Wednesday and Thursday should not be fully maintained. Still, the numbers present—700 in the afternoon and 2,200 in the evening—must be considered as quite exceptional for week-day meetings in Aberdeen.

In the afternoon Dr. Torrey paid a well-deserved compliment to the local papers, which have done splendid service to the mission by the full and accurate reports of the proceedings they have published. The subject was "The Power of Prayer," and Dr. Torrey proceeded to state various definite results which are sure to follow definite prayer. Did they want a revival? then they must all pray for it. There never had been a revival without preparation by prayer. Plenty of revivals had been "worked up." What was needed was one "brought down." This could only be done by earnest, persistent prayer. Why should they not have the old-time prayer? Why should they not have men to-day like Alexander Peden, John Livingstone, and other Scots worthies?

Dr. Torrey's statement that, while the minister made the church, he believed it to be equally true that the church made the minister, was evidently relished by the ministers present. His appeal to members to bear up their ministers constantly in prayer clearly went home, for, on a suggestion being made at the close of the service that a meeting for prayer be held straightway, over 100 persons readily remained. This meeting was a memorable one. There was great liberty in prayer, and all felt that God was very near.

In the evening, Dr. Torrey took as his subject, "He that winneth souls is wise." Just before he spoke, Mr. Alexander rendered with great sweetness and expression the solo, "Our Mothers' Way," which touched the hearts of the people, and undoubtedly prepared the way for the searching message. When the evangelist stated, in his own emphatic way, that he would give six unanswerable reasons why soul-winning should be the main business of a Christian's life, the audience settled down with evident enjoyment. The people were not disappointed, for very rarely has the truth been presented in the "Granite City" with such force of intellect, such power of eloquence, combined with such unction from on high. As the speaker led them from point to point with convincing argument, apt illustration, and tender persuasion, the audience followed with close attention and keen interest, until, towards the close, it was clearly evident he had completely "gripped" the vast gathering, and many were visibly moved.

APPRECIATION AT GLASGOW.

At a meeting of the directors of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association, to confer with Dr. Torrey regarding the mission, great satisfaction was expressed by the chairman (Lord Overtoun) at the result of the months' work. Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander had conducted seventy-two meetings, with an aggregate attendance of 150,000 persons. Dr. Torrey's messages to business men had been powerful and convincing. The afternoon Bible readings in St. Andrew's Halls had been attended by about 2,000 each day, and at the evening evangelistic services held in the Grand Hall crowds were unable to find entrance. As a result of the mission about 2,000 names and addresses of those who had been dealt with were received by the secretary.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

"The directors desire to place on record their thankfulness to God for the mission in Glasgow conducted by Rev. Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander. They believe the impression made to be very deep, and the results accomplished to be very wide and far-reaching. By the fearless and faithful exposition of Bible truth, the faith of Christian men and women has been greatly strengthened; by the earnest preaching of the Gospel, many have been led to the Saviour; and by both the teaching and the sharing in the work, the zeal of many workers has been greatly quickened. To Dr. Torrey, Mr. Alexander, Mr. Harkness, and all associated with them in the services, the directors desire to tender their heartfelt thanks, and to assure them that their work for the future in Scotland and elsewhere will be followed by full sympathy and earnest prayers." Dr. Torrey made a suitable reply.

A Bond-Servant of Christ.—To be a bond-servant is terrible in the abstract. To be Jesus Christ's bond-servant is Paradise in the concrete. Self-surrender taken alone is a plunge into a cold void. When it is surrender to "the Son of God who loved me and gave Himself for me" (Gal. ii. 20), it is the bright home-coming of the soul to the seat and sphere of life and power.—Dr. Moule (Bishop of Durham) on THE ROMANS.

Roman Catholics in Scotland.—At the annual meeting of the Scottish Reformation Society Rev. Dr. John McEwan called attention to the extraordinary jubilant feeling which had characterized the recent celebration of the semi-jubilee of the re-establishment of the Roman Catholic hierarchy in Scotland. The figures then read showed that Scottish Romanists had increased during the period by 150,000; and the speakers had taken a most roseate view of the prospects for the future.

Other Evangelists at Work.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

DURING the month of March a very encouraging Mission has been conducted by Mr. H. C. BARTON, of the Evangelization Society. Some of the services were made deeply impressive from the fact of the large number of deaths that have taken place recently in connection with the work. Mr. Barton is very much liked. He has an easy conversational style of speaking, but most pungent are his utterances, and, forced home as they are by the power of the Holy Ghost, the results are manifest at the after meetings. The attendances have been above the average for this time of the year. On Sunday nights the hall was filled with eager listeners, and on the occasion of a memorial service, held in memory of the life and work of the late Mr. George Harding—who was converted in the hall twenty-seven years ago, and had been a faithful and consistent Christian and voluntary worker for the Lord ever since—the hall was crammed from floor to ceiling, and at the after service many found their way into the inquiry room. Many interesting cases of conversion might be recorded, but one instance of unconscious influence may be useful and stimulating to workers.

One Sunday night a man in the inquiry room, after having decided to return to the Lord, said, "I have been a backslider four years. I came to London a stranger six weeks ago. To-day I was so miserable that I went out not knowing what to do. At last I determined I would go to some place of worship, but I knew no place, and while contemplating where I should go I saw a nurse come out of a house with a Bible under her arm, and I said to myself, 'Where she goes I will go.' I followed her through street after street. She got into a tram and so did I. She alighted at the Great Assembly Hall and I followed, and I thank God that through that young woman having her Bible under her arm I am restored to the Lord."

Not only were Mr. Barton's earnest addresses blessed to the unconverted, but the Lord's children were much helped by the earnest outspoken truth setting forth what God expected of those who profess to be followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. Christians, backsliders, and men and women newly converted to Christ thank God for the work accomplished by Mr. Barton during his stay.

The Weaver Brothers at Tunbridge Wells.

The WEAVER BROTHERS have just concluded a most successful mission in the Primitive Methodist Church, Tunbridge Wells. March 27 was the original date for closing; it continued, by the special request of the church, till March 30. Large audiences have been present at all the services, and on the Sunday evenings many people failed to gain admittance. The oldest members of the church say they have never seen anything like it since the church was formed fifty years ago. Mr. Bewley Weaver's addresses and Mr. Frank Weaver's Gospel songs were full of power; and many were the slain of the Lord. The special features of the mission were the afternoon Bible talks, the splendid men's meeting on Sunday afternoon, the song services conducted by Mr. Frank Weaver. A large number have made definite surrender to Jesus Christ, as their Saviour and Lord. Others have been deeply wounded by the Word, and will, we confidently expect, choose the better part. Besides being greatly quickened in its own life, the church will receive many new members. Pastor and people give God the praise for having sent His servants to labour amongst them.

R. NEWMAN WYCHERLEY, Pastor.

Mr. W. H. Jude's Missions.

Mr. W. H. JUDE, the musician evangelist, has given another series of his soulful services in Middlesboro', Spennymoor and Stockton-on-Tees. At each of these centres large congregations gathered.

Mr. Jude proceeded for two nights to Newcastle-on-Tyne, where, in the Wesleyan Mission in Rye Hill, he was earnestly listened to each evening by crowded and appreciative audiences. Mr. Jude is by no means an ordinary evangelist; his services are of a very different type from those with which most of us are familiar, and are calculated to reach and influence people who would not attend an ordinary evangelistic service of the orthodox pattern. The prevailing note in his ministry is that of praise; but he is not content with singing to the people and playing before them, but manages to communicate his own musical enthusiasm to his audience. The addresses were characterized by a beautiful simplicity, and by many touching personal references to all that the grace of God had wrought for the speaker. On the last night, at Stockton, Mr. Jude told the story of his life. For two hours the lecturer held the audience spellbound, as with many a quaint fancy and flash of humour, and with touches of tender pathos that thrilled every heart, he told the story of his eventful career. Village Work in Scotland.

In many of our Scottish rural districts at present there is an unchronicled, but none the less beneficent, work in progress. In the villages of Doune and Deanston, the latter the property of Sir John Muir, Bart., a work of grace is going on. Two young Irishmen, Messrs. Alexander and Stinson, have conducted services now for several weeks, and many have made a profession of the faith in Christ, while God's people have been refreshed by the simple and earnest presentation of the old Gospel truths. These young fellows' ambition is to win souls for the kingdom of Christ. In all kinds of weather they have carried on their work, and against the "coldness" which a mere form of godliness always produces they have quietly opposed the fire of a love which was kindled at the Cross. And in the villages they find abundance of opportunity for zeal and good works. The village aspect of Christian service is one that demands the attention and prayer of the great leaders of religious activity as much as the city aspect. As the villages every year pour out their best into the great cities, their claim upon those who love the kingdom of Christ is one that ought not to be overlooked.

Rev. E. P. Hammond at Pittsburg, U.S.A.

At the meetings recently conducted in Pittsburg, by Rev. E. P. Hammond, sinners have been awakened and brought to Christ. The meetings began in Dr. Thomas Parry's church. Children's meetings were held every afternoon, meetings for adults every evening. Mr. Hammond preached twice to men only. A great number gathered at the last meeting of the mission, and some were in tears. Often, people have related their experiences who have been converted in other places where Mr. Hammond has laboured; among them was Judge M'Farlane of this city, when six years old. One lady said she was converted at one of his children's meetings, when ten years old, at Glasgow. Many ministers have assisted in the services.

Meetings were held in five different parts of Pittsburg and vicinity. One service of remarkable interest was with the newsboys in the second Presbyterian church (Dr. Young's), when nearly three hundred were present. Mr. Hammond explained the doctrines of salvation in a very simple manner, and when he had done speaking nearly all remained for the inquiry meeting. A number of earnest men and women from Dr. Thomas Parry's church aided him in the after meeting. A good number of the lads professed conversion. John Meikle.

The Y.M.C.A. in the United States.

Speaking recently at Toledo, Ohio, Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, referring to the progress of evangelism in the chief cities of North America, cited the remarkable work of the Y.M.C.A. He said: "The Young Men's Christian Association has always been intensely earnest in evangelistic effort. With enterprise and persistence the authorities have adapted their services to reach the largest number of men of the cities, railroads, and colleges of the country. Since the appointment of special workers to conduct these meetings four years ago, immense men's meetings in theatres have been developed and sustained Sunday after Sunday, crowding the largest theatres in the cities.

In the city of Washington, a place which has been supposed to be the least responsive to evangelistic effort, for two years a great service has been held with an attendance often exceeding 2,500 men, and averaging for the winter over 1,500. The most notable men in Washington are found in constant attendance, participating in the actual service with the enthusiasm which characterized the old Moody meetings. Since January 1, 300 men have in these meetings declared their purpose of leading Christian lives. In the old city of Baltimore a series of men's meetings have been averaging over 1,000 men each week, and pastors report constant accessions to their churches through these services. Springfield, Massachusetts, often gathers over 1,500 men at a theatre service. Kansas City has averaged 1,300 men a week for three months, and in New York, Carnegie Hall is often packed with great audiences of men. For at least forty-five Sundays in the year Mr. Fred B. Smith is addressing audiences of 500 to 3,000 men, and last year over 1,300 men expressed their purpose to lead a Christian life at meetings conducted by him. No small proportion of these men are leaders in the social, intellectual, and business life of their communities.

The Outlook (New Zealand) says: "Rev. J. Lyall has been conducting evangelistic services at Christchurch. The Sunday services were held in the Canterbury Hall, which in the evenings was crowded to the doors. In the afternoons about a thousand men assembled to hear special addresses. The weeknight services were held in the Choral Hall, and the interest steadily increased. The addresses were trumpet-calls to the unsaved. A number of young men decided for Christ."

An eight days' mission at Rosebery Park Baptist Church, Boscombe Park, Bournemouth, has been conducted by Rev. T. L. Johnson. Every night souls professed to find the Saviour. Mr. Johnson spoke with simplicity, interest, and power.

Large audiences at Westbourne, Shaftesbury Hall, and West Cliff Baptist Church, Bournemouth, welcomed Mr. Henry Varley on Sunday last. Great interest was manifested, and it is believed much blessing followed. Two meetings were also held at Christchurch, and were much appreciated.

Following a very helpful mission recently conducted at the Presbyterian Church, Swindon, by Rev. G. M. Smith, of Gloucester, Synod evangelist, it was resolved by the session to hold evangelistic services on the last Sunday evening of each month. The first of the series has been held, and was well attended.

At the Baptist Church, Ashdon, Essex, an encouraging three weeks' mission has been held by Mr. Musa Bhai, Indian evangelist. The large congregations were greatly interested by the earnest addresses. Many professed conversion. One very pleasing feature of the mission was the attendance of many who do not usually attend public worship.

During a visit paid by Mr. and Mrs. Osborn Howe to Gibraltar, March 13-21, meetings were held at various Soldiers' Homes and Institutes. The Gospel was faithfully preached, and meetings were held specially for believers, all of which were well attended, and marked by much blessing. On leaving Mr. and Mrs. Osborn Howe proceeded to Malta.

The village of Great Glenn, near Leicester, has been stirred by a ten-days' visit of Miss Haddon, who conducted a mission in the Parochial Hall. The attendances increased each evening, and the earnest appeals of the missioner were listened to with deep interest. It is believed that several yielded their hearts to the Saviour. Prayer is asked that the blessing may deepen. W.

We have had a mission at Oakengates, Salop, conducted by Messrs. Gray, Pullinger, Parker, and Alexander, of the Open-Air Mission. These friends visited the workshops and foundries in the dinner-hour each day, preached in the open-air throughout the district, and every evening conducted an evangelistic service in the Baptist chapel. Numbers have been spiritually awakened, and several interesting cases of decision have transpired.

W. Bonser, Baptist Minister.

A work of grace is going on among young men and lads in Perth. Last week meetings were conducted by Rev. W. J. Patterson, of Leven, Fife, and every night some young men professed decision for Christ, and many others testified to having their spiritual life quickened. Mr. Patterson has been much encouraged by quite a number of the young people connected with his own congregation giving themselves to the Lord during the past winter and spring.

A very interesting meeting was held in the Gallowgate U.F. Church, Aberdeen, on Friday week, in connection with the mission conducted by Mr. Chas. G. Roger, of the Scottish Evangelization Society. The church was crowded in every part by an enthusiastic audience. Mr. Roger presided, and was accompanied by Rev. John Livingstone, minister of the church; Mr. J. A. Smith, of the "Gordon Mission," and Mr. Lewis Morrison. The mission, which began in the beginning of March, has proved to be one of much blessing to many, and has created great interest in the Gallowgate and district.

Mr. Jack Cooke, the Boy Preacher, finished a very encouraging mission in Bradford on the 28th ult. A point strongly demonstrated was that people did not yield at once. They came to the meetings critical as well as curious. Generally speaking, a first visit called forth but little commendation, but as they were attracted and not repelled, the same people came again and again to marvel and rejoice, with the result that much good has been done during the three weeks the mission has lasted. Audiences have been good, and 470 persons have professed conversion, while a still greater number have been strengthened and encouraged by what they have heard and seen. For the immediate care of the new converts a local committee has been formed. Amongst the assiduous supporters and almost constant attenders have been two vicars of neighbouring parishes. Wilson Morley.

Hilton United Free Church, Aberdeen, has just concluded a fortnight's special evangelistic mission under the leadership of Mr. Albert E. Sims, of the Evangelization Society. The work has shown definite results, and in addition the congregation have been much stimulated. The mission has been a good preparation for the Communion season and for the Torrey-Alexander Mission just begun. Mr. Sims has shown himself in his first visit to Scotland a man of resource and tact. His addresses have been much appreciated, apparently growing better each night. Besides addressing a children's meeting daily, Mr. Sims spoke in the open air before the church meeting, and on Saturday nights he held special open-air services, which, even in the cold North, drew good audiences. Mr. Sims took a large share in the ordinary church services on three Sundays, and on two occasions had extra meetings in the evenings, which were very well attended. Mr. Sims has an attractive manner most useful for gathering workers around him, and his preaching is of the same attractive character, dramatic, descriptive, reasonable, and faithful. Andrew Dickson, Minister.

Requests for Prayer.

For cottage meetings lately commenced at Penge, S.E.

For the monthly meeting at Ipswich, April 16, to be addressed by Pastor W. Fuller Gooch.

Praise.

For abundant answers to prayer at a mission at Christ Church, Coventry, for many souls led to Christ, and the uplifting of God's people. F. M. Brodie, Vicar.

Mr. Philip R. Hurditch, for whom much prayer was made in many places during his long and serious illness, is now steadily progressing in his convalescence at St. Leonards, although, for some weeks, no hope of his recovery was given by the medical attendants.

Colportage in Wales.—Mr. Mansbridge, one of the five colporteurs employed by Mr. John Cory to labour in the district around Cardiff, has just removed to Paxford (Glos.) to carry on similar work under the auspices of the Christian Colportage Association. A farewell meeting, held in the village of St. Nicholas, was presided over by Mr. Richard, Cardiff Sailors' Rest, and there was a large gathering of members of the C.E. Society, Band of Hope, Mothers' Meeting, and Women's Liberal Association. A letter was read in which Mr. Cory expressed high appreciation of the faithful and conscientious work done over a period of nine years; and a tangible token of the esteem in which Mr. Mansbridge was held was handed to him.

A Swarm of Bees,

FROM THE HIVE OF INDUSTRY.

HYMN—Sacred Songs and Solos, No. 67.

MORE than thirty years ago, a lady named Miss Annie Macpherson, began a work for God among the shoeblacks of London; she got them into classes and had quite a home for them. But feeling they wanted to be taken right away from all their evil companions, she took about a hundred of them to Canada, where the farmers were glad to welcome them, and where they could begin life afresh.

These were the first children taken out, and since then this lady and her sister, Mrs. Burt, who has worked in Liverpool, have sent out more than 10,000 boys and girls. Think what a procession they would make! I cannot show you them all, but want you to come and have a peep at the eightieth party, just about to leave—or rather at half of them, as they recited and sang to some of their friends last Thursday, at The Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green Road, E.

Some were such dear little mites! and recited about "Kittens and Babies," while the older ones recited "Three Golden Sieves," "Do your Best," "Prayer and Potatoes," and other nice pieces.

Then they sang all together, "The Shepherd Psalm," "Jesus is calling the children," "Jesus wants me for a sunbeam." And best of all, they repeated the whole of Psa. xci. and John iii., which they had committed to memory! How many of you could have done that?

I wish all the young people who read this page could have heard their sweet voices and have seen their bright faces, and then could have seen many of them as they first came to the Home. Shall I tell a secret about some, and why they are so happy? They love Jesus, and try to please Him. How do we know? Those who live with them say their lives are altered, and they do all their little duties as in the sight of God.

"Where do they live?" I fancy some inquisitive youngster asks. Not in Bethnal Green, where very little green now exists; but out at Hackney, where the children's Training Home is situated, with an open outlook over the London Fields. Here they are kept and taught, prior to going out.

"And where are they going to?" does another little questioner ask? First they will cross the Atlantic, and stay awhile at the Home at Stratford, Ontario. Many of them will then go to lovely farms, where they will be among sheep and cows, and under bright, sunny skies, and where they will be cared for by new fathers and mothers, who will love and train them. To insure this, no farmer is allowed to have one unless he has a reference from a minister or a Justice of the Peace. Nor are they lost sight of when they leave the Canadian home, for visitors pay "surprise visits," to see how they are being treated. In many cases the little new comers are adopted and treated as children in the family, marrying sometimes the son or daughter. Some, after passing through the High School and University, are now practising in the law or exercising the Gospel ministry.

One thing the children escape in Canada is the temptation to drink. No woman there would think of entering a saloon or hotel. Mr. Merry told us that during thirteen years' sojourn he had not seen one drunken woman. Drunkenness is looked upon as a scandal, and all drinking places are closed from Saturday evening to Monday morning. To this good land these seventy-five little ones are going, and "Uncle Tom," who saw them, thought you would like to hear about them, and pray for them as they cross the wide sea.

At the close of the gathering, Mr. Varley sent, as a message from the friends, to Miss Macpherson, who was unable to be present, Isa. lviii. 10, 11:—

"And if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul; then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noon day:

"And the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones; and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not."

May this promise be fulfilled. Wm. Luff.

The Crocus.

There's a future before thee, crocus!
A future of spring-tide joy.
Though thy life is born
By the wild winds torn,
No tempest thy life can destroy.

There's a future before thee, crocus,
Though troubled it seems to thee—
Too early thy birth,
In this winter-bound earth—
Yet God taketh care of thee.

There's a future before thee, crocus!
So open thy golden cup;
And the sunshine rays
Of the coming days
With gladness will fill it up.

There's a future before thee, Christian,
Though lowly thy life may seem,
And the frosty hand
Of this icy land
Is blasting thy happy dream.

There's a future before thee, brother,
Look up from thy lowly bed;
For the frosts will go,
And the falling snow,
And the sun will his blessings spread.

There's a future before thee, sister—
As beauty and love unfold,
And sunlight Divine
Around thee shall shine,
O'erflooding thy cup of gold.

There's a future before us ever,
If we to God's glory grow;
A future of love,
In the heaven above,
A summer beyond earth's snow. W. L.

Tobacco-Smoking by Boys.—A circular has been issued to ministers and superintendents of Sunday-schools by the Edinburgh United Free Church Presbytery, in order to check the alarming spread of tobacco-smoking by boys and young lads. Two hundred medical men in the city, including those in the very first rank, have signed a strongly-worded memorial on the evils of juvenile smoking. The School Board also is taking action.

Christ's Teaching About Immortality (John xi. 17-27).

THIS crowning miracle of our Lord's life is generally described as the Raising of Lazarus. I am not sure that it might not with equal truth be called the Awakening of Martha, for it is certain that the Lord lifted this soul, whom we have been wont to count prosaic and matter-of-fact, to a most remarkable elevation of faith and hope as they stood together in the shadow of her great sorrow.

It would seem that the Lord lingered on the way that He might have the opportunity of teaching just this lesson. The home was filled with sympathizing friends, who had come the two-mile journey to comfort the sisters and Lazarus; and in the crowd which filled the house, Martha escaped unobserved. On meeting the Master she made use of a remark which had apparently passed between the sisters (21 and 32). She did not blame Him for His delay; but if only He had been there. . . ! And through the dark clouds even then there shot a ray of hope, for surely even now if He were to ask anything of God, God would give it.

Then the Lord's opportunity came, and to test her He said, "Thy brother shall rise again." In common with the majority of religious people she believed in a general resurrection at some still future date, but she had not realized that God lives in the present tense, that the Eternal is here and now, and that faith must learn to reckon on God's I AM. We are always putting the manifestation of the Divine in the far past, or the far future. The heaven is high above the earth on which we stand, only at the horizon behind us and before us, do Heaven and earth touch. She must be taught the lesson that we all need to learn, that here in the prosaic commonplaces of life, Jesus is the present and immediate answer to every need.

Our lesson is entitled, "Christ's Teaching about Immortality." I venture to question the correctness of that wording. It seems to me that it should be "Christ's Teaching about Resurrection," which differs widely from immortality. Plato believed in the immortality of the soul, but had no conception of the resurrection. He believed that the soul would continue to exist in some other sphere of being, but had no knowledge that in the body there is a germ of life, which will defy the flight of ages—lying in the grave where it was deposited, until summoned by the trump of life to clothe itself in that new body, which shall become the perfect vehicle of the soul for untold æons. That is Resurrection—the reunion of the soul with the body, when it shall be raised in a form identical with, though different from, the body laid in the grave, as the head of corn is identical with, though different from, the seed-corn, cast unto the soil amid the tears of autumn.

Dr. Gordon, of Boston, used to say that these words of Jesus apply to those who may die during these centuries, and before His coming (since they believe in Him, though they die, yet shall they live), and to those who may be living at his second advent ("Whosoever liveth, and believeth in Me, shall never die"). We may also apply them to that spiritual resurrection of the souls from the grave of sin, of which the physical is the emblem (John v. 23-29).

Martha could hardly understand all these marvellous disclosures, but she said her Yea to them, on the ground of what she knew Him to be. He, at least, was the Messiah, whom her people were expecting, and whatsoever He said must be so. It is so, that we may still accept much that we cannot understand, on the bare word of Jesus; and if we abide in Him, in His company, we shall pass into the vision of His glorious wonder-working power.

Martha presently stood by the grave, her faith could not realise all that awaited her, until the reassuring words of her Lord afforded her a foothold. In a moment she realised that even now she might behold the manifested power of God in resurrection, her faith rose to the great occasion, and she united herself with her Lord in expectant hope. Our Lord always needed faith in some one, as the fulcrum on which to rest the lever of His mighty power, and He found it in Martha. What can He not do, even in the hearts of those who are slow to believe and in the bodies of the dead?

The C.E. societies of Camborne have united in holding a temperance demonstration. One of the questions vigorously discussed was, "Why should a Christian be an abstainer?" and several helpful and fitting addresses were given. Twenty-one pledges were taken.

The Law of Love. Rom. xiii. 7-14.
Golden Text. Rom. xiii. 10.

THE Epistle to the Romans was written by the Apostle Paul during his three months' visit to the city of Corinth as the guest of Gaius. Tertius was the penman, and Phebe the carrier (Rom. xvi. 1, 22, 23). Date, according to the latest research, A.D. 56. Rome was then the greatest city in the world. In it there was already a group of Christians whose faith had been "spoken of throughout the whole world" (Rom. i. 8); but when and by whom the Gospel had been carried to Rome is not definitely known. "Strangers from Rome" were in Jerusalem at the great Pentecost (Acts. ii. 10).

Roman Catholic tradition records that Peter was resident Bishop of Rome for twenty-five years, but there is no authentic record of his ever going there. Paul was probably the first apostle who visited that city. He was himself a freeborn Roman, his kinsmen were there, his beloved Acquilla and Priscilla had returned to Rome, and he earnestly desired to visit the brethren (Rom. i. 11-13). Rome had long been on his plan en route for Spain (Rom. xv. 20); but he had been hindered; hence this Epistle was written before he went to Rome, and immediately before he attended the Council at Jerusalem to give in the report of his third missionary tour, and deliver up the alms collected in Achaia "for the poor saints at Jerusalem" (Rom. xv. 26).

Among the rules laid down in this Epistle for practical life, to-day's lesson defines the law of love.

1. Renders dues to all.
2. Fulfils the law.
3. Regulates the life.

As citizens of Rome the Christians, whether converts from Judaism or idolatry, owed duty to the Governing powers. Roman rule was often irksome, not always judicious or righteous; but Christians may not be rebels or anarchists. The machinery of civil government must be kept up by taxes, the freedom of trade by custom dues. No smuggling. Peter taught the same in his district (1 Peter ii. 13-23), quoting the Lord Jesus as our example. 1. Our dues, to God—adoration, reverence, and holy fear. To the king—honour, loyalty, service To governors, masters, teachers—respect, obedience, honesty. To neighbours and equals—esteem. To brothers and sisters – an unselfish charity which will burn away all faults, and cover, as with a cloak, all their shortcomings (1 Pet. iv. 8), and the living force behind it all is—Love.

How can we keep on paying out? (Rom. v. 5.) What debts do children owe to parents? Love, respect, reverence. In deeds and words. Note Solomon's action to his mother (1 Kings, ii. 19). The loving care of Jesus (John xix. 26, 27). (Read Prov. xxiii, 22; Eph. vi, 1, 2, 3.)

2. Fulfils the law. Love is an impelling and a restraining power. Does good and does no harm. Does right for love of right and not for fear of punishment. The rails are laid in love, girded on either side with the barbed wire of the law. Love is the oil to keep our chariot wheels running smoothly.

1 John iv. 18.	Law	Fulfilled	Heb. xiii. 21.
	Obedience	Energised
	Vigilance	Alert
	Endless	Rejoicing

3. Regulates the life. When Love reigns in the heart, motives, words, and actions are obedient servants to the King's commands. When Self usurps the throne, like a tyrant he aims to grasp all gain into his coffers, and there are "nots" in the way. Clean heart means pure life, clean hands, kept lips, and steady feet (Psa. cxix. 32).

Lessons.

1. Children, are you paying your parents in coin of heavenly mint that rings true love? (As harsh words, or grudging service, dark looks, or laggard feet?) Alloy in the coin makes it worthless. Show Jesus the coin (Matt. xxii. 19). He can pass through the Royal mint and stamp it with His Image—a Lamb—love. Let your homes be filled now with the sweet scent of your loving words and helpful deeds; you won't regret it when the circle is broken up. Alabaster boxes are best broken over our loved ones in life.

2. We owe to all the good news of the Gospel. "Jesus sat over against the treasury," and He values the money by heart-worth (Mark xii. 41).

3 Our debt is always running up, but the love of Jesus is full and free (1 John iv. 7). "We are poor, but He is rich."

4. How can I "put on the Lord Jesus?" Accept Him as my Saviour. Confess Him as Master. Surrender to Him as Guide and Keeper. And let the light He gives me shine for Him in the world (Rom. v. 5).

OUR DEBT AND DUTY.

Before the battle of Hastings, King Harold issued orders, and made proclamations, that all the troops should be ranged with their faces towards the enemy. He decreed that as the men of Kent were entitled to strike first, they should accompany the King and deliver the initial blow. The men of London had the right to guard the King's body; to place themselves around him, and to protect his standard. They were accordingly stationed in position; and Harold, having given his orders, came into the midst of the English and dismounted by the side of the standard. His brothers were there, and around him stood the barons, ready and eager to do their duty and discharge their debt to the king whom they loved. As we are to "render to all their dues, and tribute to whom tribute is due" (v. 7), may we ever remember the debt of love we owe to our Heavenly King. Let us gather around His standard, and fight in our daily lives the battle of the Lord.

LOVING ONE'S NEIGHBOUR.

Dr. Samuel Smiles in his book on "Duty," relates an instance of a man whose love worked no ill to his neighbour. While Germany was engaged in war, a foraging party of soldiers one day called on an old farmer and commanded him to conduct them to a field, where they might cut down the crop for their own use, without intending in any way to recompense the owner. The honest old German led the soldiers past the field of his neighbour, though it was equally suitable for their purpose, and guided them with sublime self-sacrifice to his own enclosure. Such a display of love to one's neighbour is worthy of our imitation, and well illustrates the spirit underlying the words of the Apostle: "Love worked no ill to his neighbour; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law" (v. 10).

WALKING HONESTLY.

When Abraham Lincoln was a youth, he was employed as a clerk by a storekeeper. On one occasion, after he had sold some goods to a customer, he discovered that he had received too much in payment. Late at night, when he had locked up the shop, Abraham walked several miles to restore the money to the rightful owner. At another time he found that he had given short weight of tea to a lady, and he would not be satisfied until he had discovered the customer and given her the correct quantity. Thus was Abraham Lincoln noted for his absolute honesty throughout his career, and we should do well in our daily affairs to imitate his unswerving integrity. Let us walk honestly, as in the day (v. 13), and shape our lives according to teachings of Jesus Christ, our Saviour and Exemplar.

A CHRIST-LIKE MISSION.

Not long ago, the head-mistress of a London school started a scheme which has been described by a daily paper as one of the prettiest, most Christ like, and most successful of the philanthropic efforts in the metropolis. The lady has obtained permission to go to one of the public parks, and there teach the slum and other children how to be happy. The lady had found that the young folk of London are not able to thoroughly enjoy themselves when left quite alone. She, therefore, organizes games both for the boys and the girls and devotes herself wholly to the task of making the children really happy. Among the little ones selfishness is conspicuous by its absence, and newcomers are quickly put at their ease; and by her whole-hearted devotion the teacher has won the hearts of all her little pupils. At the conclusion of the games the young people sing the National Anthem, and are then dismissed to their homes. By such work on behalf of others we may put on and make manifest in our conduct and life the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ (v. 14), and others will be led to sing praises to our Saviour, who is King of Kings.

The "Temperance Ironsides."—The annual meeting of the Temperance Ironsides was held last week. It was decided "to take immediate action to frustrate the attempt now being made to create a vested interest in licences." In this connection Mr. Tennyson Smith earnestly protested against the action of Mr. Balfour in "censuring magistrates for doing their duty, and inviting Quarter Sessions to reverse the previous decisions of magistrates." The gathering was an enthusiastic one.

India's Women and Children.—Including a large case going to Bombay next week, 9,356 khurtas and cholies, for clothing India's famine orphans, have now been despatched to missions and missionaries. Mrs. W. Roger Jones, of 98, Brondesbury Villas, Kilburn, N.W., thanks all who have so kindly responded to her appeals, and thus rendered aid to hardly-pressed orphanages. On April 20 a sale of work, to raise funds to sustain operations among lepers and orphans, will be held in Lower Exeter Hall. Gifts in aid will be gladly welcomed.

Scottish Evangelistic Convention.

THE first Scottish National Evangelistic Convention was held in Glasgow on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, April 2, 3, 4. When the arrangements were made some months ago no one entrusted with the making of them knew aught of Dr. Torrey's mission in March, it having not then been thought of. The Convention could not, however, have been more opportunely arranged. Workers who closely attended Dr. Torrey's mission could not but note that to stir up Christians to greater zeal in winning souls was one of the cardinal features of his ministry; and the Convention was the outcome of a thought that has been lingering in the minds of different workers for a long time past. It was seen and noted that conventions were frequently held for the consideration of "The Second Coming of the Lord," "The Deepening of Spiritual Life," etc.; and the conviction gradually took shape that there should be a coming together of evangelistic workers to confer, and to cheer one another on, in the work of winning souls. From parts of Scotland workers responded, and the promoters have had much ground for encouragement in the good time they had. Among the places represented were St. Andrews, Leven, Burntisland, Aberdeen, Falkirk, Alloa, Dunning, Ardrishaig, and Stranraer; with different towns in Lanarkshire and Ayrshire.

The three chairmen were Mr. John W. Arthur, hon. sec. of the United Evangelistic Association; Pastor D. J. Findlay, of St. George's Cross Tabernacle; and Mr. Robert Logan, superintendent of the Tent Hall. The subject for the first day was, "The Essential Importance of Bible Study"; for the second day, "The Need of Enterprise in the Work of God"; and the third day, "Prayer in its Relation to Evangelistic Work." Four meetings were announced for each day, but an extra one was held inside on both Friday and Saturday, besides open-air services on the first two evenings prior to the gatherings in the hall.

The first meeting of each day was held at seven in the morning, and was devoted to prayer and praise, with one exception, when Rev. John McCracken spoke a short, sweet, encouraging word on God's word to Joshua: "As I was with Moses, so will I be with thee."

On Thursday forenoon, after Mr. William Quarrier had led in prayer, Rev. James Smith, Coalsnaughton, whose homiletic gift is widely appreciated, gave a thoughtful and Scriptural address based on Psalm xix. 7. "The law of the Lord is perfect." An open time followed, during which several took part.

READING WITHOUT STUDYING.

At the afternoon session prayer was offered by Provost Logan (Troon) and Rev. D. M. McIntyre (Finnieston). Mr. William C. Gray, president of the Ayrshire Christian Union, gave the first address, taking as his texts Isa. xl. 8, "The word of our God shall stand for ever"; and Jeremiah xv. 16, "Thy words were found, and I did eat them." "God's Word demands study on the part of God's people," he said; "but it may be read without being studied, and God's standard of measurement is not the amount we read, but the amount we assimilate. If we read the Word of God with self-application, we will receive illumination, and obtain cleansing. The master-key to the study of the Bible is 'Christ.'" He was followed by Mr. W. D. Dunn, evangelist, who urged that when we come to God's Word, we must come to it divested of all our own thoughts. Reading John v. 39, "Search the Scriptures," he delivered an earnest, stirring appeal on studying and preaching the Word of God, because it alone can make men wise unto salvation.

In the evening, the opening speaker was Mr. John G. Govan, of the Faith Mission. Referring to Mordecai's words to Esther, "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" (Esther iv. 14), he pointed out that no one is of much use in helping on the Kingdom unless he has got hold of the truths in the Word of God about the present condemned conditions of the unbeliever, about future punishment, and about Christ's love. Mr. W. M. Oatts having prayed, an address on 2 Tim. iii. 3-16, "All scripture . . . . is profitable," was given by Mr. Wm. Thomson, jun., evangelist. It was because the theme of the Scriptures was Christ that they were profitable, and he mentioned that he had been once asked, "Who were his favourite authors?" to which he had replied, "Moses, David, Isaiah, Matthew, John, Paul, &c.," a reply his questioner had not reckoned on receiving.

At eleven o'clock Mr. Wm. Thomson, jun., gave an address on the words of the Holy Ghost: "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them" (Acts xiii. 2). He said that at the foundation of enterprise there must be realization of need, with intensity and fixity of desire. Mr. Richard Hill, who followed, was introduced by the chairman as the "veteran Scottish evangelist." "Go ye, and make disciples of all nations," was the keynote of his address. "No line of method is laid down; simply, Go, and make disciples. Paul's maxim was, 'By all means save some;' and again, 'Not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many that they may be saved.' A spirit like that will make us win souls."

CHEAP, CHEERY OPTIMISM.

In the afternoon gathering Mr. John George Govan spoke first, one of the points of his address being that "some are earnest workers for God, who are not workers with God—they often run before him." Rev. John McNeill spoke on the three words: "Need, Enterprise, God." "Let us face the need," he said, "and let us be done with a cheap, cheery, sentimental optimism. Non-church-going is as patent in the west-end as in the east-end. We see the multitudes hurrying to their work, to their meals, to the football field; but we don't see them running to the house of God. Unless we look at the crowd through Christ's eyes we will get into a state of miserable pessimism. Enterprise means something daring."

An open conference was held at six o'clock, when reports were given and difficulties of carrying on work in out-of-the-way villages considered. At the closing meeting of the day Mr. McNeill gave a rousing address on "Bringing up the Ark on a New Cart." "Putting the ark on the cart was," he said, "a trick they learned from the Philistines. They played with all their might, but all the time they were mightily wrong. If anyone had said, 'Is there not a text in the Book of Exodus about carrying the ark?' the answer would have been, 'Oh, you old fanatic!' Even David could go elaborately astray, for behind the new cart and the trumpeting, and the fanfare was an offended God, and judgment fell."

On Saturday morning there was a splendid muster at the early prayer meeting, and an exhilarating spirit prevailed. The gathering in the forenoon was addressed by Rev. J. Stuart Holden and Mr. John George Govan, and both spoke excellently and well on the subject for the day: "Prayer in its Relation to Evangelistic Work." Speaking of the priesthood of believers, Mr. Holden emphasized the twofold work of the priesthood, that of representing men before God, and God before men, making also the beautiful remark that "the impression got of God in the holy place gives expression to our appearance before men."

An interesting open session was held at 2.30. Then at four o'clock a large audience assembled, and the speakers were Rev. D. M. McIntyre, Mrs. Colville, of Cleland; and Mr. W. M. Oatts. Words full of grace and power were spoken, the fragrant memory of which will not soon fade away.

When the closing meeting of the three days was reached, there was an open time for testimony; after which addresses were delivered by Mr. William Thomson, jun., and Rev. J. Stuart Holden, of a scriptural and helpful order. To many, especially to workers from country districts, the three-days' meetings were a period of great refreshing, and will doubtless, through the stimulus received, aid them in their soul-winning endeavours in their own districts. Glasgow United Evangelistic Association.

THE twenty-ninth annual meeting of the above Association was held in St. Andrew's Hall, on Monday evening of last week. It was a magnificent gathering, the great hall being densely crowded. The demand for tickets of admission had been far beyond normal, and thousands were disappointed on finding that tickets could not be obtained. So great was the rush for them that the space available could have been filled several times over, the special mission of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, which had closed the evening before, accounting for the great demand.

Lord Overtoun occupied the chair, and to the right and left of him were Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, looking fresh and fit after their month's strenuous toil.

The first item on the programme was that of drill display by a group of twelve little girls from the Saltcoats Home, where the children are sent from the city, and cared for by the Association. In the chairman's address, which followed, an account of the work for the year was given under the three heads of Preparation, Evangelization, Amelioration. The work of preparation was shown to include that of the Bible Training Institute, where there are eighty-seven resident students; that of evangelization as seen in the regular Gospel work carried on in the Tent Hall, Bethany Hall, and Mizpah Hall, with special missions in addition; that of amelioration, as exhibited in the Free Breakfast for men and women, and the Free Dinner for children every Sabbath; the Fresh-Air Fortnight Scheme, by which 8,000 children were sent to the coast last season for two weeks; the Cripple Children's League of Kindness, etc. During last year the sum of £25,000 had been received, and the expenditure had been over £24,000.

Miss Adams, of the Bible Training Institute, having sung "There shall be no night there," Rev. John McNeill was called upon to speak. He said he was sorry he had not been in the movement that Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander had been carrying on, for he liked to be in "a big thing." He had been with Dr. Barnardo, that king of waifdom, in the East of London, a dark place; but one where Dr. Barnardo had kindled a fire. The whole of Glasgow, he hoped, would feel the uplift of Dr. Torrey's mission, and he was sure that modern criticism had got a considerable settling down during the last month. Such a movement was always one up for the old Book. "As for the young converts, you may depend upon it that they will be total abstainers. Conversion solves the drink problem."

Mr. Alexander sang sweetly and thrillingly the hymn that begins:

Some day the silver cord will break.

When in response to the chairman's announcement, Dr. Torrey rose to speak, the great audience rose as one man. Handkerchiefs fluttered all over the building, and the place hummed with interest. It was a great outburst of popular acclaim. Dr. Torrey's address was on "Lessons from the Life of D. L. Moody," and was closely followed. His points were—the Power of Personal Work, of the Passion for Souls, of the Word of God, &c. Afterwards Mr. Alexander was asked if he had a word to say, and when he rose again the great congregation rose en masse, and waved their handkerchiefs in great style. It was a striking tribute to one whose musical gifts have accomplished wonders in the course of the mission. He did not address the meeting, but simply read a letter about a "jail-bird" who had been benefited by the singing of:—

There's not a friend like the lowly Jesus.

The meeting was closed with the singing of God be with you till we meet again, and prayer by Rev. Mr. Bisset; but a second meeting was held, at which souvenirs were presented to Dr. Torrey, Mr. Alexander, Mr. R. Lowe, their secretary, and Mr. Robert Harkness, the brilliant pianist whose skill has excited great admiration. J. C.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

FALKIRK.

DR. HENRY commenced his second mission in Falkirk on Saturday, March 21st. At his first visit his addresses were admirable expositions of the principles of the Temperance movement, with cogent arguments and facts in support of total abstinence. On his second visit the evangelistic element predominated. Dealing with the drink question, he took it up in the Bible aspect, and laid the strongest emphasis on the sin of drinking and drunkeness. His addresses were founded on well-chosen Old Testament words and incidents, which arrested the attention and deepened the interest as the subject was opened up from point to point, closing always with urgent appeals for decision. His words were sharp in the heart and conscience of many. They brought quickening to believers, and conviction to the unsaved. Every evening at the close some came forward to confess Christ.

This second visit will long be remembered in Falkirk as a time of much blessing. The special feature of it was that it touched the conscience and awakened searching of heart. It was impossible to listen to the addresses without being led to consider one's own ways.

Dr. Henry's addresses were signally enforced by the songs of Mr. Armon Jones. Every word, uttered with such crisp, clearness of enunciation, with tenderness or full emphasis as the truth required, went to the heart of the hearers and deepened the impression of the address. In this way we were often reminded, as we listened, of the days when Mr. Sankey first introduced his "Sacred Songs and Solos" as an aid to evangelistic work.

JAMES HUNTER.

In the course of an interesting letter, Mr. D. E. MacInnes says:—"Dr. Henry's mission proved to be one of the most fruitful held in Falkirk for many years. By Thursday of the first week a number asked prayer, and several inquirers came to the front. The Sabbath found many Christians full of expectancy and prayer. The Town Hall was crowded with women at the afternoon service, and between sixty and seventy sought Christ. At the evening meeting, for men, the same hall was packed and many were turned away. At the close many anxious souls were dealt with. On Monday and Tuesday the meetings were again very encouraging. Wednesday afternoon was a wonderful time. At the evening meeting Dr. Henry gave an impressive address on "The Great Red Dragon." On Thursday, which was fair day, gatherings were held both afternoon and evening. They were very large and fruitful. Friday, the last night of the mission, was a memorable one. Dr. Henry spoke to those who had taken the pledge, urging them to take still another step. There were many responses to the solemn appeal.

"Dr. Henry is a great evangelist as well as a great temperance speaker. He reasoned with his audiences of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come until many were impressed. At the close of each meeting thoughtful men and women decided for Christ. New life and energy have been imparted to Christians. Already several of the young converts have told their ministers, and they, in turn, are thankful to God for the work that has been done.

LINCOLN.

The mission at Lincoln opened well on Saturday last, with an address in the new Central Hall. On the Sabbath afternoon the P.S.A. was addressed, and in the evening there was a great meeting in the Central Hall. The mission concludes to-morrow (Friday).

Young Women in London.

THE annual meetings of the London Young Women's Christian Association, held on Thursday, marked the passing of another milestone in the history of a movement the usefulness and influence of which are becoming recognised and felt throughout the Metropolis. Instead of the usual spring conference two gatherings were arranged at Morley Hall and well attended. At the former Dr. HARRY GUINNESS gave a devotional address, while in the afternoon the subject of "Association Girls of Other Countries" was considered, MRS. GEORGE CAMPBELL presiding.

INSTITUTES AND HOMES.

To represent the work of the Institutes and Homes in a few lines is not easy. The Central Institute is well to the front with a total of 816 members; 250 members are new this year, and as many as 200 have been present at the Thursday evening service. The Finsbury members continue to support their own missionary. At Princess House there is a steady increase in the Institute membership. At the Noon Rest Room, in the City, 7,738 lunches were served as against 5,228 in 1901, an increase of 2,510. The "Cambridge" Institute and Home (Holloway), is increasing in usefulness, and, in addition to housing permanent boarders, has accommodated visitors from America, Australia, India, &c. Upwards of 1,500 persons passed through Kent House, including various nationalities. There are 40 other Institutes and Homes in London, including St. John's Wood, Hampstead, Kilburn, Crouch End, &c., and the record of many of these is as favourable as it is encouraging.

A MUNIFICENT GIFT.

Nearly every part of Exeter Hall was occupied for the evening meeting, the audience being composed almost entirely of ladies. One of the most interesting items in the proceedings was the announcement by LORD KINNAIRD (who presided), of a munificent gift from a gentleman who for some years has taken a deep interest in the Welbeck Home and Restaurant, and in Ames House. This friend has given the sum of £18,000 for the purchase of a site in Mortimer Street and the erection of a new building to enable the two homes and restaurant to be amalgamated. His purpose is to build a home and restaurant suitable for so central a position with better accommodation for boarders. Plans have been approved, and it is hoped that before the next annual gathering the building will be ready for occupation.

Certificates were then presented by Miss Morley to those members who had distinguished themselves during the year in securing new adherents to the Association, and the financial statement was made by Mr. W. JOYNSON HICKS.

THE INFLUENCE OF WOMANHOOD.

A forceful and striking address was given by Archdeacon MADDEN making a fervent appeal for a lofty standard among the womanhood of the Empire in the matter of patriotism, purity, and personal piety. A perusal of the records of history brings out the inevitable fact that the moral decadence of empires precedes material disaster, and a nation's downfall is almost without exception due to the low morality of its womanhood. The keystone of empire is the home—the centre from which proceed all the inspiring and noble forces that go to make an empire great and glorious. Patriotism and purity of the true and permanent kind must be based not only upon morality, but also upon a personal faith in a living Saviour.

In the course of some fitting and helpful remarks, Lord OVERTOUN emphasized the need for personal holiness. The character of the nation is determined by that of the home, and the character of the home by that of the individual. He thanked God for all the Association is doing for the women of our land in bridging the gulf between poverty and wealth, and demonstrating that the problem of the sin and poverty which abound cannot be solved apart from the grace and Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Saving the Lads.

THAT excellent institution, the Homes for Little Boys at Farningham and Swanley (Kent), held its thirty-ninth anniversary last week, Lord Balfour of Burleigh presiding. Addresses were given by the Chairman, Rev. F. S. Webster, General Oliphant, and Mr. E. S. Hanbury, who laid the following facts before the subscribers:—Sixty of the boys in the school at present are sons of men who died in the service of the Royal Navy, while 100 old boys served in the South African war, and of these one had gained the Victoria Cross; 448 boys are at present being educated in the homes and brought up to follow useful professions. If it were not for these homes many of these would undoubtedly have swelled the large class of criminals. The Chairman illustrated this from his own experience; for, in Scotland, in one prison, he had himself traced the life history of some 1,200 prisoners, and had found that out of this number 75 per cent. had begun their criminal career before they were eighteen years of age.

The object of the Homes is to prevent crime rather than to cure it, and to educate the boys to be good citizens of the State.

Mr. E. S. Hanbury said that the Homes were the pioneers of the cottage home system, and had served as a model to several philanthropists, including Mr. Quarrier, whose Orphan Homes at Bridge of Weir are planned on this model. The cost of keeping up the Homes is £13,000 per annum, while the total income for the year was only £8,550. The chief wants of the Home were a gymnasium, swimming bath, and chapel, in fact the necessary appliances for educating boys to the standard of mens sana in corpore sano. During the evening donations were received to the amount of £2,163.

Postal Employés' Conference.

THE annual gathering of the senior branch of the Postal, Telegraph and Telephone Christian Association was held at the City Temple, March 24 and 25. The workers praise the Lord for spiritual blessing on those days. Rev. J. J. Luce's inspiring words and Dr. Pierson's earnest address will long be remembered. In the prayer-meetings and times of "waiting on God," Mrs. Ewbank and Miss Heath gave help.

The morning conferences were very encouraging. Accounts were given of steady, quiet work in the home branches, both among the men, and also in the Y.W. branches of the lady clerks. One young member told how he had been used to attend "Christian Endeavour" and other helpful meetings on week evenings, until coming into the Post Office, when these were all cut off by his office hours; and then how encouraging it was to have the weekly P.T.C.A. meeting, held in the afternoon at an hour when he could attend it, and close to his office.

The accounts of the work of the Association among the postal employés in foreign and heathen lands filled all hearts with praise and joyful expectation. Reports were given of fruitful openings in Italy, Sweden, Germany, India (where three native evangelists are travelling from office to office, and four Gospel magazines in native dialects are in circulation for postal employés), and South America, where the Gospel magazine in Spanish is so well received, and a colporteur has begun to visit the post offices, carrying them Bibles; also of the welcome given to the P.T.C.A. among lonely postal officials of the Colonies, to some of whom it is almost their only spiritual help. An invitation was also given to join the new Prayer Union for the post officials of China.

As prayer after prayer arose on behalf of these needy comrades in far-off lands, and for strength to witness for Christ and win souls to Him among comrades in the offices at home, many thanked God and took courage. The work is cordially commended to the Lord's people. Further particulars may be had from Miss Edmonstone, P.T.C.A. Senior Institute, 17, Bartholomew Close, London, E.C.

The Metropolitan Theatre.

WE are closing the above Theatre for the twenty-eighth season on Easter Sunday, and are thankful to report that great encouragement has been given us in the many conversions we have seen. Many of our workers and friends are rejoicing over relatives who have been brought under the Gospel's power, either in the Theatre or in Hyde Park Hall.

Recently four in one family, including the husband and wife, were found seeking the Lord; and since, two others have been brought by them, and all six are now rejoicing in Christ. Several foreigners have also been brought in, and almost every week there are backsliders seen who have been convicted of their folly in leaving the fold.

It appears more difficult than ever to get at the masses of the people, and although we have this year again maintained the large congregations we usually see, yet there are so many more attractions for the people to draw them away from attending places where the simple, pure Gospel of the Grace of God is preached.

The Sunday League alone hold concerts and give lectures which are in no wise sacred in at least twelve theatres and public halls in London on Sunday evenings, paying as much as £40 per week in some cases, and charging from 6d. to 3s. for seats; and these places are invariably full. Hence they are encouraged to take other places.

I hope, however, to secure our theatre again from October. The singing of Madame Annie Ryall has been greatly blessed, and many owe their conversion through being awakened by her spiritual songs, whilst our own choir have attracted others to attend the services. Our Sunday afternoon meeting for Christians at Hyde Park Hall has grown in numbers and interest, and the workers are preparing and praying for our coming campaign in Hyde Park.

We commence our thirty-second year of services on the first Sunday in May, and shall be grateful for the prayers and fellowship of all the Lord's people. We provide a hymn-sheet programme for everybody attending the Park services, at the close of which a meeting is always held at Hyde Park Hall, and thus we seek to draw in those who are anxious.

To clear our liabilities we are needing £110 for rent of theatre for some fifteen Sundays, and trust we may go forward for another year in Hyde Park free of debt. Concerning the past thirty-one years, we can truly say "Ebenezer," and touching the future we ought to exclaim "Hallelujah!" Charles Cook.

11, Walpole Gardens, Chiswick, W.

Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn.

THESE workers are meeting with much encouragement in the gatherings which they are conducting at the Portman Rooms, Baker Street, W., on Thursday afternoons and evenings. Many letters have been received, expressive of gratitude for spiritual blessing. For example, a French lady wrote that she had been led away from Christ and Evangelical truth by Tolstoi's writings, but the meetings so powerfully impressed her that she is again seeking Christ. People of various nationalities, French, German, and Dutch, have sought spiritual guidance.

The chief characteristic of these gatherings is the presenting of the person and work of Christ in the power of the Spirit.

The presence of God has been realized in a remarkable degree, and souls have sought deliverance.

Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn sing together hymns of their own composition, which have been much used of God on the Continent, in other languages, accompanied by an accomplished Dutch organist, one of their helpers.

The meetings also held on Lord's Day last at Dr. Barnardo's, "Edinburgh Castle," Limehouse, were crowded, and seekers were pointed to Christ.

Obituary.

REV. P. M. WEDDELL.

THE home-call has come to Rev. P. M. Weddell, of Piqua, Ohio, who for sixty years was a devoted and successful minister of the Baptist body in the United States. He earned general esteem by his spirituality and industry, and was deservedly regarded as one of the most useful pastors of his day. He was the father of Mrs. Henry, wife of the eminent evangelist and temperance reformer, Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry.

MR. R. G. COLHOUN.

Christian circles in Dublin are poorer through the home-call which came to Mr. R. G. Colhoun on the morning of Lord's Day, March 22. As manager of the Great Southern and Western Railway Company, he had for some years occupied a position of great influence in Ireland; and one in which he commanded the esteem not only of the business community, but of the large body of employés who looked to him as their head. He was a man mighty in the Scriptures, noted for his gift of clear and forceful exposition; yet he was unobtrusive and modest, loving rather to labour and witness for God in quiet fashion than to appear prominently on public platforms. We hope to give a fuller account of our brother's career, with portrait, in an early issue.

LADY ANNE CAMPBELL.

The saintly life of this lady closed on earth on Sunday, March 22, at an advanced age. She was brought to the Lord in early life, and from the first was a very diligent Bible student. With her truly the Scriptures were the God-breathed Word, from the first chapter of Genesis to the last of Revelation, a faith which all the writings of the higher critics failed to shake.

Throughout her life she very successfully wielded the "sword of the Spirit" in dealing with individual souls found under conviction of sin in her many Bible classes and the inquiry rooms in connection with the great evangelistic movements of the day, especially those under the leadership of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in all parts of England and Scotland, but more particularly in London, in which great work she was wonderfully used of God. Truly throughout her lengthened life she lived "not for this world, but the next," and endured, as seeing Him who is invisible.

One of the writer's most interesting recollections of Lady Anne Campbell was in the year 1872 in connection with a visit paid on the invitation of herself and husband to Pwllheli, North Wales, where some never-to-be-forgotten incidents in the family history occurred, resulting in the conversion of two of the children in the Welsh chapel there on a Sunday evening.

Her daughters tenderly nursed their mother throughout the growing years of weakness and suffering now for ever closed, and husband and children are still with us to mourn her loss.

REV. JOHN ANDERSON.

Harlesden has lost one of its most devout ministers of the Gospel by the death of Rev. John Anderson, pastor of the Reformed Episcopal Church. His home-call has occasioned sorrow not only in his own congregation, but among members of many denominations in the neighbourhood. The late incumbent of Christ Church was educated at Dumfries Academy and Liverpool High School, whence he proceeded to Edinburgh University. On the completion of his course of study here, Mr. Anderson entered the legal profession, but the failure of his health in 1870 caused him to relinquish the law as a means of livelihood and go out to Egypt. On his return to England he was appointed lay reader at Stockport. In 1881 he was ordained to the ministry of the Reformed Episcopal Church, and entered upon the duties of a curate. After labouring in several provincial spheres, he was appointed incumbent of Emanuel Church, Gunnersbury, where he remained for four years. Proceeding to Harlesden in 1887, he gathered about him a numerous and strong congregation by his tireless energy and unremitting toil. The iron church became inconvenient, and the present structure was built. Mr. Anderson's influence was by no means limited to his own church and congregation, for his willingness to minister to the spiritual needs of those who were not members and adherents of his own place of worship was well known. He was abundant in labours, and he will long be remembered and loved for his works' sake.

MR. JOSEPH LUCAS.

One of the oldest and most highly-respected members of the legal profession, Mr. Joseph Lucas, who practised as a solicitor for many years at 1, Trinity Place, Charing Cross, and more recently at 21, Surrey Street, Victoria Embankment, passed away on March 26, in his ninety-third year, at Stapleton House, Upper Tooting, where he has resided for sixty years. Of Quaker stock, and belonging to the well-known family at Hitchin, Mr. Lucas bore throughout his long life an unblemished character for integrity and high-mindedness, and never failed to win the entire confidence of his clients and of his professional colleagues. Though he had long retired from active practice, he preserved all his faculties and even his physical activity to the last.

With Mr. Lucas increasing years brought an ever-widening outlook upon life, and an unfailing sympathy with the aims and aspirations of a new generation which was very refreshing. His wise tolerance, kindly charitable temper, no less than his absolute integrity, had their root in his deep religious conviction, and unwavering faith in the rulings of Divine Providence. This it was which gave him clearness of vision in life's vicissitudes, and courage and calmness in all the troubles and sorrows incidental to such an extended pilgrimage. Mr. Lucas was always a great reader of the best literature, and his eyesight happily enabled him to enjoy this pleasure to the last. But to him there was, after all, no book like the Bible, except that great book of nature which he regarded as no less a revelation of the love and power of the Divine Creator.

REV. JOSEPH WILKINS.

The passing away of Pastor Joseph Wilkins, which occurred on March 24, did not come altogether as a surprise to those who have known the indifferent state of his health for some years past.

Born in 1869, near Bath, his parents soon after removed to Bristol, where his early years were spent. He attended the ministry of the Rev. N. Haycraft, at Broadmead, by whom he was led to the Saviour and baptized.

For some years he was an active worker in the Bristol Itinerant Society, until he entered the Pastors' College about 1870. On leaving college in 1874, he accepted the charge of a cause that was being started at Maidenhead. There he was instrumental in founding a Church and building a chapel. In 1880 he crossed the Atlantic, to take up work successively in Boston and Minnesota. Returning to England, he was in 1883 invited to Swaffham, Norfolk, where his memory is still cherished and loved. There his health gave way, and he was reluctantly compelled to sever his connection in 1893, after a ministry of ten years.

His next pastorate was Wendover, Bucks, where he remained till, in 1898, he accepted the call to Attleborough. This pastorate he was compelled to resign owing to increasing weakness. His farewell was arranged to take place on April 1; but he was promoted to higher service a week before, thus dying in harness, as he had often expressed a desire to do.

Naturally reserved and humble, Pastor Wilkins proved himself to be a warm-hearted, staunch, and loving friend. He was a man of culture and refinement, but of a gentle spirit; a student and a preacher of the Word.

The Churches.

Church of England.

Rev. W. H. Maynard, who has been appointed to the important incumbency of St. Peter's, Bethnal Green, has been for some eight years curate to Rev. Henry Mason, Vicar of St. Stephen's, Bow—one of the best-worked parishes in East London. Mr. Maynard is an evangelical, and much respected among the parishioners of St. Stephen's.

The Council of the Church Association, at a meeting held on Thursday last, passed the following resolution, which has been forwarded to the Bishop of London:—"That the attention of the Bishop of London be directed to the idolatrous practices and illegal ritual still being continued publicly at St. Michael's, Shoreditch, by his own nominee, whom he has power to inhibit at his own absolute discretion."

Canon M'Cormick, writing in his Parish Magazine, gives an interesting and encouraging account of the progress of the work at St. James', Piccadilly. "The congregations," he says, have largely increased, and it is delightful and encouraging to see the galleries of the church, especially on Sunday evenings, so full. Without incessant appeals for attendance at the Holy Communion the numbers have increased considerably.

Congregational.

The annual report of Falcon Square Church, E.C., shows that twenty-eight new names were added to the roll of membership, and every branch of the church work is in an improved condition.

Between 500 and 600 ministers are now expected to be present at the ministers' convention which Dr. Horton, the chairman of the Congregational Union, is arranging at Hampstead from June 8 to June 12.

Baptist.

The infant church at Bognor continues to make steady progress. All the departments report encouragingly. The friends are hopefully anticipating the opening of their new school-chapel. Six candidates were baptized by the pastor last week.

A baptismal service took place at the Bank Buildings' Baptist Church, Weymouth, on the 29th ult., when nine persons were baptised by the pastor, Rev. A. E. Johns. The building was packed to its utmost capacity. The prospects of the church are very cheering.

Ferme Park Church, Hornsey, N. (Rev. Charles Brown), reports a net increase of thirty-eight members, raising the total to 813. The total income, including £302 for the Campsbourne Chapel branch and £427 for foreign missions, was £3,056. The reports indicate progress on every hand, increased congregations, enlarged income, and peace and harmony in the church and all its auxiliaries.

The church anniversary has been celebrated at Woodberry Down, N. (Rev. Richard Richard). Rev. John Bradford, who gave a stirring address, and other friends, took part in the public meeting. The reports were of a most encouraging character. The "Bright Hour" Mission services are attracting many. The home mission work has been greatly blessed. The mothers' meeting has over 300 members. A large number of workers have visited the people in their homes, tried to alleviate their sorrows and sufferings, and, above all, sought to point them to the Saviour.

The quarterly meetings of the London Baptist Association were held a few days ago at Devonshire Square Church, Stoke Newington, N. A carefully-prepared paper was read by Rev. R. O. Johns, of Dalston, on "The Desirability of Establishing Denominational Missions or Settlements in the Central and the Poorer Districts of London." Rev. Dr. Clifford also spoke, and counselled the establishment of great central missions in needy districts. It was agreed to ask Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, M.A., to re-open the discussion of the same subject at the next quarterly meeting.

The second anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. A. E. Underwood at the Avenue Baptist Church, St. Margarets-on-Thames, has just been held. Special sermons were preached to crowded audiences on Sunday week by Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, and on the following Wednesday an afternoon service was conducted by Rev. Charles Brown, of Ferme Park. The public meeting which followed was presided over by Mr. Percival Mallinson, and was addressed by Rev. E. W. Tarbox and other friends. A very encouraging report of the work and prosperity of the church during the pastorate of Mr. Underwood was presented by Mr. G. Ayres.

Methodist.

Rev. Dr. Clifford has promised to preach the Conference sermon for the Wesleyan Reform Union, at Rushden, in August.

At a meeting of the West London Mission Committee on Thursday, and at a general committee of the whole London Mission on Friday last, Rev Charles Ensor Walters was unanimously recommended to the approaching Wesleyan Conference as the successor to the late Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.

The Trinity Wesleyan Circuit, Bristol, is about to erect preaching places, both at Avonmouth and Brentry. Both schemes have received the unanimous approval of the quarterly meeting. Avonmouth is the larger scheme, and this school-chapel, which is to be built at a cost of £2,00 , is only part of a larger plan which, in course of time, will be carried out in this growing neighbourhood.

Rev. Arthur Wood and his colleagues, Revs. W. H. Lax and W. Sinclair Smith, are making steady progress in the Poplar and Bow Wesleyan Mission, E. Quietly but surely the alarming trust debts at Bow have been paid off, and the congregations in the six churches of the Mission are increasing steadily. Girls' clubs, a new Sunday-school, and open-air services are among the undertakings that have been initiated of late, are springing up on all sides.

The quarterly meeting of Wilts Wesleyan Mission, held at Melksham, was one of the largest and most representative held for some time. Rev. S. Wilkes presided. Progress was reported in all departments, and several new erections were reported begun or sanctioned. The membership returns showed advance in every section of the Mission, and the first increase reported for seven years, the numbers now being 1,067, with 103 on trial, and 142 juniors.

Presbyterian.

St. George's Church, Sunderland (Rev. J. Smyth Wood), reports a membership of 625 and an income for the year, of £1,600.

A new church has been opened at Muswell Hill, N., Principal Dykes preaching the inaugural sermon to a large congregation. Rev. S. Starritt is the first minister.

At the anniversary services of John Knox Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Rev. Alex. Connell preached with great acceptance to large congregations. In the afternoon Mr. Connell addressed the Sunday-school scholars, a large number of parents and friends being present. The earnest and practical discourses will be long remembered.

A gathering of the Eastbourne congregation was held recently. In the course of the evening, the minister, Rev. R. C. Gillie, speaking on church life, dwelt on the importance of comradeship. Reference was made to the successful mission which the congregation is carrying on at Willingdon. The Eastbourne congregation has enjoyed a period of much prosperity since Mr. Gillie's settlement four years ago.

Society of Friends.

William Hobson has visited Northampton, lecturing on the first two evenings in the meeting-house on "A Year in the United States" and "William Penn," respectively. His remarks on national character, informing words respecting Friends' usages, and helpful thoughts on Christian responsibility, were listened to with marked attention.

The work at Park Street Mission, Gloucester, has grown quite beyond the capacity of its housing. The room, which is the original Friends' meeting-house, is at least 240 years old, and is reputed to have had George Fox preaching in it. The building is to be enlarged at a cost of about £600. It is hoped that operations may be begun at once, so as to reopen in the early autumn. The work at Park Street comprises mission meetings, Bible classes, adult and children's schools, temperance meetings, &c.

The Lord Mayor of Sheffield recently attended a gathering in connection with the Christ Church Gospel Protestant Mission, Ecclesall Road, Sheffield, and in the course of an address said he had been struck with the difference in these days in the services that were held in many churches to what they were in his boyhood. There seems an inclination in many of those which are evangelical to follow—it may be at a considerable distance—the tendency towards a more ornate Ritualism. The Mission is to protest against that kind of thing; it seeks to attract sinners to Christ without any priest coming between, and to preserve simplicity in Christian worship.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. JAMES MACKINDER, of Sheffield. This amiable and pious man was well known in Free Methodism, being treasurer of the Evangelistic Mission, a member of the Foreign Missionary Committee, and a trustee of the College.—In the death of Mr. JOHN KERSHAW, Union Street Wesleyan Circuit, Rochdale, has lost its oldest local preacher. He was on the "plan" for 67 years.—Mr. JAMES DICKS, deacon of Salem Baptist Church, Cheltenham.—At Limerick, Mr. WM. NELSON, a most intelligent and truly devoted member of the Methodist Church.—At London, Mrs. JOHNSTON, widow of Rev. Ed. Johnston, Irish Methodist minister.—Mr. ALEXANDER CROIL FALCONER, an earnest Christian worker and an elder for many years in Camden Road Presbyterian Church (Dr. Thornton's).—At the West United Free Manse, Crossford, Lanarkshire, Rev. JOHN PRINGLE, a powerful preacher and much beloved pastor.

Giving on a Princely Scale.—A few weeks ago we referred to the gift of £10,000 by Mr. Robert Davies, Boddlondeb, Anglesea, to the Calvinistic Methodist Orphanage at Bontnewydd, Carnarvonshire. The same donor has now signified his intention of bestowing a gift of almost unparalleled munificence upon the Foreign Missionary Society of the same religious body. The sum to be handed over amounts to no less than £150,000.

Oxford Notes.

THE new archdeacon of Oxford, Rev. T. H. Archer Houblon, after twenty-two years' service as vicar of Wantage, has taken up his residence at Christ Church.

An Oxford branch of the Railway Mission has been formed to promote the moral and religious life among 450 men who are employed on the railway in Oxford, many of whom find it difficult to attend Divine service on the Sunday.

The Baptist Cause at Commercial Road celebrated its anniversary on Sunday. Rev. G. A. Ambrose, President of the Oxfordshire Baptist Union, was the preacher. On the Monday the annual sale of work was held, opened by the Mayor of Oxford.

Rev. A. J. Carlyle, City lecturer and rector of All Saints, continues his Sunday addresses on "Present Day Topics." Last Sunday he made a powerful appeal to Christian men for the spirit of unity. The addresses have been greatly appreciated.

Ritualism in Tasmania.—The sad state to which the Church of England in Tasmania has been reduced, by the spread of ritualistic practices and teaching, is indignantly described by Rev. H. C. Wisdom in TASMANIA'S PERIL. (1d. C. J. Thynne.) An earnest attempt is being made to meet the evil by the Evangelistic and Colportage Mission, which has now established depôts in most of the towns, and is putting into circulation large quantities of sound and useful literature. There is much need that the hands of this Mission should be financially strengthened, and that the Evangelical organ—the Christian Record—should be placed on a firmer basis.

Homes for Aged Christian Blind.—Mr. and Mrs. Bright (the founders and honorary superintendents) have now 102 men and women under their care at the North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind Men and Women (69-77, Hanley Road, Crouch Hill, N.), of whom fifty are over seventy years of age, eighteen over eighty, and four over ninety. Three of the inmates are deformed, blind, and paralyzed; while a fourth is blind and stone deaf. The steps taken to remove the debt on the laundry of £1,300 have been signally successful. £1,200 has been secured including £85 conditionally promised, and efforts are being made to raise the last £100 of the amount.

Scandinavian Sailors in London.—Mrs. Agnes Welin reports that the many-sided work of the Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home continues to be used of God. Numbers of conversions have gladdened the hearts of the workers from time to time. The efforts put forth comprise daily Gospel temperance meetings, personal conversations with the men, and the distribution of hundreds of books and bags, and in every direction there have been signs of these endeavours bearing fruit. The new annexe has now been completed, and the first occupants took up quarters there last week. The appreciation of the sailors may be judged by the numbers who avail themselves of the advantages of the Home, last year no fewer than 4,145 being admitted as regular boarders. It is encouraging to note that King Oscar of Sweden and Norway has shown his sympathy with the work by contributing towards the extension fund.

Bangor Homes of Rest (co. Down).—During the past twelve years these Homes of Rest for the poorer working people in Belfast and the North of Ireland, have grown to such proportions that the four houses now in use afford accommodation respectively for about 120 girls, 120 mothers and children, 50 men, and 50 crippled and invalid children. In addition to inmates who come for periods of a week or a fortnight, large numbers go to the seaside for the day or afternoon. In connection with four undenominational mission halls a thorough work of visitation is carried on, needy and deserving cases are discovered and a helping hand is held out to young people, bread-winners, and others. The expenditure is about £1,600 a year, of which about £1,100 is provided by the people themselves. Funds are required at present especially for the erection of schools and workshops, in which the little cripples might be taught trades to make them at least partially self-supporting, and to provide a nurse for visiting and ministering to invalid cripples in their homes. Friends interested may correspond with Mr. A. W. Vance, 44, Wellington Place, Belfast.

AMONG THE MANY CASES RECENTLY PUBLISHED, the following will especially appeal to our readers.

A young woman aged 30, was accidentally shot in the eyes when two years old by a sister, and since then has suffered great pain, owing to some of the shots being left at the back of the eyes. Her mother is dead, and her father, an old man of 80, is very infirm, and has two other children to support. Contributions to this peculiarly sad case will be gratefully received by Rev. J. Pullein-Thompson, Hon. Sec., The National Blind Relief Society, 27, Tite Street, S.W.; or at the Office of "The Christian."

THE RAILWAY MISSION

. . AND ITS . .

CONVALESCENT HOMES.

ABOUT 15,000 RAILWAY MEN are injured every year in the United Kingdom by accidents on the line.

Many of these men suffer amputation of one or more limbs, and after discharge from Hospital require nourishing food and fresh air to restore their strength.

THE RAILWAY MISSION CONVALESCENT HOMES at St. Leonard's and Southport provide for the men in their time of weakness.

The Homes urgently need funds. Contributions will be gratefully received by Richard Nixon, Secretary, 1, Adam Street, Strand, London, W.C., who will send collecting boxes in which thank-offerings for journeying mercies may be put for the Homes.

Economy or Efficiency. We cannot help sympathizing with the letter from "A Missionary" (p. 19) in his protest against the habit of shelving men of matured experience in favour of those younger in years and but partially qualified for the work to which they are put. The acquisition of language, the study of a people, &c., in a foreign land, is a task of years, which increases the value of the labourer, and (granted grace and the power of the Holy Spirit) gives a fitness for effective service that a novice cannot possibly have.

It is not only in the foreign field that the same argument applies. "Too old at forty!" is the cry in too many churches in regard to pulpit ministry. Theology, like a language, takes time to acquire—and, not less, tact and experience in knowing how to handle people. Hence many thoughtful and holy men are doomed to be casual pulpit "supplies," while younger men are placed in the front rank on account of oratorical brilliancy, though their theology be crude and scarcely formed. The fact is, many men only really feel their feet at forty; prior to that they have been feeling their way.

Redeeming the Time. The reference to punctuality and method in Rev. J. P. Gledstone's article on "The Wesley Bicentenary" (see page 12) touches a real difficulty in ministerial life. We know London ministers whose names are not so much before the public as their gifts and labours seem to warrant, because they are occupied with the work within their own area. In other cases, home claims are partially passed over in favour of those made by the community at large. With many engagements and frequent late meetings, the necessity is forced on leaders of choosing among openings for usefulness. To each man will be given, if he seek it prayerfully, a vision of his own duty; and he must be prepared for the expressed disapproval of others, whether that path lie in the narrow groove or the wider field. But the treasuring of "minutes and hours as misers do gold" must be faithfully done, if a large part of life is not to be wasted. As diligence may in the end almost, if not quite, equal genius in fruitfulness, so single-minded earnestness will lift any life out of the common-place, and ensure abiding results. God is not unreasonable; but it is required in stewards that a man be found faithful.

Mission to the Rich. Dealing with some remarks recently made by General Booth in regard to a proposed mission to "the upper classes," the Daily News gives a noteworthy commendation of strong religious emotion. Latterly, there has been a tendency to look askance at anything savouring of excitement in evangelistic work, but in most great movements of the kind the stirring of the emotions, the personal element, and the comparative absence of argumentation, have been, to a great extent, the secret of success. As has been wisely said, "religious fervour is the most powerful and common sense agency of practical reform." The writer says:—

> Men and women of degraded lives ought surely not to be placed outside the range of Christian sympathy because they fare sumptuously, nor ought their position to exempt them from direct personal rebuke and warning.

The difficulty, however, is how to reach them, barricaded as they are in their high positions. We sadly need another Lady Huntingdon to rouse the religious feelings, and to reach the souls of those who are not accessible to the ordinary evangelist.

Wealth and Work. A recent writer has pointed out how fifty years ago physical science, with Tyndall and Huxley as the spokesmen of the moment, was drawing men's minds to itself, but that to-day the emphasis is passing to sociology, and the relations of men in the great human brotherhood. These, he says, are studies the New Testament commanded. If this be so, and undoubtedly it is the case, it is the province of Christianity to ask: "What does Divine righteousness demand?" and it is for each Christian to inquire: "How am I concerned in this?" Mr. King Colford has said that the great battle to-day is "the fight between God and our bank account," but if a rich man can have the privilege of advancing the Kingdom of God by the wise utilization of his wealth, the man who has not money to bestow may do much in loving deeds and in work for the Master. Certainly many of Christ's teachings, by direct order and by parable alike, regard the use and misuse of money, but the great condemnation is, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to Me" (Matt. xxv. 45). Many a man wastes his time in longing to do when he might be doing; in dreaming of brotherhood, when he might be seeking the lost.

The Casting Vote. Almost daily the Government reiterates through one or other of its members a determination to enforce its protection of the drink trade. We are glad, therefore, to find the various religious bodies throughout the country awakening to a sense of the seriousness of the position in regard to the threatened compensation, not of the publican, but of the wealthy brewers and distillers, and of the huge companies, who really hold by far the largest proportion of the public-house and gin-shop licences. It is for the united Church of Christ to decide. The time is not one for apathy and inaction, but for everyone who loves the Master to take a bold and open stand.

Out of the Depths. Mr. Charles Booth's newly-issued volumes, in the "Life and Labour of the People of London" series, certainly do not present a hopeful picture of results of spiritual work in the midst of the myriads of toiling, poverty-haunted lives. The task of regenerating "the confused aggregation of six million human beings which is termed London," seems to him an impossible one, and he regards despairingly the efforts which are being made to lift the cloud of misery which overhangs the slums, the alleys, and the streets, where immorality abounds. The huge compilation with its dread statistics, is a terrible indictment of our boasted civilization, and of the world-spirit which, while studying vested interests, neglects the nation's highest weal. It is impossible to believe, however, that all the spiritual force which is being expended upon the efforts to seek and save the lost can be wasted. That would be to doubt God's own assurance that His word shall not return to Him void. And while the dread descriptions and figures given by Mr. Booth are so terribly painful, it is certain that the condition of things would have been infinitely worse but for the untiring labours of the thousands of Christian men and women who have toiled for Christ's sake in the midst of misery and sin.

The Imbecility of Gamesters. No more damaging light could be flung upon any system than that which Rev. J. W. Horsley, the well-known ex-prison chaplain, has cast upon the results of sporting "tipsters'" prophecies. His carefully compiled table shows that out of 159 forecasts made by twenty-one sporting papers, only seven were fulfilled. Mr. Horsley does not speak too strongly when he refers to the "imbecility of believing in sporting prophets." Facts of this kind may well make us wonder what has become of the intelligence of the average man who abandons himself to the excitement of betting. These figures, too, offer an additional reason why "sporting tips" in newspapers should at once be made illegal. The Betting Commission proposed this: we only hope, in the interests especially of youths, that the recommendation will be carried out.

Bishop Westcott. Mr. Arthur Westcott's recently-issued biography of his father, the late Bishop of Durham is an interesting record of the life and labours of a man who, as he himself said, was inspired by a mastering desire to anticipate the transfiguring majesty of the Divine Presence. The Socialist Bishop, as he has been termed, certainly did much during his eleven years' episcopate, not only to bring social questions to the front, but also to solve them, and by the force of sheer goodness, to win the confidence and love of rich and poor alike. His life at Durham, however, was but the fitting complement of years of devotion to his Master. In word and deed, by pen and voice, he was incessantly holding up Christ and Him crucified. As another writer has said:—

> He lived on the heights; something of the glory seemed to have descended on him as, with rapt face and eyes that saw things hidden from the crowd around, he proclaimed the reality of things unseen.

Cheapening the Cross. Preaching at one of the City churches, the Bishop of London summed up in a few sentences the most influential causes of the religious decadence of the present day. He said that two things to-day cheapened the cross of Christ—first, that people had become so accustomed to hear the story of the sacrificial death of Jesus that it ceases to make any impression upon them; second, "the almost total loss of the sense of sin." Unhappily, however, apathetic attitude is not confined to the hearers, and, in fact, only too frequently it is but the relative of that of the preacher who does not evidence by earnestness and a burning desire to win souls that he has experienced the saving power of faith in Christ. With him, as with the languid occupant of the pew, familiarity has had its proverbial effect, and the need of inspiration is as vital in the one case as in the other.

Absolution versus Advice. We cannot believe that at this time of day people do not know the difference between the absolution officially pronounced by a "priest" in the Confessional, and godly and helpful advice offered by a servant of the Lord Jesus to perplexed inquirers. Driven hard for an argument, Sacerdotalists have often charged Evangelicals with favouring a modified Confessional (and thus admitting the main principle), in the work of the inquiry room, or in offering spiritual advice. It is an entirely baseless charge. There is no point of contact between the two. Every believer has the privilege, and the obligation also, to direct any inquirer into the way of truth. The Divine Word is given us for that purpose. But no man, whether styled "priest" or not, has any right to offer absolution. "He pardoneth and absolveth all them that truly repent and unfeignedly believe His holy Gospel."

A Cry from the Pew. A faithful minister of Christ who never forgets that the true mission of the pulpit is to spread the truth as it is in Jesus, and whose sermons, therefore, are full of warnings and appeals to perishing souls, recently said:—

> It is a wonder, when we go on and on talking about something else, that some man or woman in the congregation does not cry out, "Sir, what must I do to be saved?"

If only such a startling interruption took place occasionally, how much less hazy preaching there would be? And yet it should be an ever-present thought in the mind of each preacher of the Gospel, that in the gathering before him, there are, at any rate, some fellow-creatures, who, weary after a week's struggles and disappointments and battlings with the world, have come in athirst for the Water of Life. To such the pulpit utterance should be as the voice of the shepherd calling the lost to the Master's fold.

Faith and Charity. The unhappy tendency to a lax and thoughtless toleration is becoming painfully evident in modern life, and the line, which should be a hard and fast one, between charity and tolerance, is no longer so clearly drawn as it ought to be. The via media is an easy road to travel on, and for that reason it is crowded with idlers who do not care to toil upwards. The mental confusion which results is pitiable, as may be observed day by day in the journals and in literature, where it is not uncommon to find soul-destroying errors and saving truths placed on the same elevation. This would be dangerous even if the highest motive of faith were simply an outward conformity to the canons of conduct, which it is not. It is one thing to be charitable in regard to the views and opinions of others, it is quite another to be tolerant of error. "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness?" (2 Cor. vi. 14.)

The Dust of the World. The discovery of the new element which has been named Radium, is remarkable, not only as pointing to the existence of hitherto unsuspected forces in creation, but also as exposing the folly of the dogmatism of scientists. How frequently have we been told that much of Bible statement has collapsed before the tests of science, and that some finite theory of the universe has superseded the inspired narrative. Yet here we have the unexpected discovery of an element possessing the quality of developing illimitable heat and light without combustion, and which throws off "spontaneously" minute particles travelling at the rate of 186,000 miles per second. It is said the discovery "will be of vital interest to the future of humanity." Meanwhile, it would not be without value if it inspired some of our scientists with a little more humility in the presence of the handiwork of God, "when He appointed the foundations of the earth" (Prov. viii. 29).

"And John."

By Rev. JAMES MURSELL.

HAVE you ever wondered why John is so persistently mentioned in the narrative of the healing of the lame man at the Beautiful Gate of the temple? Five times his name is linked with Peter's as the tale and its sequel are told. Yet, but for the inspired persistence of the writer, it seems as if John might as well have been left out. Peter is the prominent figure. He speaks the word of power; he stretches out the hand which helps the lame man's lamer faith to make its venture; he speaks to the astonished people and to the offended Sanhedrim. "And John" simply stands at his side, and says nothing, unless we conjecture that the words (iv. 20), which bear the self-same burden as those with which his first epistle opens, fell from his lips, "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard."

Why, then, is John included in the narrative? Surely not just because he happened to be there. If so, one mention were enough. This fivefold repetition of John's name, if not intentionally significant, is, at least, suggestive.

FOREGROUND AND BACKGROUND.

Peter is the foreground of this picture of the ascended Saviour's power. "And John" is the background. But the striking figure at the front of the scene is all the more impressive for the gentle face that glows on us from its retirement in the shadows behind. The background has its service to render as well as the foreground. "And John" had his share in the work and witness of that memorable day, as well as Peter. They were going up into the temple at the hour of prayer, and Peter found that labour for his Lord was prayer, "and John" learnt that prayer to God was a great work. Peter stood forward and wrought mightily in the prevailing name of Christ, "and John" stood a little way behind his friend, and did a mighty work of prayer in the same Name. While Peter was preaching, John was praying. Peter spoke to men of God, "and John" spoke to God of men. Each did his appointed work.

God needed Peter's preaching, but He could not do without John's praying. The man who laid hold on men in the power of God stood in the foreground, while he who laid hold on God in the impotence of man stood in the background. One completed the other; foreground and background made the finished picture of the power of God that almost breathes upon us from the sacred page.

There is still something of the same in Christian life and work. One man stands in front, the observed of all observers. When he speaks, gainsayers are confounded; when he works, the lame man leaps as a hart. In the wilderness of a dull and dreary age the waters of life break out, and the mighty power of God is made manifest in the sight of all. Another stands in the shadow behind. He has no popular gifts; he finds no opportunity of "far-resonant action"; he is an obscure man, a mere appendage, as it seems, to a more talented, and more conspicuous, and even more useful, servant of the self-same Lord. Perhaps the copulative that conjoins this Peter and this John is only visible to God. It is written in no earthly scriptures, but in the books that are being written in heaven. Nevertheless, the link is there. This modern Peter needs his modern John. Now, as of old, it must be "Peter and John." The great work in the sight of men can only be accomplished as it is accompanied by a great work in the sight of God.

IN PULPIT AND CHAMBER.

What takes place in the foreground is made possible by what goes on in the background. Those multitudes in the valley of decision—How came they there? That great man's wonderful preaching; that gifted evangelist's overwhelming presentation of the truth as it is in Jesus. Undoubtedly; that is quite true, yet not quite all the truth. There is Peter and his preaching; there is also John and his praying. There is Mr. Finney pleading with men with marvellous results; and there is his friend flat on his face in the secret place, pleading with God that such results may be vouchsafed, and not in vain. Who shall say which wrought the mightier work and won the richer reward?

Perhaps you are an invalid, and you have read of late the wondrous tale of what God hath wrought, and is still working in this and other lands. And the thought rose in your heart, Oh, that I could be an evangelist and win thousands to Christ! Well, if you cannot do so in the sight of men, you may do so in the sight of God. In your weakness and retirement, during the long hours when sleep is denied you, you can exercise a royal priesthood in the presence of God, and your believing and prevailing intercession will give you a share in the great work.

If you cannot be Peter, you can be John. Perhaps the weight of your own giftlessness oppresses you. "I am only a very ordinary man (you say)—just a bit of the background." Well, do the work of the background! Stir up the one gift that is in thee, the gift of prayer. Make full proof of the ministry of intercession, which never fails of its reward.

There is on record a legend of a mighty preacher who was told that the reward of his preaching would be given to an obscure old man who sat on the pulpit steps and prayed for him. You can do that. You can empower the preacher by your prayers. You cannot win men to Christ by preaching, but you can do so by praying. The gifted evangelist and the sweet singer cannot be made perfect without you. Your prevailing intercession lends force to their convincing and converting witness.

When great work is on foot, be constant in prayer. And as you read or hear of Peter, or those who follow him in the true apostolical succession of believing men, being used mightily by God, be sure that God also has a thought for John and his prayers. For it is written, not that Peter only wrought this mighty deed and spoke these memorable words, but Peter—and John.

The Importance Attached to Faith.

By Lieut.-Colonel SETON CHURCHILL.

I REMEMBER once a brother officer saying to me, "I do not understand this faith to which you say God attaches so much importance. I can understand His demanding good works, repentance, or love, but to me it seems quite unreasonable that God should attach so much importance to faith, by putting it before good works." This was a difficulty which once presented itself to my own mind, and possibly others are also troubled with it. If, however, we come to consider the subject calmly, it will appear that not only is the demand for faith not an unreasonable one, but that it is difficult to see how any other could be made. Far from its being a difficulty to me now, it seems to be the most reasonable thing in the world.

In order to understand the question aright, let us ask ourselves, What was the first sin that came into this world to mar God's fair creation? If this was put in the form of a question to a class in a Sunday-school, no doubt the reply would be, "Eating the forbidden fruit." But this would not be the correct answer. That act is mentioned as the first outward and visible sign of sin, but, before it took place, sin had come into the world in the most awful form, that of unbelief. Had our first ancestors not been first guilty of the sin of distrusting their God, we may rest assured of this, that they would never have yielded to the temptation of eating the forbidden fruit.

It is quite customary for monarchs to demand tribute in some form or other from their subordinates as a test of their allegiance, and a recognition of their authority. But the only test the heavenly King appointed was that His new subjects should show their confidence in Him by abstaining from eating the fruit of a single tree. Every other tree was placed at their disposal, so that the demand on them was of the lightest possible nature, which made their sin all the more heinous, as the temptation was so much lighter. But instead of trusting their loving Creator, they believed the father of lies, and lost confidence in their God, and then followed the first outward and visible sign of unbelief, the eating of the forbidden fruit.

UNBELIEF v. FAITH.

As unbelief was then the first sin that came into this world, is it not a reasonable thing on the part of the King of kings to demand the opposite characteristic, before He can again receive back poor fallen man? The antithesis of unbelief is simple faith, so that when we find in God's Word that so much importance is attached to confidence, we shall, when we understand it, cease to wonder any more, and recognise the sweet reasonableness of the Divine demand.

Christianity is unlike any other religion in this respect. All other systems of worship show their common origin, and their falseness, in making the Creator appear to demand from his fallen creatures such conditions as good works and love on their return to Him, thus putting the cart before the horse. True religion stands alone in demanding that the motive power shall be put first. There is much in God's Word about love and good works. Indeed, it may be said that from cover to cover that sacred volume is full of these things. But, even when it is not so mentioned, it is always assumed that faith comes first and foremost, being indeed the only soil in which good works and love can grow.

It is difficult to understand true love, even in human relationships, apart from confidence and trust. The child that has no confidence in its father cannot be expected to love him; the husband that has lost confidence in his wife, will very soon lose his love for her. When love has regained the old ascendancy in the heart, we may feel convinced that good works and everything else associated with it will follow. "If ye love Me, ye will keep my commandments."

Our daily experience tells us that this is the right order in the relationship of human lives, and we need not therefore be surprised to find that the Bible gives us the same order in Divine things. When our first ancestors refused their confidence to their loving Father without a cause, He drove them from the Garden of Eden. Man's whole relationship with his Creator was completely changed by that one act of rebellion.

THE REVELATION OF GOD.

In the fulness of time, however, the loving Father in Heaven yearned to reveal Himself more fully to His creatures. Having shown them their utter inability to understand their Creator, even under the most favourable circumstances, in which a single nation was selected to keep alive a knowledge of the true God, He once more took the initiative, and sent His well-beloved Son to reveal the Father, to show to fallen man that he had no right to doubt his God.

From that time forward how great a change comes over the language of the Sacred Scriptures! Faith, as we have already seen, existed in many cases before the Cross of Calvary was set up, but after that act of Divine love took place, faith, as the mainspring of life, was emphasized more and more; for, as the Apostle says, "without faith it is impossible to please God." The Father was too distant for poor fallen man, so He condescended to our weakness, with the object of winning our hearts, by revealing His loving heart, by means of his dying Son.

Hence the force of our Saviour's words, "He that believeth on Me, believeth not on Me, but on Him that sent Me. And he that seeth Me, seeth Him that sent Me" (John xii. 44, 45). And again, "If ye had known Me, ye should have known My Father also" (John viii. 19). "But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name" (John i. 12).

Many more similar passages might be quoted, and much more might be said on the subject, which space denies. Enough has, however, been said, I hope, to show the reasonableness of the Divine order of putting faith or confidence first, and when that is established, of cultivating love next, and from love will follow obedience and good works.

FAITH STANDS FIRST.

In 1 Cor. xiii. 13 the Apostle Paul says: "And now abideth faith, hope, charity (love), these three; but the greatest of these is charity (love)." Here again he puts faith and hope first, but he tells us that love is greater than all. Faith and hope will soon pass away, for when once the believer is face to face with his Saviour, these will sink into insignificance—a mere relic of the past. The Prince of Wales was for many years living in hope of acquiring the crown; but now that he is king, he hopes no longer. The soil produces the plant, the plant produces the fruit or flower, which is valued. Then the soil and plant, so far as that particular produce is concerned, need be considered no more. Love is the grand eternal truth, which will never cease to exist. But that love now, during this human existence, can only be produced in the soil of confidence and trust; therefore, though love is, and will remain, the greatest of all the graces, yet faith is put first in the order of importance during the present time, for without faith there can be no true love.

The three words, Faith, Love, and Obedience, may be said to sum up the whole of the Christian's life, and the stronger the faith, the better will be the fruit that grows in such a soil. Alas, that so many, leaving the Divine order, and neglecting faith, attempt artificially to produce love and obedience, with disastrous results, for "Every plant which my Heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." May He, by the power of His Holy Spirit, enable us to accept the Divinely appointed order in this, as in other things, and bring even our unbelief to Him who alone can give us true faith. "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

"The Lord Jesus Christ."

IN these "perilous times" truly we need to take all our teaching from the Holy Scriptures, and not to imagine that because this good man, or that good man, says a thing it must, of necessity, be right. The light, and almost flippant, way that the name of the Second Person in the Trinity is used is alarming. How did the great Almighty God speak? "This is My beloved Son." "Unto the Son He saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever" (Heb. i. 8). The Father calls Him "God;" man speaks of Him by His human name, "Jesus." Let us see how the Apostles (taught by the Holy Spirit) wrote of Him after He ascended. Luke, in the Acts, constantly calls Him "the Lord" (in chapter ix. He is spoken of as "the Lord" fourteen times). He is spoken of as "Jesus Christ," or "the Lord Jesus Christ," by Paul 186 times, by Peter eighteen times, by John thirteen times, by Jude four times. Dare we call this needless tautology? Shall we not rather say, that if this be so (and anyone, even a child, can search it out for himself), surely it must be according to the mind of God that we should give the Son the "honour due unto His Name."

The enemies of the Lord spoke of Christ simply as "Jesus" in Acts iv. 18 and v. 40; the vagabond Jews speak of Him in the same way in Acts xix. 13; as also does the man with the evil spirit in Acts xix. 15. Shall we do the same, or shall we give Him His rightful title—"The Lord Jesus Christ"? The days of reverence and godly fear are past, but God's Word still stands (Heb. xii. 28; 1 John iv. 14-15). Let that be our guide. H. T.

Loyalty.

Be strong for Truth, be bold to say
The honest word from day to day.

When Falsehood lures, and shams invite,
Gird on thy armour for the fight.

World's smiles are vain, world's praise is less
Than heavenly truth and righteousness.

And if through darkness, and through loss,
Shall loom the shadow of the Cross;

If tears and blood must pay the price,
Grace shall be given for sacrifice.

One knows the grief, the conflict sore—
The Lord has passed this way before;

And by His soul's long agony
Has vanquished powers of hell for thee.

Then fear not, faint not, steadfast soul,
Thou'lt win the prize and reach the goal!

"A Poor Lot."—The Catholic Times apparently has not a very high idea of the sustaining and abiding power of Romanism in the face of difficulties. Referring to the crisis in France, that journal says:—"French Catholics are a poor lot, as their apathy and indifference have shown, and to expect them to pay for the support of their priests and bishops is to expect to gather grapes of thorns and figs of thistles. Without a subsidy from the State . . . religion would shrivel up like a starfish on a sunbeaten shore. The clergy would starve, their parishes dwindle, and within a couple of decades, three-fourths of the churches be vacant of ministers and worshippers. . . . Her bishops are dumb, and sometimes deaf; her priests are frequently blind as well. To the world crying out for an answer to its pressing problems, they turn only too often a deaf ear; or when they do speak, use a language that is no longer intelligible."

Noble Sport.—So much has been said in favour of racing as a "manly sport," and as one for the abolition of which the nation would have to pay heavily in deteriorated animals, that it is quite startling to find from the records of the recent "Grand National," that of the twenty-seven horses which took part, no fewer than sixteen suffered grave accidents, that one had to be killed, and that another died, two, in fact, "being ridden to their death." Apart altogether from the immoral influence of the gathering, the blackguardism of a large section of the attendance, and the evil results of the betting, the list of casualties in itself forms a sufficiently grave indictment against racing; and it is time that we heard less of the manliness of those who support and encourage it. For cruelty of a much milder type than that which took place at the "Grand National," the cart-driver would be sent to gaol.

The Wesley Bicentenary.—4.

By Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE,

Author of "George Whitefield, M.A., Field-Preacher."

A LIFE so crowded with work as was Wesley's is only possible where system and habit have become second nature. With him, everything moved with the precision of a clock; his comings and goings could be absolutely depended upon. How to rise early in the morning, after an exciting service on the previous evening, is a difficulty some preachers do not find it easy to surmount. It seems never to have troubled Wesley, or Whitefield, or any of the early Methodists. They as misers do gold; time was the condition of service; they must have every moment for their solemn and delightful work of seeking men's salvation.

At a very early age, Wesley settled the question of the amount of time he must have for sleep. When he was a student at Oxford, he found that he awoke every night about twelve or one o'clock, which led him to think that he lay in bed too long; next morning his alarum aroused him at seven instead of eight; still he was awake at midnight. Then it was set for six, then five; and only when it was set for four, did he find that he slept the night through. Six hours—from ten to four—became his allotted time. Those days were prior to gas and electric lighting. Once he was astir, the day knew no idle moments. Fond as he was of conversation, even Dr. Johnson, who delighted in his companionship, could not detain him beyond the time he had fixed to depart.

Sixty years after Wesley had adopted early rising, he said: "By the grace of God I have risen at four o'clock ever since; and, taking the year round, I don't lie awake a quarter of an hour together in a month." When Wesley was eighty-five, he made an appointment to breakfast at three o'clock with Robert Spence, a bookseller at York, and kept it! To his coachman he said, before he went in to breakfast: "Have the carriage at the door at four. I do not mean a quarter or five minutes past, but four." As the Minster clock was striking that hour, he was entering his carriage!

DILIGENT BIBLE STUDY.

The habit of early rising, formed in early manhood, had the sister habit of Bible study. At twenty-six years of age he began, he said, "not only to read, but to study the Bible, as the one, the only standard of truth, and the only model of pure religion." When forty-three years old, he said:—

I am a spirit come from God, and returning to God. I want to know one thing—the way to heaven. God Himself hath condescended to teach me the way. He hath written it down in a book. O give me that book! At any price give me the Book of God! I have it; here is knowledge enough for me. Let me be homo unius libri. Here then I am, far from the busy ways of men. I sit down alone; only God is here. In His presence I read His Book; for this end, to find the way to heaven. Is there a doubt concerning the meaning of what I read? I lift up my heart to the Father of lights, and ask Him to let me know His will. I then search after and consider parallel passages of Scripture. I meditate thereon with all the attention and earnestness of which my mind is capable. If any doubt still remains, I consult those who are experienced in the things of God; and then the writings whereby, being dead, they yet speak. And what I thus learn, that I teach.

Wesley kept the same devout and practical end in view when he wrote his "Notes on the New Testament," which, he says, were "chiefly for plain, unlettered men, who understand only their mother tongue, and yet reverence and love the Word of God, and have a desire to save their souls." James Hervey thought that Wesley had been too sparing of his "remarks and improvements. Many expositions are too corpulent; yours are too lean." Wesley acknowledges his indebtedness to other writers and scholars, but insists that in his "Notes on the Old Testament" as in his "Notes on the New Testament," his design was to give "the direct literal meaning of every verse, of every sentence, and, as far as he was able, of every word in the oracles of God."

HANDLING THE SCRIPTURES.

Is there any connection in our days between a handling of the Word of God which sends some hearers away wondering whether there is any Word of God at all, and the indifference to spiritual things which abounds everywhere? Who can doubt it? The race for riches, the devotion to pleasure, the unchecked intercourse with the world, and that in its most doubtful pursuits in its shadiest places, each of these (and all combined), is doing immeasurable harm to "pure and undefiled religion;" but if the authority of Scripture is taken away, where is the effectual word of warning to be found? where the word of humbling reproof? where the words of rousing exhortation? where the persuasive "word of reconciliation"? where the "words of eternal life"? What has the preacher left but "words of man's wisdom," those of his own choosing, which can come to the hearers, not as the words of God at all, but as the words of man? And why should anyone trouble to go and hear only what a man has to say?

The only right and safe position, both for the soul of the preacher and for the souls of the hearers, is that which Wesley took, and Paul also long before him; it is standing upon the Word of God as the Word of God. If "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God," yes, and by men sent of God to preach it—then unfaith, active unbelief, cometh of the word of man, and by men whom God never sent.

While it is true that Wesley was "a man of one book," it is also true that he did not neglect reading, and that he was a keen critic of style, which, he maintained, ought to be simple and lucid. He also was wide awake to scientific discoveries and their bearing on human life. In modern phraseology, he was "a live man"—very much so.

EXTEMPORE PREACHING.

An incident in his young manhood had a mighty effect upon Wesley as a preacher. It occurred in All Hallows Church, Lombard Street, to which he had gone to preach a sermon for the benefit of forty-eight poor children belonging to St. Ethelburga Society. Wesley told the story fifty years afterwards, when he was again preaching in the same place. While his attendant was putting on his gown, he told him how he had come without a sermon on the first occasion, and going up the pulpit stairs he hesitated, and returned into the vestry under much mental confusion and agitation.

A woman, who stood by, noticed my concern, and said, "Pray, sir, what is the matter?" I replied, "I have not brought a sermon with me." Putting her hand on my shoulder, she said, "Is that all? Cannot you trust God for a sermon?" This question had such an effect upon me that I ascended the pulpit, preached extempore, with great freedom to myself and acceptance to the people; and have never since taken a written sermon into the pulpit.

It may be safely affirmed that written sermons would never have been the means of creating the evangelical revival. How much of the work is attributable to the remark of that unknown woman?

THE EARLIEST METHODIST PREACHERS.

Of the earliest Methodist preachers, Wesley himself says:—

They were young, poor, ignorant men, without experience, learning, or art; but simple of heart, devoted to God, full of faith and zeal, seeking no honour, no profit, no ease, but merely to save souls; fearing neither want, pain, persecution, nor whatever man could do unto them; yea, "not counting their lives dear unto them, so they might finish their course with joy."

Then, unhappily, in later life, he had to deplore some backsliding; and he was very frank in admitting it to himself, and very fearless in reproving it in the offenders.

Several of the preachers increased in other knowledge (as he had urged them to do), but not proportionably in the knowledge of God. They grew less simple, less alive to God, and less devoted to Him. . . Some of them began to fear the faces of men; to be ashamed of their calling; to be unwilling to deny themselves, to take up their cross daily. Wherever these preachers laboured, there was not much fruit in their labours.

His first difficulty had been to reach the ungodly; he found, in later years, difficulties enough among the godly, even among his own preachers, though some were always a joy. His hardest fight was not with gross and open sins, but with worldliness in many forms. It always is so. The deadly sin of this age, within the Church, is not anything flagrant, but insidious self-pleasing. The early Methodist preachers were powerful as reprovers of open sin, but when the sin is not open what is to be done? Love of pleasure, the lust of the eye, the pride of life may do infinitely more harm inside a religious fellowship than drunkenness or gambling, but who can expose and rebuke them?

HUNGER FOR SOULS.

While Wesley pleaded for the best preaching, he also insisted that preaching alone was not enough, "though we could preach like angels!" "We must instruct from house to house." If preachers object to this painstaking, time-consuming method, that it would leave them no time for study, he replied:—

Saving souls is better than gaining knowledge; by visitation you gain the most excellent knowledge of God and eternity; you have enough time to gain other knowledge, if you spend all your mornings therein; only sleep not more than you need; talk not more than you need; and never be idle, nor trifingly employed; if you can do but one thing, instruct the ignorant. I would throw by all the libraries in the world rather than be guilty of the perdition of one soul.

He used to remind his preachers that merely to preach a sermon was not enough; the solemn and all-important thing was whether any good had been done. It was this hunger for souls which made him an open-air preacher, though open-air preaching was always a cross to him; which made him a visitor, so far as he could be one, though visiting also was a cross.

Wesley had a remedy for "nervous preachers" which is worth quoting—and noting:

(1) Touch no dram, tea, tobacco, or snuff; (2) eat very light, if any, supper; (3) breakfast on nettle or orange-peel tea; (4) lie down before ten, rise before six; (5) every day use as much exercise as you can bear; or (6) murder yourself by inches.

Observe: he allowed a nervous preacher two hours' more sleep than he took himself. Whether he slept or woke, ate or drank, read or visited, preached or travelled, he did all to win souls and glorify God.

FAITH AND WORKS.

While holding firmly to the doctrine of justification by faith through the mediation of Jesus Christ, he had, especially in his later years, a great relish for sermons on good tempers or good works. The reason for this was that "the preaching of the Gospel," as it was called, had drifted away from holiness; and he said: "We know no gospel without salvation from sin."

Wesley has some thoughts on worship which are apposite for the present time. He rejoices that the Methodists of his day assemble in "a church which is not gay or splendid, nor sordid or dirty."

The persons who assemble there are—not a gay, giddy crowd who come chiefly to see and be seen; nor a company of goodly, formal, outside Christians, whose religion lies in a dull round of duties; but a people most of whom know, and the rest earnestly seek to worship God in spirit and in truth. . . . When it is seasonable to sing praise to God, they do it with the spirit and with the understanding also, . . . in psalms and hymns which are both sense and poetry; such as would sooner provoke a critic to turn Christian, than a Christian to turn critic.

If the sermon is, or ought to be, for the glory of God in the salvation of souls, what would Wesley have thought of those voluntaries at the close of services, which seem to be played for the very purpose of driving out of the hearts of the congregation every serious thought and holy desire? What would he have said? What would he have done?

A final word. This indefatigable worker, this truly successful preacher, this winner of souls, never forgot the deep meaning of the words, "not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord."

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, April 19. Job xiii.

SLOWLY the idea is gathering strength, and forming itself in the sufferer's mind, that he will appeal from his friends to God. Why should he not take his cause into the King's High Court, and plead it there? Why not appeal from God's Hand, heavy in its chastisement, to His, the Father's, Heart?

1-13. Job accuses his friends of deceit, and of speaking for God unrighteously, because they approached the consideration of his case with prepossessions against him. As soon as they heard of his troubles, they leapt to the conclusion that he deserved them all and more; and under this strong prejudgment of his case they came to their interview with him. God would appear, to reprove them for using their sophisms and fallacies against him.

14, &c. From this point onward the sufferer's thoughts turn towards God. On the one hand, he is determined to trust Him, though He slay him; on the other, he will maintain his ways before Him. To you, O suffering ones, reading these lines, there ought to be unspeakable comfort in this wonderful combination of submission and faith, of willingness to endure and yet strength to argue and vindicate. Often we cannot understand His ways, but we can always trust Him. We may bow low before His dealings; but, without wavering, we may repose on His hands. As our faithful Creator, our loving and Almighty Redeemer, He is pledged to perfect that which concerneth us. "What I do, thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter."

MONDAY, April 20. Job xiv.

This chapter is bitterly sad. The sufferer falls back from his idea of arguing his cause before God, and pictures the hopeless life of men, "too short and feeble to attain to the vindication which it may call for." The withering flower; the shadow that darkens whole acres of the mountain side, and is gone; the brief day of the hireling who continues not in the house of life, but receives his pittance and goes his way; the contrast between man and the tree, which at the scent of water revives after being cut down; the shrinkage of a river, yielding to the exhaustion of a great drought; the watch of a soldier, to be presently concluded by the coming of the relief guard; the slow crumbling of the mountain before the landslip (18); and the insidious action of the winter stream (19)—such are some of the exquisite natural allusions of this requiem, sung by Job over the family of man.

We are reminded of those magnificent lines by W. C. Bryant:—

The hills,
Rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun—the vales
Stretching in pensive quietness between;
The venerable woods—rivers that move
In majesty, and the complaining brooks
That make the meadows green; and, poured round all,
Old ocean's gray and melancholy waste,—
Are but the solemn decorations all
Of the great tomb of man.

There is clear evidence in verse 22 that Job believed in existence even in Sheol, but life and immortality had not yet been brought to light. He is arguing the case apart from the great truths of which Christ has been the revelation. Add to Job's conceptions this, that God is our Father; and this, that suffering is remedial and redemptive; and this, that an afterward is guaranteed, which will abundantly compensate; and forthwith a shaft of light strikes in on the pensive darkness of his lament.

TUESDAY, April 21. Job xv.

At this point the second cycle of speeches begins, and the feelings of the speakers are greatly intensified. "Each supports his views, not with argument only, but with sustained rhetoric, enumerating instances and elaborating pictures."

Eliphaz, for instance, begins to charge Job with specific sins—that he restrains prayer before God, that his speeches prove his iniquity, that he has turned his spirit against God, and behaved proudly against the Almighty. He meets Job's protestations of innocence by asking how mortal man can be clean in the holy eyes of God, and by quoting the proverbial words of the ancients—suffering indicating sin, and sin the result of suffering.

Several of these sentences have become very familiar through quotation and pulpit use; as, for instance—Thou restrainest prayer before God may well suggest a theme to the minister who would call his people back to fellowship with Heaven; Are the consolations of God small with thee?—a question to be put to those who grieve to excess, and refuse to avail themselves of the comfort of the Comforter; The heavens are not clean in His sight, how much less a man that drinketh iniquity like water! which reminds us of the necessity of the blood that ever cleanseth, because on the pleading efficacy of that blood rests our right to hold fellowship with God.

The closing paragraph (20-35), which describes the life and death of wicked men, is very striking, and is verified by daily experience. There is abundant proof that they shall resemble the incompleteness of unripe grapes that are shaken off from the vine (33); yet each sinner hopes to escape the just judgment of God. All may be canopied in the love of God; but those that trust in vanity, by it shall be recompensed (31)—as men sow, they must reap.

WEDNESDAY, April 22. Job xvi.

With a good deal of bitterness, the sufferer turns from his friends—"Miserable comforters are ye all;" and, as the R.V. clearly brings out, he says, that if only he were in their place, and they in his, instead of joining words together against them, and shaking his head with pride, he would strengthen them with his mouth, and assuage their grief with his consolations.

From his friends, he turns again to an image which he had used before (x. 16), and compares the pains he was suffering to the attack of some wild beast (7-14); and from this, proceeds to describe the anguish of his grief (15-20). But at the end of the chapter, a new thought begins to shape itself; and from his lowest despair he begins to catch sight of a vindicator, or a vindication, that cannot be eternally delayed. We should read v. 21, as it is given in R.V. marg. (Oh) that one might plead for a man with God, as a son of man pleadeth for his neighbour. Job wanted a son of man, and his prayer has been more than granted in the Son of Man, who pleads for us "not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life" (Heb. vii. 16).

Such is the ministry of pain; it clarifies the vision, and presses the soul to conclusions, which otherwise it had never attempted. In John ix. the pressure of his foes drove the healed man from conceiving of Christ as a miracle-working man to worshipping Him as God. The molten metal will clear itself presently, and then the face of the Refiner will be reflected on the clear surface!

THURSDAY, April 23. Job xvii.

Excessive mournfulness again drapes the spirit of the patriarch. Let us never judge those who are passing through times of great suffering, if they fluctuate to and fro, at one time seeming to have reached a firm standing-ground, and at another to be again in the depths. God understands them better than we can, and, notwithstanding all their rash and despairing words, at the end of the long trial He will say, to both critics and would-be comforters, "Ye have not spoken of Me the thing that is right, as My servant hath" (xlii. 7).

Job's spirit seemed utterly broken (1); his friends mocked his grief (2); his only hope was that God would be surety for him with Himself (3); as for them, surely they or their children would have to give an account for their unkind insinuations (5 and 8); he was as a man on whose face men spit (6 R.V. marg.); his body was attenuated to a shadow (7). Then, again, there was the hope that the tide would turn, and that even now he should wax stronger and stronger (9). But again the hope is drenched in brooding mists of despair—his days are past, his purposes are broken, his end is near; and when once he has gone down to Sheol, can aught break the silence of that rest? (15, 16).

Not so in haste, my heart!
Have faith in God, and wait;
Although He linger long,
He never comes too late.

FRIDAY, April 24. Job xviii.

Bildad, in this second speech, begins by rebuking Job for his contempt of his friends. Turning to his two friends, he asks why they should continue to give occasion for such empty words as had just been addressed to them; then turning to Job, he affirms that if he had not been punished, as he was being punished, the order of the universe would be reversed, and the earth become desolate through unrequited crime (4). But this could not be. No, the light of the wicked would have to be put out. It was inevitable that he would be snared like a wild beast, that he should be chased by terrors, until brought unto the King of Terrors, and that his very memorial should perish from the earth (8-21).

As we read these speeches, delivered by men, who had lived pure and holy lives, having the light of long experience and venerable tradition to lead them, is it not increasingly clear that man must have a revelation from God, before he can climb to that knowledge of Him, which is current coin amongst us, and which our heart approves? These birds do but beat themselves wearily against the bars of the cage. These childish fingers do but strum over the same strain. The heart of God is for them a plumbless depth. Turn to the New Testament, to John xiv., to 2 Cor. iv., to Heb. xii.! Whence come these magnificent assurances, palpitating with Divine Hope? There is but one reply. The Spirit of God hath revealed things which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived. Let us be more constantly thankful that we live not in the twilight, but in the meridian noon of the knowledge of the Most High.

SATURDAY, April 25. Job xix.

Job once more turns to his friends, accusing them of vexing his soul, and breaking him in pieces with words. He was unconscious of wilful sin, and therefore concluded that for His own mysterious purposes God had set Himself against him. What awful suffering it must be to conceive that the infinite God has some personal antipathy to the sufferer, which He is manifesting through the successive trials and misfortunes of this mortal life!

In Job's case his misfortunes were so aggravated that the hirelings who had sojourned in his house treated him as a stranger (15); his dearest friends were alienated (19); and the only sound part of his body was the skin of his gums and teeth (20, i.e., all he could do was to speak). Thence he suddenly soars into the majestic sentence:

I know that my Redeemer (Vindicator, Goël) liveth,
And that He shall stand up at the last upon the dust;
And though after my skin (is no more) this (body) is destroyed,
Yet from my flesh (i.e., the renewed body) shall I see God.
Whom I shall see on my side,
And mine eyes shall behold, not as a stranger.

The Lord Jesus is our Goël—He is our kinsman; He has taken us into eternal union with Himself; He has won back our forfeited inheritance (Ruth iv.). He lives in the power of an endless life (John v. 21, 26). As He was first, so shall He be last. As the Omega He will appear to put a close on the troubled history of the world, and to vindicate His own. "When He is manifested, then shall we also be manifested with Him in glory." Do you know this, O sufferer? If not, ask the Holy Spirit to inspire you with this hope that cannot be put to shame, that enters into the unseen, and keeps us from drifting amid the wildest storms that sweep the ocean. Say it over and over, with the certainty of a Divine intuition—"I know that my Redeemer liveth." F. B. M.

Other Lands.

A Chat About Algiers.

SITTING one afternoon in the little parlour of Mons. and Mme. Cuendet with Mrs. Matheson and Miss Coldstream, of Paris, both well known for their active interest in the McAll Mission, we heard of the work among the Jews, and the persecution to which those daring to confess Christ are exposed. Mr. Cuendet then told us of a touching case of conversion.

He went one day to see a Jewish convert who was ill, but by mistake entered another house, where he found a young man far gone in consumption. He seized the opportunity to speak words of life, pardon, and peace to an immortal soul. At first the poor emaciated body lay motionless, but suddenly the closed eyelids opened, and the man murmured: "Christ! peace! how beautiful!" Mr. Cuendet knelt by his bed-side, about to offer prayer, when the door-bell rang, and the mother of the young man exclaimed: "This may be my husband; wait a moment; he would be angry to find you here." However, on finding that it was not her husband, she had no objection to the prayer. On retiring, Mr. Cuendet hoped to come again the next morning, but was prevented for two days; when, on the third day, he appeared, he found the apartment full of Jews. The young man had just been buried. He died the very day the missionary saw him. "But oh," said the mother, "how I thank you for having come. My son had such a peaceful end! He repeated the name of Christ, and said how glad he was to go to the land of peace." Her husband stood by her side, and did not oppose when Mr. Cuendet proclaimed Christ as the Son of God and Saviour of mankind to those assembled, who listened attentively and respectfully.

When, a few days later, Mr. Cuendet repeated his visit, he found that the family had removed and none could tell him their address. Cases like this, he said, where a soul at the dying hour has taken its flight to God through Christ —the Door—have not been infrequent in his experience.

Mr. and Mrs. Cuendet, who succeeded Mr. and Mrs. Pearce, the pioneers at Djemaa Sahridj, have for the last sixteen years been labouring among of whom there are about 20,000. Besides conducting regular meetings, visiting the men and initiating new missionaries into the knowledge of French and Kabyle, Mr. Cuendet does translation work and itinerating in the mountains during the hotter season.

A few months ago, a new branch of mission work was opened by him, which is proving very successful. It is the Tuesday meeting for the blind and infirm. Over sixty of these attended on the afternoon we were there, all more or less afflicted, and very ragged—some crouching on their staves, others led by bright young boys who would not move their eyes from the speaker's lips. While many showed a lively interest in what was told them, some raised their hands silently to their foreheads. These gestures were signs of protest and meant witnessing to Mohammed.

The meeting-rooms are in the Arab quarters. As we came out, we met Miss Emily Smith and Miss Welch, looking pale and exhausted. "What is the matter?" With a sad smile they replied, "It is the parting." Obliged by the state of their health to return home for rest and recuperation, they had been saying good-bye to several Kabyle families, and with what heavy hearts God only knows! The question: "When are you coming back to us?" had to be answered again and again, and nearly everywhere the women cried out, "Oh, how long!" or, "What shall we do without you?" The missionaries had proved true friends to them, bringing them medicine, telling them of the love of the Redeemer, and teaching and loving their children. Their visits were red-letter days in the comfortless homes, and now all this was to be interrupted for months! If a soldier is removed from the battlefield, he is immediately replaced by another. In the case of missionaries, forced to leave the field, there is too often none to step in to carry on the fight with the army of the wicked one, who is not only, as Mr. Moody used to say, a regular church-goer, but also a diligent missionary for his own aims.

His instruments are many. Opposition seems to be in the air. If traced to its origin, it is generally found to have been reared in a Jesuitic cradle, bearing the name and face of anti-Evangel. To make it acceptable to the French, who, as recent events show, are no lovers of the Jesuits, a disguise is effected by which it appears to the public as patriotism.

A VALUABLE TESTIMONY.

The anti-English sentiment is played upon, and the people imagine enemies in those who only have the welfare of their souls at heart, and work in a far higher interest than any political advantage to their own nation. The Mohammedan Sheikh was better informed, who said to the ladies mentioned above: "I have been watching your conduct for years, and I have come to respect Christianity through your lives." Such a testimony outweighs all the gossip of anti-English prejudice.

One afternoon we called on Dr. Nystrom, the gifted Swedish missionary, who is a remarkable linguist, speaking ten or twelve different languages. Some years ago his health failed, obliging him to take to his bed. We were pleased to hear from Mrs. Nystrom that he is beginning to recover. All the time of his illness he has been cherishing the hope of finishing his work, and of presenting the Arabs with a New Testament in their colloquial. He had acquired it by taking infinite trouble, learning it from the people with whom he mixed, constantly going to their coffee-houses, and over cups of Mocha holding long discussions, &c., until at last he was able to reduce their dialect to writing. The translation is almost ready for publication, and we hope that Dr. Nystrom will have the joy of seeing it appreciated.

Before leaving Algiers, we visited the Protestant Orphanage built on the site which was the country property of the last Dey of this city. The Home was inaugurated soon after the French took possession of Algeria. Until last year the orphans were kept in the old Moorish residence of the Dey, now condemned to be pulled down. The new orphanage, which takes in boys and girls, is a large construction admitting much air and light. "It has one fault," said the matron. "There is a debt of 20,000 fr. upon the building." W. M.

Swahili and Arabs.

AMONG the numerous efforts put forth by the workers of the Zanzibar Strangers' Rest, that of taking the Gospel to the Swahili and Arabs is one of the most encouraging. In the annual report of the Rest we read:—Only those who have lived in Eastern countries, or worked among Mohammedans, can realise the obstacles with which the missionaries have to contend; the difficulty of carrying the Gospel there, is immeasurably greater than in the case of the heathen; it is frequently 'sowing the seed,' and then patiently waiting long, and praying for the Divine Spirit to seal the message; but His power has been seen, for prejudices have given way in some cases, Jesus has been confessed, for which we praise God and take fresh courage."

The services for the Swahili, held early on Sunday mornings, are always well attended, and numbers stay at the close of these meetings to inquire more into the Truth. At one meeting when the congregation numbered fifty, twenty were young intelligent men who remained the whole time and listened attentively. Mr. Knapman finds much encouragement in his class for young Arabs of good social position; the attendance varies from six to twenty; the cleverest of these young men is able to converse in English fairly well, and can write a short letter, but the educational part is introduced solely to secure the opportunity of preaching the Gospel. Mr. J. Theodore Isaac, 44, Coolhurst Road, Crouch End, N., hon. secretary, will be pleased to give further information.

Social Evil in India.

IN the course of a tour in India, for the purpose of enlisting sympathy in the abolition of the State Regulation of Vice, Mr. MAURICE GREGORY (of the Friends' Abolitionist Association) has given a number of addresses, which have been well received; and these have been printed in separate pamphlet form, in order that the good influence which they have already exercised may be spread abroad. MANLY MEN was given to the British soldiers of the Madras Garrison, and contains an affectionate appeal, backed up by facts, not to allow drink and the sins of the flesh to overcome them. Addressed to a company of Indian gentlemen, in the Hoshangabad Town Hall, C.P., CHRISTIAN FAMILY LIFE shows that the ideal of the Scriptures has behind it the universal laws which govern the world and the human race. The THREE GREAT TRUSTS which were powerfully pressed on the attention of the university students at Calcutta were (1) a man's own body, (2) his wife, and (3) his children.

To temperance and social purity workers in Calcutta, the salient features and results were pointed out of METHODS, SUCCESSFUL AND UNSUCCESSFUL, OF DEALING WITH THE SOCIAL EVIL; and a week later before the same audience, INDIAN LAW ON THE SOCIAL EVIL was thoroughly explained. SOME LESSONS OF THE INDIAN CENSUS OF 1901 were pointed out to a gathering of social reformers and leading university students. At two conventions of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the topic, WOMAN'S WORK IN INDIA IN SOCIAL REFORM, was dealt with in thorough and helpful fashion. As the outcome of numerous conversations with Christian workers among the troops, as well as with many of the soldiers themselves, a word of advice is offered to the friends of the British soldier in India, under the title A GREAT UNSOLVED PROBLEM.

Copies of the booklets may be obtained, for distribution, on special terms, on application to the Friends' Association, 47, Devonshire Chambers, Bishopsgate, E.C.

In the course of his latest letter, Mr. Gregory mentions that a copy of the pamphlet on Indian Law with regard to children fell into the hands of a missionary lady who was in great distress because a father and mother were trying to force a daughter into the life of a temple prostitute. The girl did not want to go. The lady is now fully armed in telling the child she need not go, and that the law will protect her; at the same time warning the father and mother of the consequences if they persist. Light will in this manner be poured into a whole neighbourhood on the subject, for the father and mother will be likely to tell everyone concerned.

The knowledge of the law in all directions will strike a great blow at the whole system of temple prostitution, for the singing and dancing requires years of training in childhood; and if the dedication of children could be stopped, a blow would be struck at the very roots of the system.

Faith's Reckonings.

BACK to the Cross I look, and wondering see
The Christ of God dying instead of me;
But gazing closer on that form Divine,
I see myself with Him—His death was mine.

Again, beside the garden tomb I stand,
And watch Him buried there with reverent hand;
But in that grave faith sees, not one, but two—
God hid me there for ever from His view.

But was that precious "corn of wheat," thus sown
In tears, wasted, or did it rise alone?
A fruitful ear bursting from 'neath the sod
It rose—its every grain a saint of God.

Since then, by simple faith ourselves we see,
Whether for death or life in Christ to be?
May the world henceforth, in our words and ways,
See Christ in us, to His continual praise!

Atrocities on the Congo.

RECENT newspaper discussions regarding Congo administration have provoked from Dr. Harry Guinness a statement on the atrocities committed in connection with the rubber régime, which is given in the April issue of Regions Beyond. He describes the lives of the natives, indolent and weak, and the methods of the European speculators, who bring enslaving force to bear upon their enterprise. He continues:

"The method by which the State officers and agents of the Indiarubber companies alike endeavour to secure the rubber, is by requiring the natives of all villages within hail of their various centres to bring in 2 kilos (4 lb.) of rubber per man every fortnight. The local agent receives this rubber, weighs it, and stores it in sheds erected for the purpose, paying the natives at the rate of about twopence per lb. for his trouble—an absolutely absurd figure, considering that the rubber fetches 3s. per lb. on the European market. In the event of an insufficient amount being gathered by any unfortunate individual, the agent inflicts on him a severe flogging with a strip of hippo-hide called a 'chicotte.' Twenty-five blows is supposed to be a maximum punishment, but fifty and one hundred are not infrequently given.

"The mere fact of an agent requiring natives to bring in rubber would, of course, be insufficient to secure an adequate supply, unless he were effectively backed by the armed native sentries who are quartered in the various villages, in order by 'persuasion' to induce the natives to secure the rubber. These natives are frequently bloodthirsty cannibals, who wreak personal vengeance on the miserable people whom they drive to the work, much as Pharaoh's taskmasters did of old; and whilst the present system of 'guards of the forest,' as they are called, remains, these brutalized men will be a perpetual menace to the down-trodden people. If, in spite of their terrorizing a neighbourhood, they are unable to secure a sufficient quantity of rubber, villages may be burnt, and innocent victims shot down. A few years ago such massacres were frequently signalized by the right hands of the victims being amputated and brought to the agent, to show that no waste of cartridges had occurred.

"The first serious atrocity of this kind with which one of our missionaries was brought into contact, occurred at Equatorville, where there is a mission station close to an important administrative centre of the Congo State. Mr. Sjöblom was holding an open-air meeting on one occasion, when two sentries rushed into the crowd, intending to capture a certain man who ostensibly had not satisfied them with the amount of rubber he had collected. Mr. Sjöblom was outraged to find that his very meeting was used to further such murderous purposes, and begged the men to stay their hands. This they promised to do, at any rate until the meeting was finished; then they seized the old man, threw him to the ground, and shot him before Mr. Sjöblom's eyes. In a few moments, the crowd had dispersed, leaving the missionary with the armed sentries, the bleeding victim, and a little lad. The latter was ordered to cut off the right hand of the dying man, who was still conscious enough to try feebly to withdraw his arm. . . .

"I was so moved with the horror of the situation, that I went over to Brussels in 1896 to lay the matter before Baron Van Etvelde, and the latter arranged for me on the following day. I had the privilege of a prolonged interview, and was enabled fully to present the ghastly facts of the case to His Majesty. I further enlarged on the suicidal policy, pursued by so many of the State agents, of "killing the goose that lays the golden egg," for, as I explained, only the native can work in such a climate. The King seemed greatly interested and pained by what I had to say, and subsequently humanitarian recommendations were sent to the Congo, with the effect that, of recent years, so far as our missionaries are concerned, the smoked hands are entirely a matter of the past. But alas! the abuses of the native sentries still continue.

"The difficulty lies, not so much with the agent as with the armed 'guards of the forest,' a fact that is well illustrated by an extract from a letter just received: 'The people are tyrannized over by the sentries, and therefore spend most of their time in the bush. I have been able to get very few people together, apart from the children. L—— is a sentry now, a scamp and a traitor amongst his own kith and kin." Nothing but evil can ever result from the adoption of such dreadful methods of intimidation, and therefore we urgently plead that effective steps be taken speedily to revolutionize the present disastrous policy, which is diametrically opposed, not only to the well-being of the natives, but also to those humane sentiments on the basis of which the Congo Free State was brought into existence.

"We have no quarrel with individuals, but, in common with the whole of civilized Europe, we deplore a system that has its foundation in the lust for gold unfortunately characteristic of many other nations besides our own. Not only have our missionaries made urgent representations to the proper authorities on the Congo whenever occasion has demanded, and our Council in London communicated through me with the responsible heads on the Continent, but I have taken pains in every public lecture on Congo affairs to explain the rubber régime.

Revisiting Morocco.

By CHARLES COOK.

FIFTEEN years ago the British Ambassador—the late Sir W. Kirby-Green—said to me in his house in Tangier, "The Sultan told me he found it cheaper to let his prisoners die of starvation, than to pay the butchers' bill to have them killed." Perhaps happily, this man has passed away, and a successor reigns who is credited with a desire to establish a better order of things. Recent events have strengthened the hand of the Sultan, and if able to redeem his promises, the prisons may not be the habitations of cruelty which they have so long been.

At Fez, where the Court is in residence, the prisons have had some measure of cleansing, and things are not so bad as they were.* Tetuan, which I visited when last here, is still very bad. Six years ago there were 150 prisoners. When the present ruler came into power he released fifty, but the rest had all died, and many of those who survived died soon after their release, some having passed through the hospital of the North Africa Mission.

On inquiry, I found that no one was allowed inside the prisons at Tangier. Formerly, if any charitably disposed person desired, he could take food with him and give to the prisoners in the different wards or dungeons inhabited. I was glad, however, to hear that an English lady supplies water to the prisoners daily, and pays to have the prisons whitewashed occasionally. The authorities have been provoked to give a small allowance of bread, which our British friends will need to see is continued, and that the gaolers do not commandeer it for themselves. A Canadian brother, Mr. Elson, has been allowed to put his head through the hole in the prisons here—there are no doors—to preach the Gospel, and, when able, give them bread.

Having letters of introduction to our ambassador, Sir Arthur Nicholson, and others, His Excellency got me permission from the basha to enter the prisons, accompanied by Mr. Elson; and, taking 150 large loaves and 300 oranges, we started for the kasbah. Several poor creatures were too ill to lift their heads from the ground, their faces apparently bleached from lack of sunshine, without medicine or medical help. The place is decidedly cleaner than when I saw it before, but still foul smells pervade the whole of the interior.

I was glad to see the leading official had a list of the prisoners, and, calling out each prisoner by name, they advanced and thankfully accepted the loaf of warm, new bread, and two oranges. This went on till all were supplied. It is quite a new thing for lists of prisoners to be kept, but another great reform would be that when a man is put in prison he should know for how long he is to be immured. It seems that at present, when a man is brought in, for aught he knows he may be released to-morrow (if sufficient money be forthcoming), or he may die here.

Many are unmercifully flogged. Mr. Elson saw one brought out into the open to receive 200 strokes. He fainted at the fortieth, but the blows still rained on the back of the senseless sufferer. The British and Foreign Bible Society have just issued the Gospel of Luke in colloquial Arabic, and I arranged that all who could read should receive copies. I have often seen a man who could read gather round him a number of those who could not, and thus beguile some of the weary moments, which must hang so heavily upon their hands, almost without hope in the future, either in time or eternity.

Similar scenes awaited us in the second prison. When we went to the prison where the Jews are confined, we were told that they are always separated from others now. A number of murderers are confined here, and are more heavily ironed than the others.

FEEDING THE HUNGRY.

Dr. Roberts and his helpers were very busy in their Christ-like mission at Hope House, Tangier, the headquarters of the North Africa Mission. Most of the beds in the hospital were occupied by sad and weary-looking creatures of all ages. One man, who had spent some time in prison, was being carefully tended, and I could but contrast his position with those I had just left in a poisoned atmosphere. Mr. Elson is doing a useful work, itinerating at times into the interior. He has a night refuge, where he gathers some seventy of the poorest men who come into the city from many parts, and provides them with tea twice a week and shelter for the night. The Spanish population were keeping one of their many feasts, and holding high carnival; and it occurred to me it would be well if I could arrange to have a feast for the poor at the Refuge on New Testament lines. So we killed a sheep on Thursday, and, after the usual meeting of Scripture reading and Gospel preaching, we bade them welcome "In the name of God" (their usual phrase).

Mr. Summers, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, gave a most suitable address, and then the men, in circles of ten, grouped round large bowls of savoury stew, and, dipping their morsels of bread into the vessel, helped themselves with gladdened hearts and keen appetites; they usually subsist on bread and rancid butter. In some ten minutes the sheep had disappeared, and they were ready for a supply of oranges. The Gospel of Luke, in colloquial Arabic, was offered to all who could read, and I noticed one man reading to a small group of those who could not read.

Mr. Elson and a colleague, Mr. Nathan, had a very trying experience some time ago. They were itinerating in the interior, between Fez and a distant village, where they had been declaring the Gospel. Pushing on, they found themselves among a tribe who have never submitted themselves to the Sultan. They were surrounded by these men, and daggers put to their hearts. Apparently the intention was to kill them; they, however, spoke kindly to their capturers, and it was agreed to put them in prison in the town whilst the captors conferred among themselves. In the meantime, a leading man from another tribe had arrived, and, hearing of the imprisoned "Nazarenes," declared, "They are 'men of God,' and you must not kill them." This troubled the marauders, who, however, still refused to set them at liberty; but the man made our brethren's cause his own, and through the fear of a tribal war they were permitted to go back with their protector to be imprisoned in his village. Eventually, the mother of the man prevailed upon her son to take these "Friends of God" by a circuitous route to Fez, which happily they reached, and later on, at Tangier, they told of the Lord's deliverance.

* The chief prison in Fez is Zibbâlât en-Nasára, or "Dunghill of the Nazarene," so called because it was originally a filthy dungeon in which white slaves were confined.

Growth of Romish Power.

A REMARKABLE STATEMENT.

A REMARKABLE article, appearing in a recent number of the Neue Kirchliche Zeitschrift, of Leipzig, merits the careful attention of English statesmen. It is written by one who knows what he is talking about—the German historian, Dr. Kolde.

"Few people," he says, "and only those who have studied recent events in the light of history, have any idea of the abnormal advances made by the Roman Catholic Church in the last decades, more particularly in the world of politics, and in the conquest of new areas of thought. It is not a pleasant study for Protestants, but it is a fact which cannot be denied, that not since the time of Innocent III. has the Papal system been attended with such power and glory as at the present time. It is not the Roman Catholic princes, but the Protestant, who are endeavouring to outdo each other in doing honour to the cunning, wise man who now occupies the Vatican, though he has repeatedly called the Reformation a 'nuisance.'"

Continuing, Dr. Kolde shows that, in other respects, that church has grown phenomenally. Every year the number of persons who join the ranks of the religious orders grows by the thousand. In the German Empire alone there are at present 40,000 of these. Not since the days of the Reformation have these orders, especially the Jesuits, developed such power as they manifest in our days. The Catholics control the Parliaments and make our laws; and in countries like Germany, where there is a union of Church and State, they even pass the laws which affect the affairs of the Protestant Church. Every day the principle is gaining ground that it is not ability and efficiency, but the attitude toward the Roman Church, which opens the way to State service.

THE POPE AS ARBITRATOR.

The statesmen of Europe are largely, and in many cases mostly, influenced in their international policy by the views that prevail at the Vatican. And, what is more remarkable, that which the ambitious Innocent III. failed to accomplish, and that against which even Catholic princes have so frequently protested, namely, the assigning of the position of arbitrator in international difficulties to the Pope, has been voluntarily yielded to the Vatican by the leading Protestant Powers of Europe—Prussia and Germany, the former of these having been the first to recognise the Curia as a political power on equal footing with other Powers, by sending an ambassador to the Vatican. The writer significantly concludes his article by saying: "Humanly speaking, the Roman Catholic Church is destined to accomplish even more notable victories in the twentieth century."

This is a remarkable article, coming from the pen of a German Protestant historian. It shows that the same game of intrigue is going on there, as in England. Dr. Kolde tells us that it is not ability and efficiency, but the attitude towards the Roman Catholic Church which opens the way to State service.

THE POSITION OF BRITAIN.

This is true in Britain, as in Germany. The claims of Rome are not based on the merit of her sons, but on the fact that the Roman Church must be recognized by any and every employer of labour, be the labour manual or mental, whether those who represent her are competent to fill the positions for which they hanker, or not. As a Church, Rome has ruined the prospects of her sons to take their place in the business or intellectual world alongside of Protestants. The system has a demoralizing influence on the individual; therefore, Romish countries have gone down in the scale of nations, and Romish employés cannot keep pace with Protestant. Hence, as the writer says, it is not "ability" but Romish clamour and perpetual insistence upon the "claims" of "the Church," that open the way for the advancement of Romanists to positions of trust and profit. It would be well for the directors of our public companies, and all who employ labour of any description, to keep this in mind. F.

A Semi-Jubilee.

Mr. WILLIAM FORBES AND HIS WORK.

THE task of taking the Gospel to the theatrical employé is of necessity an arduous one, calling for the exercise of a perseverance undaunted by frequent rebuffs, and a sympathy that must be at once heartfelt and consistent. Hardly any section of society is more isolated from Christian influences than the theatrical profession; hence the need for remembering the claims of this much-neglected class of the world's workers. It is much to be feared that many who patronize the stage have little or no idea of the pitfalls and snares which the life of a chorus girl or dancer involves, and the number of professing Christians who attend pantomime and other performances, &c., forgetful of the moral and spiritual cost of their pleasure to those who entertain them, is one of the strongest possible proofs of this indifference.

Apart from these considerations, it is well known that such a career affords to those in its humbler ranks a precarious existence only, for it is no unusual thing for an engagement of a few weeks to be followed by months of waiting. Meanwhile what is to become of the girl? How is she to battle against poverty? How resist temptation, with poverty staring her in the face? Realizing how wide a field of usefulness opened up by this class, Mr. William Forbes some twenty-five years ago consecrated himself to the work, and his labours as an evangelist have been very largely confined to this ministry.

To accomplish his aim Mr. Forbes adopts particularly simple methods. Theatrical employés are invited to a social gathering, where, after tea, Gospel addresses are given, embodying wise and helpful counsel. Christian friends are heartily welcomed at these gatherings. The greatest encouragement experienced by the evangelist is when some of the women become Christians and abandon the stage. One who was a frequent attendant at some of the earlier meetings has been for nine years preaching and singing the Gospel; while many others have confessed Christ and forsaken their calling. One of the most recent to do this was a young lady who afterwards in simplicity wrote: "I gave my heart to Jesus at the meeting, and would not change places with the Queen." During his twenty-five years' service Mr. Forbes has gained esteem and confidence by the timely help he has afforded to many in times of distress. On behalf of several companions one of the girls writes: "We will never forget what you did for us when stranded in Paris." Another says:—"If more men like you came among us there would be better men and women on the stage." In whatever kind of trouble, it is to him they turn for assistance. He visits the sick, and gains for them admittance into hospitals or convalescent homes; and it is no exaggeration to say that he is known all over the kingdom as the unofficial guardian of the hardworking chorus girl. It is worthy of note that among the young ladies who have come to his assemblies he has only met with two or three cases of drunkenness.

During ten months of the year Mr. Forbes may be found in London pursuing his difficult but much loved work. The remaining two months are spent in those provincial towns in which pantomimes are running. He has just returned from a tour in the North, in the course of which he has visited Glasgow, Newcastle, Manchester, &c. Besides conducting these special gatherings, Mr. Forbes endeavours to make arrangements with local ministers for carrying on the work after his departure.

Mr. Forbes' record of twenty-five years' service is fraught with much encouragement, and in many towns as well as the metropolis there are those whose hearts are filled with gratitude to God for the ministry of His servant in his efforts to reach an isolated class with the hope and comfort of the Gospel, encouraging them to resist evil and strengthening them in good resolves. Mr. Forbes will be pleased to give a brief account of his twenty-five years' work among theatrical employés, at either Sunday or week-night services. His address is, 71, Tollington Road, London, N.

"Until He Find It."

AN INCIDENT IN RESCUE WORK.

WHEN working in the parish of Christchurch, Spitalfields, some years ago, I learnt the following affecting narrative from the lady missionary's "log-book."

A young man living in the parish joined a trading vessel, and soon afterwards started on a long voyage, being away nearly three years. On his return, he found the old home broken up, his mother dead, and his sister worse than dead, for she had been left alone and friendless, and had, like so many more poor girls, found an all too easy means of livelihood, and when last heard of was living at a house of ill-fame. The broken-hearted brother resolved that he would not rest until he had found her, and started off at once on his weary search. He tramped through Whitechapel hour after hour without success, but never despaired. "I'll look for her until I do find her!" he said to a friend.

The next afternoon, after many hours' search, he saw her standing at the door of a public-house in a low street, and at once crossed the road. "Don't you know me, Annie?" he cried.

The girl turned to enter the house; but the sailor was too quick for her, and interposing himself between her and the door, said firmly, "You'll only go back here over my dead body, Annie!"

After much persuasion he induced her to accompany him to the Church House and see the missionary, Miss D——, a successful worker among girls of this class, who took her in for that night, and after long and loving pleading obtained her consent to enter a Home. Next day, the missionary, the sailor, and his sister took train to the town where the Home was situated. The prodigal was received with a warm welcome which quite melted her; for

> Touched by a loving hand, wakened by kindness,
> Chords that were broken will vibrate once more.

As matron, missionary, sailor, and sister gathered at the tea-table, the dear fellow, who had so patiently sought the wandering sheep, exclaimed, tears of joy coursing down his bronzed cheeks: "Oh, miss, it seems almost too good to be true that Annie should be sought and saved—all within twenty-four hours!"

The writer told this story recently at the Prison Mission, 143, Clapham Road, and a few days later, after another meeting, one of the women remarked to him, "You remember the story you told us last week about the sailor's sister? well, she's still in that Home. I know her very well." Let us seek the perishing until we find. E. R.

Forty Years in Jamaica.

THE LATE REV. D. J. EAST.

IT was in 1851 that Rev. D. J. East left England for Jamaica, which island was destined to be the scene of his devoted labours for more than forty years. Born in London in 1816, he became, before his boyhood had passed away, a decided Christian. Believing he was called to the ministry, he entered the Baptist Theological College in Stepney (since removed to Regent's Park), and at the end of his student's course, he accepted a pastorate in Leamington, thence removing to Arlington, in Gloucestershire, and subsequently to Waltham Abbey, where, in his thirty-fifth year, the summons reached him to proceed to the West Indies. That summons (with his wife and four children) he did not hesitate to obey, hearing in the voice of the committee of the Baptist Missionary Society the call of God.

It was not for the general work of the mission that the committee sought his services, but to fill a specific post rendered vacant by the death of Rev. Joshua Tinson, who had founded and was himself the president of an institution at Calabar, having for its object the training of a native ministry. For years, though all unconsciously to Mr. East himself, the work of preparation for this post had been in process. He was brought into contact with the slavery abolitionists, and particularly was he touched to the very quick by the perusal of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton's book on "The Slave Trade and its Remedy." That work he himself abridged, and as a pamphlet it was scattered broadcast over the land. This literary effort he followed up by writing a considerable volume dealing with slavery at its source in the negro fatherland, entitled "Western Africa, its condition, and Christianity the means of its recovery."

The institution with which Mr. East was to be associated so long and honourably, was the outcome of the new circumstances consequent upon the Emancipation Act. The growth of education amongst the younger generation required a trained ministry. It was patent that if preachers were to arise out of the native Christian community—an end to be most earnestly desired—they must be prepared to minister to the churches: hence the Calabar College. By his complete sympathy with the object of the institution, his thorough belief in the innate capacity of the negro, as well as by his mental endowments and administrative ability, Mr. East was in every way well fitted to continue the work begun by Mr. Tinson. The following extract from a letter written a few weeks after his arrival in Jamaica will indicate the spirit with which he entered upon his important task:—

> One sometimes feels the separation from the endeared associations of home; but in my work, and in the sweet consciousness of believing that I am where God would have me to be, and doing what He would have me to do, I find my solace and my joy. As to my work, I was never more happily employed than with my dear young brethren around me, eager for instruction, and ever receiving it in a spirit which makes it a real pleasure to impart it.

In the same letter, a description is given of a happy conference he had with the native pastors, who had previously been trained by Mr. Tinson, and whom he had invited to spend a day or two with him at Calabar, the departure of the widow and daughter of the lamented president being the occasion of the gathering. Mr. East wrote:—

> I only wish all the friends of a native ministry in this island could have heard the brethren as they gave utterance to the deep feeling of their hearts. Those utterances were sometimes interrupted and broken, but it was by the sobs and tears of gratitude and affection in reviewing the benefits they had received from him who now rests from his labours. The evening was closed by a general conversation on the religious and educational interests of the island.

In the spring of 1853, Mr. East was called to bear a great sorrow in the death of his wife. He was thus left with the care of four children.

Besides the duties of president of the Institution, he took pastoral charge of the church in Rio Bueno, as well as exercised superintendence over other congregations. Mr. East had not been long resident in Jamaica before he became convinced of the necessity of training not only pastors for the pulpits, but teachers for the schools, and in the autumn of 1855 a normal class was started on the premises of the College.

For some time this department was carried on, both as to support and management, apart from the Missionary Society in England, but it soon became evident that the need for schoolmasters was so urgent as to make it desirable for the Home Committee to vote an annual grant. This they did, so that an efficient colleague was sent out to take charge of the numerous pupil teachers who were seeking admission. This latter step was the result of one of the recommendations of a deputation specially appointed to visit the West Indies, and as this decision was owing largely to the influence of Mr. East, we refer to it here.

THE LATE REV. D. J. EAST.

From Photograph by Messrs. Maull & Fox, 187a, Piccadilly, W.

When on furlough in this country, in the close of 1858, he had urged that a special deputation should be appointed by the Missionary Society to visit Jamaica with a view to inquire into the actual condition of the island. The difficulties arising out of the altered relations existing between masters and employed, indeed out of the general effects of the abolition of slavery on the civil and religious life of the natives, needed very wise and gentle handling, and Dr. Underhill, one of the secretaries of the Society, and Rev. J. T. Brown, of Northampton, were asked to form the deputation. To this request they consented, and in every way possible their inquiry was aided by the Principal of the Calabar College. Reporting inter alia on the results of the training in the Institution, the deputation wrote:

> The later students from Calabar are considerably superior to the earlier ones in point of ability and attainments, and those in the Institution now bid fair to be a still further step in advance. It is very encouraging, as establishing beyond question the ability of the African race to rise to a position of intelligence and cultivation like that of their more favoured brethren in Europe. It is to the honour of some of these native pastors that, although they once were slaves, they have risen in estimation and usefulness, and are beloved by all who know their piety and zeal.

The report contained various suggestions calculated to render the Institution of still greater benefit.

Soon after the deputation left the island, a religious revival arose, which at the first was manifestly the result of the powerful working of the Spirit of God in answer to fervent and united prayer. Spiritual anxiety, however, became attended with such painful physical effects as to call for very wise and firm treatment on the part of the leaders. As thousands entered the inquirers' classes, Satan, it was said at the time, sought to mar the good work by extravagancies and the awakening of evil passions. But by the prudent counsels and restraining influence of Mr. East and those associated with him, the remarkable work was not permitted to be frustrated. After making all deductions, more than eight thousand of the natives passed successfully through several months of trial, and proved by their altered lives the genuineness of their conversion. These numbers, however, only had reference to the churches in the Jamaica Baptist Union. There were other Baptist churches which similarly benefited, and taking other denominations also into account, it was computed that no less than became the subjects of a true religious change.

Shortly after the occurrence of the Morant Bay Tragedy, Mr. East was in England, and in a soul-stirring speech, delivered in Exeter Hall, he boldly vindicated the martyred Gordon and the Jamaica missionaries who had been wickedly accused as the authors of rebellion. Referring to the charge of the Lord Chief Justice of England, he declared, in an outburst of eloquence, that the only conclusion to which any sensible and reflecting man could come, was that George William Gordon, the patriot of Jamaica, was murdered by the Governor. And as to the allegations against the missionaries of abetting rebellion, Mr. East, turning to the chairman, exclaimed, "Sir, we stood face to face before the Royal Commissions, and nothing was laid to our charge. Since then the judges of the land have confirmed the statements we made, and vindicated all we said as to the maladministration of justice."

While Mr. East was in England, he took the opportunity to secure a sum of nearly £1,500 for the purpose of removing the Institution to Kingston, the increasing demands of the theological and normal departments making larger premises and a more suitable site a necessity. These premises were duly secured, and on Mr. East's removal to his new home, he accepted at the same time the important pastorate of East Queen's Street

Church. From that time for some twenty-five years onwards, Jamaica still had the advantage of his presence and labours, his influence in Kingston and throughout the island increasing with the advancing years, so much so that when the celebration of the jubilee of his ministerial life arrived, the Colonial Standard, a newspaper none too friendly to missions, wrote :—

There is hardly an institution or enterprise in the community, having for its object the material, intellectual, or moral improvement of the people, that does not reckon among its originators or promoters the faithful minister whose jubilee is about to be celebrated.

When, in 1892, failing strength necessitated retirement, Mr. East came back to this country, thankful that he could leave the various departments of his labours in a condition promising well for the future. His remaining years were chiefly spent at Watford and Highgate. His second wife, for some forty-five years his devoted helpmeet in every good work, survives him, as do also four daughters, three of whom are widows, all of them through marriage having become connected with the Baptist Missionary Society. On February 3 last, the veteran servant of God passed peacefully away, in the eighty-sixth year of his age.

Sunday in Bird Fair.

CAN it be Sunday morning? It is, even in Bethnal Green; but the appearance of the street looks more like market day. This is Bird Fair, and looking down upon the godless crowd is Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry

Near the doors is the dog-market for pets and pugs and puppies, dogs little and large. Further on, the gutter is lined with bicycles, their owners standing by ready to sell or exchange. Pushing past we find an assortment of bicycle accessories and odd tools and old iron for sale. Goats come next, and then barrows containing eatables and wearables of every description.

In the centre of this we reach a couple of harmoniums and a cornet, and a little band of singers and speakers, sending forth the Word of God. Hundreds here catch the message as they pass.

We stop and help, and then push on through furniture and fowls, Jews and Gentiles, to a second meeting, where a large crowd of eager listeners attend to the earnest words of one of their own sort, telling how God saved him. At 1.30 we leave them still at it as we get back to the "Home" for dinner.

After dinner the workers gather for a short, quiet half-hour of fellowship with the Master, until school opens for children and adults. Our portion of work was with the women, widows and wives, mothers, and grandmothers —a very unique gathering!

Then came tea, and a short address to the workers, followed by prayers for the present and the absent, some in far-off mission fields, and not forgetting Miss Macpherson, who has been laid aside, but is recovering.

Soon children are filling every room, upstairs and down, and one hears the joyful sound of three different instruments, leading three different companies, singing three different hymns. This was our experience, shut away for a little quiet previous to the evening Gospel service.

At 8.30 a fresh congregation gathers, and the final service of the day is held. Truly this is a Home of Industry.

And what are the results. I give one, as I had it from the woman's own lips.

She was in the "fair" one Sunday morning selling lemons, and heard one of the preachers quote the words of Jesus, "Him that cometh to Me, I will in no wise cast out," and he added, "That's a word for you, women." She went home convicted by the Spirit, knelt down, and said, "Lord Jesus, you have declared if I come, you will not cast me out. I am coming." Then she told her ungodly husband that she could never go out with the barrow again on Sunday.

"That was twenty years ago," she told us last Sunday, "and He has kept me ever since."

She is now working in a laundry, the only teetotaler, and when one holiday all were discharged for drunkenness, she was the only one retained.

Her daughter stood beside her as she told her tale, a young convert, who two weeks ago, in a similar Sunday night meeting in this hall, gave herself to Christ.

Such is a sample Sunday at the Home of Industry, in addition to the weekday medical and other work, and the great effort among the children. William Luff.

Children's Scripture Union.

THE twenty-fourth anniversary gathering of this worldwide organization was held a few days ago in King's Hall, Holborn. The work of the Children's Scripture Union, with which is affiliated that of the Children's Special Service Mission, was never more needed than at the present day, its chief object being to get the young people of this and other lands to read daily and intelligently study some selected portion of God's Word.

From a statement made by Mr. T. B. Bishop at the afternoon meeting, presided over by Rev. E. A. Stuart (president), it appeared that two of the workers are shortly returning to England after a very successful mission in Australia and New Zealand. On their homeward journey one is to visit Canada, while the other will travel by a different route. From Japan Dr. Whitney had sent a very interesting report of the work in that distant country where there are thousands of Scripture Union members. Branches of the Union have been established in South Africa, at Ladysmith and Dundee. At Lisbon there is a branch which was started by a child who had joined the Union at one of the services held at the seaside in the summer months in England. Most encouraging services have been conducted by two representatives of the Union in India who went out from England for that purpose. Similar work was being carried on in Spain.

The Chairman said he felt that the growing disregard of the Lord's Day was one of the most serious things that they had to contemplate. Some years ago they had to fight against the secularization of the Lord's Day but it was not so much that now as total disregard with which they had to contend. Some were teaching that the Lord's Day had no longer any claim upon the Christian Church as a commandment from God, that it was simply a church ordinance, but eliminated from the Ten Commandments. A very strong protest was called for against such teaching. In speaking of the importance of that day for our children, he said he was afraid that nowadays children saw very little of their parents on Sundays, as in many ranks of society parents spent the week-end increasingly away from home. He remembered the time when it was usual for father to be sitting at one end of the pew, and mother at the other end, with the children between. That is very seldom seen now.

A well thought out sketch of the Epistle to the Hebrews was given by Rev. Harrington C. Lees (Kenilworth). A message of thanks from the Railway Mission for the good results of affiliation with the Union, came through Mr. R. Nixon. The note of responsibility resting on those charged with the spiritual training of the young people was struck by Mr. Arthur Mercer. Rev. H. Dudley Lampen gave a suggestive and helpful address on the words, "The Word of our God shall stand for ever." Tidings of growth in Scotland were brought by Mr. A. Steel. Mr. W. H. Stentiford, Rev. H. C. Lees, and Rev. W. S. Standen also took part in the meeting.

A Missionary Need.—Mr. F. J. Huddleston, 1, Palmer's Green Villas, Green Lanes, N., who has been appointed by the South American Missionary Society to work among the Indians in Paraguay, asks for help towards procuring a lantern with set of slides, also large Bible pictures.

Nottingham Institute.

IN the spring of 1889 the late Rev. William Crosbie was deeply interested in the spiritual welfare of a number of rough lads who considered themselves too big for Sunday-school, and were in danger of becoming "street loafers." A meeting was commenced with twelve of these lads in a small room in Circus Street Hall, under the auspices of the United Gospel Mission, and under the superintendency of Messrs. W. S. Buckoll and A. Healey. Very soon the room was overcrowded, and the large schoolroom was then used; eventually it became necessary to secure larger premises, and the lecture hall of the Albert Hall was engaged.

Since then about 3,000 youths have been associated with the class, numbers of whom have become Christian workers. One who was converted at the meetings afterwards became an evangelist, and has already been the means of winning hundreds to the Saviour. Another is a Congregational minister.

It soon became evident that something should be done for the members of the class during the week, and five years ago an orchestral band was formed, which has been of considerable help to the meetings; and a year later, rooms were engaged for an Institute, where many useful agencies are at work, and there is at the present time a weekly attendance of about 400. As a result of the Albert Hall being sold, other premises have been secured, and here further developments are looked for in this work, which has been so blessed of God to the conversion of young men. This new undertaking will involve a considerable expenditure. The secretary is Mr. E. W. Carnell, 73, Mona Road, West Bridgford, Nottingham.

The William Henry Elliott Home.

THE death of Mrs. Elliott, on January 21 last, removes from this Dublin Home its devoted founder and helper, who thirty years ago came to our aid when we were struggling to provide increased accommodation for the many destitute children brought to us in connection with our "Bird's Nest" work.

It was in 1872 that Mrs. Elliott was contemplating some suitable memorial which would connect the name of her husband with an earnest work for the glory of God. The late William Henry Elliott, of the Bengal Civil Service, who was so eminent for his piety and love for his Master's service, was suddenly called home in the prime of his life (October 8, 1870), and in the midst of his work amongst poor and ragged children. He was a member of a family distinguished by persons of ability and exceptional piety, including Rev. Henry Venn, of Huddersfield, and Charlotte Elliott, the gifted authoress of, "Just as I am without one plea."

When Mrs. Elliott heard of our situation in Dublin she decided to adopt the new effort we were then making, and liberally helped us with money to purchase a house for the new Home, which has since borne the name of him who was so worthy of the honour. Every year she contributed and collected for the maintenance of the Home, which for many years has provided for 100 little children. The loss of her interest and help will long be felt.

Young Women's Institute, Ilford.

MRS. S. J. ALEXANDER'S Institute for Young Women at Ilford, Essex, was declared open last month by Rev. W. Galt, who spoke of the work as being much needed in Ilford.

While much has been done for young men, young women have been rather overlooked. In Psalm cxliv., the psalmist goes to the architect for a description of "the daughters," who are to be as "corner stones, polished after the similitude of a palace." To this end the Institute will be a place for encouraging young women in the right way, so that in future life they may be as "corner stones" in their respective homes. Mr. Galt further expressed his satisfaction that Mrs. Alexander has been raised up to carry on this useful work.

Mrs. Parker, who followed, spoke of the blessing the Institute must prove, particularly to young women away from home, and to maids-of-all-work as a relief from exacting duties. Other speakers were Mr. G. F. Treverton and Councillor Wilde. Mrs. Alexander's address is 42, Argyle Road, Ilford.

Revival Reminiscences.

By Pastor JULIUS ROHRBACH, Berlin.

A NUMBER of years ago, an able naturalist published an interesting volume under the title of "The Harvest of a Quiet Eye," in which he described observations which, by study of many years, he had made of the life and movements of some of the smaller insects, most of them invisible to the naked eye. It was quite an abundant harvest which his observing eye had made, and which led him to acknowledge the infinite wisdom of a Divine Creator. Some of the greatest astronomers, who have watched and measured the movements of heavenly bodies in their regularity and order, felt over-awed by the greatness of Him, who stretches out the heavens like a curtain and ordereth the stars in their courses. Likewise the historian who traces the story of mankind from earliest ages, through its changes up to the present time, will observe the all-controlling principle of Divine righteousness throughout the generations of man.

Should not the believer whose mind is enlightened by the Spirit of God find true wisdom and great delight in observing the ways of God in His gracious dealings? And truly, "whoso is wise and will observe these things, even they shall understand the loving-kindness of the Lord."

The great Reformation of the Middle Ages was partly prepared by some "Reformers before the Reformation;" the many "Quiet in the Land" found new life and stir through the Moravian Brethren, whilst the great Revival in the days of Wesley and Whitefield can be traced to the faithful testimony of some of these early Moravian missionaries. From this Revival ripe seed-corns were scattered all over England, some parts of the Continent of Europe, and over districts in America. These have grown to become Tract, Bible, and Missionary Societies, which in their turn have scattered the seeds of Divine life, light, and liberty to the regions beyond.

The growth and development of the Kingdom of God is, after all, the most wonderful and interesting story. No one can tell it out fully; there is a wonderful story of each individual believer, and no individual can fathom it; there is a national, yea, international, world-wide story, which no church historian, or missionary report, can in any way adequately describe. The Spirit of the Living God is writing it in the Lamb's Book of Life, to be told out in the ages to come to the praise and glory of Jehovah's Name.

AFTER MANY YEARS OF SOWING.

The waves of that gracious and memorable Revival which stirred Ireland and some parts of England in 1858-59, touched also the quiet village of Ridgwell, in Essex, about thirty miles from London, not far from Colchester. There a godly Independent minister, Mr. S. F. Bridge, had been steadily, prayerfully, and faithfully preaching Christ for over twenty-three years. It was a quaint little Dissenting chapel, dating its history back to the year 1662, when a good man named Giles Firmin became one of that illustrious band of some 2,000 ministers who, for conscience' sake, gave up their livings and social position declining to be under an ecclesiastical tyranny.

When Mr. Bridge began his ministry, in 1833, probably about the same time as did the late Mr. Spurgeon's grandfather, in one of the neighbouring villages, keeping a boarding-school, and thereby sustaining himself and family, the church had a membership of only thirteen; but after twenty-three years of faithful, pastoral work it increased to about 400 members, many coming from great distances all around. For twenty-five years this faithful man of God had the valuable help of his excellent wife, an educated lady and enlightened Christian, who acted as the village missionary. She regularly visited every member of the church, and for years prayed for a more general manifestation of the Spirit of God. When, in 1851, she lay on her dying bed, she said: "It has been sown in weakness, but the time is coming when it will be raised in power, astonishing power!"

HOW A TIME OF BLESSING CAME.

In 1857 a new chapel was building, and meanwhile services were being held in a large barn, fitted up for the purpose; and during that time, in the plain barn, the revival broke out. It began with the minister himself; his preaching became more evangelistic and definite, more in the power of the Holy Ghost: believers were quickened, prayer-meetings largely attended, and the Holy Spirit worked conviction in many hearts. Some who hitherto had been indifferent, became so deeply concerned about their souls that they asked their Christian fellow-labourers to pray with them at midday under hedges or in solitary sheds. As the result, a number of the worst men and women of the village were savingly converted to God; and so great was the change brought about in that village in a short time, that the proprietor of the chief public-house stated that where he used to take 5s. he now only took 1s., as he had lost some of his best customers. We need not add that

SATAN WAS ROUSED AND RAGING.

The prayer-meetings were times of singular blessing, fresh voices being constantly heard in prayer and praise. Overflow prayer and praise meetings were necessary, and in the cottages could be seen many of the female converts, while at their regular work of plait-making, united in prayer and Christian fellowship. Christian workers and friends came down from London to be eye-witnesses of what the Lord was doing, and to be helpers in the harvest. This lasted throughout the summer and part of the winter, when the work took gradually again its usual course. The heart of the faithful pastor was made glad by seeing such abundant harvest. He continued in the same village for another ten years, wise in winning souls, building believers on their most holy faith, waiting and watching for his Lord.

"When, in 1872, the infirmities of age made it necessary for him to resign his ministry in that quiet country village, after nearly forty years, he removed to London, and still preached the Word where opportunity was granted. How his heart rejoiced when revival times came for London through Messrs. Moody and Sankey and their many fellow-labourers; and how, in the privacy of his study, he interceded on their behalf, and for a more general exhibition of the Spirit's power! The late C. H. Spurgeon knew our aged friend well, loved him dearly, and said:

"HE IS THE HOLIEST MAN I EVER KNEW."

For nearly seven years it was the writer's inestimable privilege to know this honoured servant of the Lord, often to read "the Book" in the original languages with him, and to worship in prayer and praise. In his seventy-eighth year, when the miseries of mortality had very much increased, he used to say: "Let patience have her perfect work; the night is far spent, the day is at hand."

Two years before his home-going he once wrote: "The infirmities of age have taken a deeper hold on me, and I do not expect them to go off until, with the earthly house of this tabernacle, they are put off; and I am certainly thinking more and more of that change, and increasingly desire it, still uncertain whether we shall pass through what is called death before the Lord's advent, or be alive and remain at His coming, and then be changed in a moment; and so this mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruptible put on incorruption, and the consummation of our best desires be realized to the full." In 1882 his "desire to depart and to be with Christ" was granted. "Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit"—fruit unto life eternal—fruit that remaineth. The day shall declare it. "The memory of the just is blessed."

Allahabad.—A spiritual work is being maintained at the Baptist Church, Allahabad. The building occupies one of the finest sites on the civil station, and during the forty years of its existence, the Sunday and week-night services have been regularly carried on, with many tokens of blessing. Efforts are being made by Pastor G. F. Moore and his helpers to raise funds for the erection of a parsonage.

Economy with Efficiency.

DEAR SIR,—The missionary problem, in which many of the readers of your valuable periodical are interested, is one that demands more attention than is generally accorded it. If the last command of our risen Lord and Saviour is to be carried out more efficiently, the Church, while waiting upon her Lord for guidance, might do well to consider whether or not she is using the best means towards the accomplishment of the purpose of her exalted Head. It is to be feared that this glorious work is put too much on a commercial basis—and economy is studied to the loss of efficiency. The writer may perhaps be allowed to refer to this view of the question, having had some years' experience in the mission field, but through circumstances has had reluctantly to return to England, there to seek, amid an already over-supplied ministry, service in the Gospel.

The case is this: Men called of God to service in the foreign field—and sent forth by those who, so far as they can judge, believe in their call—spend years in the acquisition of a new and difficult language. But this acquisition is not all; much else has been acquired besides. The people, themselves a study, their modes and expressions of thought, their manner of life, their views of the foreigner and his new doctrine—these are only understood after years of intercourse. Such an acquisition of knowledge increases the value of the labourer, and, granted grace and the power of the Holy Spirit, gives a fitness for effective service that a novice does not possess.

Such men should not be so easily dispensed with, as they sometimes are, by those who have shown them fellowship, except it be for some flagrant evil that would nullify the testimony of fellow-labourers. Such men should be encouraged to remain in their fields, and every possible provision be made for them to do so, whether it may refer to the problem of the missionary's family, or health, or education.

Here it is that the short-sighted policy of economy comes in, such as is to be found in city offices. Cut down expenses, take in cheaper labour, and dismiss, with or without a gift, men who have gained experience and help the business. Through lack of wise consideration, the well-known and approved labourer, whose services might have been retained, is allowed to leave the ranks, only to be followed by a raw recruit who, though costing less (from a monetary point of view) to the friends of missions, is, comparatively speaking, of little value until he has served his missionary apprenticeship.

Would it not be more to the interest of missions to sacrifice quantity for quality? Would not the money be better spent in increasing gifts to those whose experience is invaluable, rather than in multiplying the number, and increasing at the same time burdens—already heavy enough in a foreign land—of care and concern about ways and means? Oh, for a revived Church, for increased liberality, for self-denial! Oh, for more of the self-sacrificing, compassionate spirit of Christ, when not only those in foreign lands shall be suitably maintained, but thousands more be sent out by a revived Church, and held up by the unceasing prayers and sympathy of God's people at home!—Yours in His blessed service,

A Home and Foreign Missionary.

Mr. George Wise, the well-known Protestant preacher, having recently announced his intention of resuming his open-air meetings in Liverpool, the head constable, fearing a renewal, summoned him before the Stipendiary Magistrate, who bound him over to "keep the peace and be of good behaviour for twelve months," and ordered him to find certain sureties, the alternative being two months' imprisonment in the first division. Mr. Wise elected to go to gaol, and before surrendering, on Wednesday week, attended a prayer meeting at the Y.M.C.A. Afterwards, he was escorted to Walton Prison by some thousands of sympathizers, who displayed the greatest enthusiasm, and cheered and encouraged Mr. Wise in his determination to suffer imprisonment in the cause of Protestantism and free speech.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

SECOND WEEK IN ABERDEEN.

(BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONERS.)

THE second week of this great evangelistic campaign has proved to be a time of rich blessing. After the first few days had passed without any special sign of a work of grace, there was, perhaps, a feeling of slight disappointment in the hearts of many Christian people. It soon became clear, however, that it was Dr. Torrey's method to proceed carefully, even slowly if need be, at the commencement, so that the work might be solid and the results lasting when they did come. Still, it must not be supposed that there were no immediate results, for almost every night there were cases of conversion; but it was not till Friday that there was anything like a general breaking down on the part of the unsaved. That night was one long to be remembered in Aberdeen; over forty made the great decision, and many others who were spoken to were clearly under deep anxiety of soul. Now that the barriers of pride and indifference have given way, a great ingathering may be confidently expected.

The evangelists commenced their Sunday's labours with an early meeting for Christian workers. Dr. Torrey had previously announced that his subject would be "Conditions of Success in Soul-Winning," and this was sufficient to draw a large audience, about 1,000 persons being present. To many who are closely tied by business and other duties during the week, this was the first opportunity of hearing the evangelists. There could be no mistake regarding the composition of the meeting—elderly men whose hair had grown grey in service for the Master; men and women in the prime of life who, as Sunday-school teachers, Bible-class leaders, district visitors, and mission workers are striving as best they know how to lead souls to Christ; young men and young women wearing the Y.M.C.A. and C.E. badges—all eagerly seeking to learn something of the great secret of successful soul-winning.

A WORKER'S EYES OPENED.

Perhaps the most telling part of an address packed full of wise counsel and practical suggestions was that where the preacher insisted that the only way to learn to lead souls to Christ was by "doing it." The only school where this was taught was the school of experience. "Why," said a man who has been engaged in Christian work for years to a friend afterwards, "that's just exactly where I have been making a mistake. For years I have had an intense desire to be able to deal personally with men and women and point them to Christ; but on every occasion when opportunity presented itself I shrank back, thinking I was unqualified for the work, and making way for those who appeared to have a special gift in this direction. Now I see that they must have just begun where I must begin, with no practical experience. After this I mean, by God's help, to take the very first chance I get to speak with an inquirer, and to trust God for the guidance and wisdom necessary."

In the afternoon there was a great gathering, the building being crowded out long before the time of meeting. This vast crowd offered Mr. Alexander a splendid opportunity for displaying the gift of which he is such a master, of getting the people in the different parts of the hall to take up a chorus in turn, and of this he was not slow to take advantage. Soon he had practically everyone in the hall joining heartily in the well-known refrain "Ask the Saviour to help you." Sir William Henderson having offered prayer, Dr. Torrey proceeded with his address, which was based on the text, "Where art thou?" A deep impression was made, and after Mr. Alexander had followed with that searching question in song, "Are you ready for the judgment day?" it was no surprise to find many indicating by rising in their places that they had been convicted by the Holy Spirit, and desired to find the Saviour. Dr. Torrey said this was the largest first Sunday afternoon meeting they have had anywhere.

UNPRECEDENTED CROWDS.

If the afternoon meeting was large, it was nothing to the crowd that gathered in the evening to seek admission. Although the hour was announced as eight o'clock, people had begun to assemble shortly after six, and when the doors were opened about seven o'clock the hall was filled in a very short time. The stewards did their utmost to find room for the vast throng clamouring for admittance; but when fully three thousand people had been packed in, the doors had to be closed against a crowd of nearly as many more outside. The large hall of the Y.M.C.A., which adjoins the music hall, was requisitioned, and speedily filled with a company of nine hundred people, who kept up continuous prayer while the larger meeting was in progress. Nothing like this has been seen in Aberdeen in connection with a religious meeting for many years. Dr. Torrey's address on "God" was listened to with great attention throughout, and although not so much calculated as some of his others to lead to immediate decision, there is no doubt it will serve to prepare the way for other phases of truth.

After Mr. Alexander had sung with fine effect, "Will you believe, and Jesus receive?" a good number stood up at the invitation of the preacher to express their desire to find Christ. These were afterwards dealt with in the inquiry-room, and not a few were led to decision. Altogether it was a great day. A special attraction to the meetings undoubtedly is the music. A splendid choir of over 500 voices has been brought together, and, under Mr. Alexander's skilful tuition, it is already doing excellent service.

EXCELLENT BIBLE STUDY MEETINGS.

On Monday afternoon the Bible-study meetings were transferred to the West United Free Church, one of the most comfortable and conveniently situated churches in the city. This change was rendered necessary by the difficulty experienced in hearing Dr. Torrey when the Music Hall was only half full, as it generally was in the afternoons. There were about 700 present the first day in the church when Dr. Torrey gave the opening address of a series on the Holy Spirit. In the evening there was an audience of about 2,500 in the Music Hall, the great building being quite full, though not so crowded as on Sunday evening. The address was based on the words "Weighed in the balances and found wanting," and was perhaps Dr. Torrey's most effective discourse up to that point. The dramatic description of the scene in Belshazzar's banqueting hall arrested the attention of the congregation at the very outset, and when the preacher went on to apply the test of the Ten Commandments one by one to the life of every one present, all felt that they had been convicted of failure in some respect or other—failure which in God's sight is sin.

THE SABBATH AND THE BIBLE.

Speaking on the fourth commandment—Dr. Torrey said that when Scotland held to the Sabbath and the Bible she was great amongst the nations, but he feared she did not stand where she did in this respect, judging by what he had read, and seen with his own eyes. This he was certain of—that when Scotland gave up her Bible and her Sabbath she was doomed to sink to the level of other nations that had been guilty of the same sin. The closing appeal was a most powerful one, and was ably reinforced by Mr. Alexander's solo which followed.

The afternoon meeting on Tuesday was as well attended as on the previous day. Mr. Alexander conducted a short preliminary service, and introduced a new feature by asking anyone in the audience to quote a text on the "Heart." The response at first was a trifle stiff, but under Mr. Alexander's genial guidance it soon improved. Dr. Torrey spoke on "The Work of the Holy Spirit." Dealing with the point, "He shall convince the world of judgment," the evangelist said they heard very little nowadays about judgment—no one seemed to believe in it. Why was that? Simply because men knew if there was a judgment there must be punishment, and that punishment everlasting. Scotland badly needed to return to the old, stern doctrines, which led to conviction of sin against a holy God and fear of the judgment to come. Let the Holy Spirit have free course to do His work in their hearts, and that would soon rid them of many current mis-conceptions.

Owing to the music-hall being pre-engaged, the evening meeting was held in Gilcomston United Free Church. The evangelists were accompanied by Rev. Robert Forgan, pastor of the church, who led in prayer at the beginning of the service. Dr. Torrey preached a very direct and telling sermon on "The Necessity of the New Birth." There was no formal after-meeting, but at the close Dr. Torrey met all those who desired to work in the inquiry-room or otherwise deal with the anxious.

RESTORING THE BACKSLIDER.

On Wednesday afternoon he continued his course of addresses on the "Holy Spirit." Previous to the address Mr. Alexander again led a short service, and called for texts on "Love." The response was much better than on the preceding day. Short reports of blessing received through the meetings were then given. A commercial traveller from Glasgow related an interesting incident in connection with Dr. Torrey's meetings there. He had been present at one of the Sabbath morning meetings for Christian workers, and on leaving met a young man who had once been actively engaged in Christian work, but had gone back. Under the influence of the address he had just listened to, he stopped to speak with this backslider, and prevailed on him to accompany him home, where he prayed and pleaded with him to give up drinking and break from his ungodly companions. After a time he promised to do this, and later in the day was induced to go to the meeting in St. Andrew's Hall. There the Spirit of God wrought deep conviction of sin in the young fellow's heart; and then and there he openly gave himself to Christ afresh. Next morning the first thing he did was to go and pay his drink debts, and since then he has been rejoicing in Christ and living a consistent life.

In the evening, Gilcomston Church was crowded to excess, aisles, platform, and even the pulpit steps being occupied, while many stood throughout the service. The song service preceding the meeting proper was particularly bright, the audience catching up the chorus, "The old-time religion," very quickly, and singing it with unusual heartiness. The address was a sequel to that of the previous evening, Dr. Torrey speaking with great power and impressiveness on "The Evidences of the New Birth." It was an hour of deep heart-searching, both among professing Christians and the unconverted, and at the close a number went into the inquiry room and were there led to decision for Christ.

CASES OF CONVERSION.

The Thursday afternoon meeting was a most helpful one; quite a number of interesting reports of blessing received were given by different persons in the audience. A minister stated that he knew of two young ladies who had given themselves to the Lord the night before, and he had found a deep and growing interest in the mission all over the city. A lady reported that two members of the choir had been converted. Another lady mentioned that she went home from the first meeting determined to draw up a prayer list. As she was about to write the names of several unconverted friends, it struck her that there were two young people in her own house to whom she had never spoken directly about their souls. Asking for guidance, she went straight to one of them, a young woman, and was able to point her to Christ. Next day the young woman told her brother what had happened, and in a day or two after he, too, was led to decision.

THEATRE-GOING AND CARD-PLAYING.

The evening meetings were resumed in the music-hall on Thursday, and it was satisfactory to observe that the break of two days had not affected the attendance in the least, there being again 2,500 people present. At the beginning of the service Dr. Torrey took some time to answer a number of questions which had been addressed to him in writing, dealing with statements he had made the previous evening, in which he had condemned theatre-going, card-playing, dancing, and smoking. He also read a letter of apology from a person who had written an ill-natured letter to him the previous day, and to which the doctor had courteously replied at the evening meeting. Dr. Torrey said this was the first apology of the kind he had received in all his experience; he thought it was a very manly and frank apology. His text was "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"

At the conclusion any who wished to decide for Christ were invited to stand. A few rose, but when these were afterwards invited to come forward to the front seat in the body of the hall, none responded. Dr. Torrey then said there would be no inquiry meeting, and immediately dismissed the audience. This somewhat abrupt conclusion created something like a sensation among the people. It undoubtedly led to deep searching of heart, and probably contributed in no small degree to the success of the next evening meeting.

The Bible study on Friday afternoon was again largely attended, and greatly enjoyed by all. Many have expressed gratitude for the help they have received at these meetings. The evening meeting was attended by over 2,000 people, and was in many respects the most interesting of all. The subject was, "The fear of man bringeth a snare," and seemed to be specially appropriate to the occasion. When the preacher invited any who had decided to take Christ that night to rise, many stood up all over the building. After Mr. Alexander had sung with great effectiveness the solo, "Should the death-angel knock at your chamber," the invitation was repeated, and many others rose. Afterwards they came to the front seats and confessed Christ before the whole congregation. In addition to these, the workers were busy dealing with anxious inquirers in every part of the hall, as well as in the inquiry-room, till a late hour.

"ALL THROUGH A LITTLE CARD."

A beautiful story has just been related to Dr. Torrey, showing the happy chain of conversions which hung on a card of invitation to the mission in Edinburgh. A nurse had lately settled in a home in Edinburgh, and placed a card about the mission in the frame of a picture in her room. After it had remained there for two or three days, the landlady asked the nurse what it referred to. She replied that it was an invitation to the Torrey-Alexander services, but that, as she could not attend them herself, she had placed it where others could see it who might be able to go. She asked the landlady if she intended going to the Synod Hall. "Oh, no," was the reply, "I cannot even get to a church because of the children." The nurse said she would look after the little ones if the mother would go to the mission. The landlady went, and was converted that night. The change wrought in her induced her husband to go on another evening, and he came home a converted man. Later on a son and a daughter attended the meetings, and were led into the light of God. Now, all these four persons were brought to the Lord through the simple inquiry caused by a little card. As one who knows the case said, "A transformed family in such a simple way! It would seem as if the Lord were just waiting for humble efforts in His cause that He might cover them with overflowing blessing." Does not the story embolden Christians to do more in the way of inviting others to attend missions?

Following up at Glasgow.

A weekly fellowship meeting, having for its aim the conserving and maturing of the fruit of the Torrey-Alexander mission, has been begun, with Mr. W. M. Oatts as its leader. The first meeting was held in Kent Road Hall on Monday evening of last week, and an audience, numbering between six and seven hundred, made up of converts and sympathizers, was present. Mr. Oatts called on some of the 1874 converts to give a word of testimony; and Mr. A. C. Alexander, Mr. Henry Downie, Mr. D. J. Findlay, and Mr. Stevenson did so, Mr. Stevenson being the person who was referred to some weeks ago as having been converted in one of D. L. Moody's meetings on March 9, 1874, his son having been converted in one of Dr. Torrey's meetings on March 9 last. The weekly gathering will be continued in the Christian Institute.

Mr. George Clarke in Springburn.

Under the auspices of the United Evangelistic Association, Mr. George Clarke began a fortnight's mission in this large industrial district of Glasgow on Sabbath, April 5. There is a population of over 60,000 in Springburn, the men being highly-paid artisans in the great engine works of the city. The Dissenting ministers were in fullest sympathy with the movement, and have been most regular in their attendance at the meetings.

The services have been held in the new and handsome Town Hall, and the audiences have been large and appreciative. Some most interesting cases of decision were met with in the inquiry-room. One night a minister had the joy of meeting with four of his own members who were backsliders and returned to the Saviour.

Mr. Clarke has addressed open-air gatherings each day during the week at one of the large public works. The audiences have been large and most attentive. One day, at the corner of the main thoroughfare, and close to two of the engine works, the evangelist stood upon the box of a cab and addressed a big crowd. The occupants of every street car got a message as they ran past. On another day the meeting was held in the working-shed of the Caledonian Railway shop, and between 600 and 700 men listened to an earnest Gospel message for twenty-five minutes. The mission closes in Springburn on Thursday, and a fortnight's services commence in the new Town Hall, Govan, on Sabbath, April 19. W. M. O.

Other Evangelists at Work.

Pasteur Frank Thomas in London.

The three evangelistic meetings for French-speaking people, held last week in Exeter Hall, and addressed by Pasteur Frank Thomas, of Geneva, were fruitful in a high degree. Each evening more than five hundred persons were in attendance, and a large number received good from the earnest words spoken, while many were led to consecrate themselves to the Lord and His service.

On the first evening, taking up the philosophic term, "Solidarity," the preacher dwelt upon the solidarity of God with man in Christ crucified; on the second evening he spoke of the solidarity of man with God by communion with Christ; and on the third evening his subject was the solidarity of man with man, or social salvation. It would be difficult to analyze the addresses—beautiful in form, rich in thought, and impressive in their abiding influence. The strong conviction of the speaker was obvious to all, and, during the season of silent prayer that followed his utterance on the first evening, the organizers of the meetings were led to recognise that real business with Heaven was being transacted.

On the second evening, an after-meeting was arranged, and upwards of fifty men stayed. Several young men decided for Christ, and publicly intimated their consecration to God's service. The last gathering of the series was specially powerful; more than a hundred persons, men and women, stayed to the after-meeting. It was a glorious experience, and many rejoined with the young people who declared themselves on the Lord's side.

On the afternoon of each day there were meetings for Christians, at which much blessing was given. God be praised for the things that were heard and seen during the mission! Prayers were answered in marvellous fashion, and much praise is now ascending for "what God hath wrought" through the visit of his honoured Swiss servant to London.

Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn at the "Edinburgh Castle," E.

We can only describe the visit of these honoured servants of God as "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord," for truly He has visited and refreshed His heritage in a gracious and special manner. Our hearts are like the cup of Psa. xxiii., simply running over with praise and thanksgiving.

From the beginning of these short series of meetings, which commenced on Sunday week, we have realized the presence and power of God, and witnessed rapt attention, stillness, and anxious eagerness to catch every word spoken—words that will abide and bring forth much fruit. From morning till night large crowds assembled, which meant that during the day about 8,000 people pressed in to hear the Word of Life. At night this large hall, seating over 3,000, was filled.

At each service, Mrs. Booth-Clibborn gave an address. She is a wonderful speaker, and none can listen to her without recognizing that she is a woman of striking ability, possessing great gifts, all of which are yielded to God and His service. Again, one feels that upon her rests the Spirit of God. It is wonderful to see the way in which she commands the attention of her audience; they listen in almost breathless silence as she declares the great truths of the Gospel in no uncertain manner. Trenchantly, sin has been dealt with, and in a loving, winsome and magnetic manner has the Lord Jesus been presented as the only hope of men and women. It is with great regret that one hears her speak her last word, for it is impossible to be indifferent to such preaching as it has been our privilege to listen to these past days. Expressions of gratitude are heard on every hand from the people of God, while joy of conversion is manifested by several. We cannot close without acknowledging the helpful addresses delivered by Mr. Booth-Clibborn. We only regret they could not have continued with us. However (D V.) they will come to us for the two coming Wednesday evenings at eight o'clock. Walter Notman, Supt.

Cambridge Church Mission.

In connection with the mission to the churches of Cambridge, which has just been held, the attendances at St. Barnabas' Church were remarkable. At the last service, on Sunday morning, March 29, the church was filled to overflowing, although double rows of chairs were placed in the nave. At the 3.15 service in the institute every seat in the lecture hall was occupied, and at the 3.30 service for men only, in the church, there had never been such a large attendance before. But large as these attendances were, they were excelled by that in the evening, when the congregation blocked the porch and filled the vestry, and even then some hundreds were turned away. In fact, so great was the gathering that it was necessary to put an announcement on the church door that there would be an additional evening service at 9 p.m. At this extra service there was again a large congregation.

The final services were held on the Monday. The missioner, Rev. W. R. Mowll, has been used of God in bringing great blessing to many souls. His Bible readings and plain, straight evangelistic addresses have, under God, brought new life and peace to many souls. Homes have been changed, and the faith of Christians quickened and strengthened. The hymn singing by the large congregation from Sacred Songs and Solos was a powerful feature.

Mr. Henry Varley at Fulham.

The meetings which Mr. Henry Varley has been holding in South Kensington and Fulham Town Hall have aroused wide interest in that neighbourhood, and the announcement that he would occupy the platform of the large Congregational Church, in Dawes Road, Fulham, on Sunday last, sufficed to crowd this well-known centre of Christian effort. Mr. Varley's presentation of the great truth of the Resurrection of Christ at the morning and evening services produced profound impressions, large numbers in the after meeting confessing their reception of the Word of Life. In this church there is a large P.S.A., which on Sunday afternoon crowded the spacious building, and Mr. Varley's address was listened to with deep interest.

Theatre Services at Ryde, I.W.

An experiment has been made at Ryde in evangelizing the non-church-going. The Theatre Royal, being conspicuously central, has been occupied, and a series of six mission services held on as many successive Sunday evenings, are proving quite phenomenal. The time of opening, deliberately chosen, viz., half-an-hour after Divine service commences elsewhere, allows regular church-goers to get into their respective sanctuaries, and yet leaves the throng on the streets at its height.

The meetings have been conducted with studied informality; plenty of hymn-singing, a brief prayer, a single verse of Scripture repeated in concert in lieu of a "Lesson," so as to fix the Word of God on the memory, an earnest address, and the benediction. On Sunday the query advertised for discussion being, "Can a devil open the eyes?" especially attracted attention; the promiscuous audience sat in rapt, hushed attention while it was led through the diabolical eye-opening there is in spiritualism, infidel searching of Scripture, light literature, sport, gambling, drink, &c., to the striking contrast presented by the spiritual eye-opening of Jesus Christ; and while at some points the tense, solemn feeling was such as almost to prevent the missioner's utterance, at the close several testified to good having been received. The results of such work are scarcely to be estimated; hundreds of just the class aimed at are at least being reached, the old Gospel has been faithfully proclaimed; whole families are being blessed; individuals are being pointed to Christ, and the novelty having become the talk of the town, all the churches seem to have improved their attendances.

J. M.

Mr. Newton Jones at Bournemouth.

The new Congregational Church at Charminster Road, Bournemouth, has been the scene of a helpful ten-days' mission by Mr. Newton Jones. On Sundays the congregation crowded the building to overflowing, and on week nights the attendances increased as the meetings proceeded. The mission has proved a season of great blessing. Many passed into the inquiry room. About sixty boys joined the Anti-Cigarette League, and many Christians became members of the Bible Reading Association. We give God the praise.

A. G. E. G.

Mr. C. E. Barraclough at Golcar.

At Wellhouse, Golcar, a fortnight's mission was arranged by the Methodist New Connexion, the evangelist being Mr. C. E. Barraclough. So great was the interest, and so fruitful the mission, that the work was extended for a third week. One hundred and fifteen, mostly between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five, entered the inquiry room and made decision for Christ. The special effort came to a close on Sunday, March 29, when, in a public love-feast which crowded the chapel, over seventy bore testimony to their acceptance of Christ as their Saviour.

W. Cooper, Minister.

Mr. W. H. Jude in the Potteries.

On Sunday, the 6th inst., Mr. W. H. Jude, the well-known preacher-musician, commenced an evangelistic mission in Ebenezer Church, Newcastle-under-Lyme. Enthusiastic and delighted listeners have crowded in to hear his vivid and highly-spiritual portrayal of the Gospel message. His "life-story," given on Wednesday evening with musical illustrations, produced a profound impression. It was not only convincing in its evangelistic tone, but was one of the most powerful appeals for total abstinence we have ever had in this district.

S. H.

Stratford Railway Mission.

Mr. John Hawkins has just ended a most encouraging twelve days' mission here. The services were well attended right through, and were most refreshing to the Christian, while the saving power of the Holy Ghost was manifest in nearly every meeting, some fifty anxious inquirers having been helped. Mr. Gillam rendered effective solos at nearly every meeting and proved a great attraction. "The Crusaders" and the Major Road Baptist Church Brass Bands paraded the streets on the two Sunday afternoons, and brought in a great crowd. Some of those thus gathered, we are glad to state, decided for Christ. For all this we render thanks to God.

G. W. Thurston.

Gipsy Smith at Sunderland.

In the mission recently held by Gipsy Smith in the Victoria Hall, Sunderland, under the auspices of the Free Church Council, the town was stirred, and 2,300 people listened every night to his earnest pleadings. Over six hundred seekers passed through the inquiry-rooms. The most remarkable gathering was that which assembled one evening at 11 p.m.

At ten o'clock 1,000 workers assembled at the Hall door, and a procession, headed by a brass band and nearly all the Nonconformist ministers of the town, was then made through some of the worst parts of the town. A crowd of scouts distributed tickets of admission, button-holing likely cases. At eleven the body of the hall was well filled with a congregation of drunkards, roysterers, idlers, and suitable subjects for an earnest appeal. Many were impressed and remained to be prayed with.

Mr. John Coates, Mr. Webster, and Mr. Wm. Bilton have conducted a mission at Framwellgate Moor, near Durham. Lantern services and lectures were given with encouraging results, and many have declared their acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour.

T. S.

Mr. George Back, of the Open-Air Mission, was at Lincoln during the recent races, and did good service by preaching in the courts of the city, addressing the men in the mess rooms, delivering tracts to the many visitors at the races, and speaking in the open air each evening. We believe that much good was done by the faithful testimony given.

J. N.

Mr. Fred Woolley, the converted collier, has just completed a six-days' Gospel mission at Loose Valley Baptist Chapel, near Maidstone. The mission was preceded by a week of prayer, and great assistance was rendered by the pastor (Rev. William Archer) and a good body of workers. A special service was conducted for "men only" on the Sunday afternoon, when the evangelist gave a most earnest address. The whole of the meetings were well attended, and both saved and unsaved were greatly blessed. On the closing night of the mission the evangelist related his conversion and experiences under the title of "From the Coal Pit to the Cross."

Miss Glover is conducting a Gospel mission in Saltcoats, in response to an invitation from the Christian Endeavour Society connected with the Evangelical Union Church. It was arranged to hold the meetings during the week-nights in the large hall of the Church; but the interest became so great, and the attendance so large, that it became necessary to use the Church for the meetings. By the end of the second week it became evident that the Evangelical Union Church would not hold the possible audiences for the Sabbath, especially the evening meeting. The North Parish Church was granted for the evening service, and was completely filled. The meetings are still going on, for the third week, and are increasing in interest and numbers.

A fortnight's mission, conducted by Mr. A. W. Smart, of the Evangelization Society, has just been brought to a close at the Baptist Church, Widnes. The meetings included special services for men, women, and young people, also noon services at some of the local works. The mission has resulted in many souls being led to seek Christ as their Saviour, besides which the earnest, faithful preaching of the evangelist has led to much heart searching by the Christians, and to the quickening of their spiritual life. The church has deep cause for devout thankfulness to Almighty God for much blessing derived from Mr. Smart's all-too-short ministry in its midst, as also from the soul-inspiring Bible readings conducted by Mr. J. C. Fenn, the Liverpool secretary of the Evangelization Society.

A. Harvey.

The Moffat Evangelistic Association have just brought to a close a special mission conducted by Mr. Farquhar McLennan, of Glasgow, who was greatly used by God at Stranraer. During the first week the meetings were not largely attended, but the workers and Christians who attended received much blessing by the teaching, and deep, heart-searching truths presented by Mr. McLennan. From the first the mission realized that in the missioner they had a man of prayer, and, consequently, a man of power. The last fortnight of the mission was the most encouraging effort put forth in Moffat for a number of years. The Spirit of God was manifest in the meetings from the beginning, but during the last week quite a number decided for Christ. The closing night Mr. McLennan and the workers had the joy of seeing five cross "over the line" to serve our Lord and Master.

J. Sutherland, Secretary.

Rev. James Oatey has been conducting an open-air mission at Erith during the past few weeks. The preached Word was listened to with rapt attention by vast crowds, and before many days had gone-by, numbers of hitherto utterly careless ones would be at the place of meeting some time before the commencing hour, "hungry for the Bread of Life." It is difficult to measure the working of the Holy Spirit in a work like this, but signs were very apparent that the earnest practical addresses were being used as spiritual arrows to many hearts. At the request of the men, for a week during the dinner-hours Gospel services were conducted at Messrs. Vickers, Sons & Maxim's Dining Hall (the largest engineering works in the place), and when fine at the works gates. In the evenings special mission services were conducted at Slade Green Baptist Church. At Vickers', larger numbers listened each day, and considerably over 1,000 gathered at the farewell service. Atheists, drinkers, and the indifferent have been very much stirred by the Gospel addresses, and in the workshops they are the constant theme of discussion. At Slade Green the meetings increased in size and in blessing each night, until on the last Sunday the chapel was crowded in a manner never known before. Souls have been converted, Christians awakened and strengthened, and all are united in praise and thanksgiving for these days of Grace.

Requests for Prayer and Praise.

For much blessing to attend the mission at the Lincoln April Fair.

For Mr. Alex. Y. McGregor, who is conducting a mission at Methil, Fife.

For a mission being conducted at the Public Hall, Chelmsford, by Mr. J. J. Scroggie.

For blessing on a special effort for the salvation of souls at Slave Mission, Plumstead, S.E.

A minister who sought prayer for the Lord's guidance at an interview desires to offer praise for answer received.

For Bible Carriage work in villages, by Mr. Douglas Perry, late of Jarvis Brook, Sussex, but now of Newport, Mon.

For a mission for young people to be held at Chuke Street Mission Hall, Exeter, commencing April 19, to be conducted by Mr. F. A. Glover, of Taunton.

For the anointing of both speaker and hearers at meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life at Horsham, April 19-26, to be conducted by Rev. Dr. Morris.

The Needs of Dundee.—The Dundee Home Mission Union has just sent deputies to visit the different districts, whose reports are full of interest; but the Council expresses once more the conviction that the home mission work of the city is not equal to the need. The condition of the city presents a vast and heart-vexing problem to churches and the individual Christian. The problem is one, though it has many sides. Many methods of amelioration and of solution are being tried, and none without result. The effect of the consecrated labours of the servants of Christ is unspeakably helpful. But the conditions demand more service, new methods, better organization, and equipment in the home mission field; and, above all, the more hearty, earnest, and persuasive preaching of the Gospel of the grace of God, as the means of salvation, both for this life and that which is to come.

About a Staff.

Hymn: Sacred Songs and Solos. No. 465.

How proud most boys are when they are considered (or consider themselves) big enough to use a walking-stick! But of late years I have noticed that girls are almost as fond of one as their brothers are; so my subject to-day will suit both.

In Gen. xxxii. 10, Jacob referred to his prosperity in these words: "With my staff I passed over this Jordan"; and now I am become two bands." This means that he started out as a young man "to seek his fortune," as we should say, with nothing he could call his own except his stick; and in later years he was the possessor of property consisting of cattle and servants in large numbers. In his dying moments he blessed his grandchildren and "worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff" (Heb. xi. 21). Thus from the days when in his boyhood he had cut a stick from a tree in the woods, until the end of his life, a staff was his daily companion.

Coming to the New Testament, Mark vi. 8 tells us that when Jesus sent his disciples out to preach, He "commanded them to take nothing, save a staff only."

We, too, are setting out upon life's journey. What is our staff? The Bible, the Word of God. Let us see how appropriately it fits in with the uses to which a staff is put.

(1) A staff, or stick, helps its owner to walk. Now a boy's stick becomes too short for him when he grows up to be a man. But the Bible is equally suited to every age. Whether Jacob used the same staff all through his life we do not know. Certainly he did not do what some of you boys do—leave it in a railway carriage and lose it, as I have done more than once! Nor would he trouble much about its being elegant or ornamental, so long as it was stout and useful. The Bible is intended for use. If you have one handsomely bound, you may take extra care of it, but after all it is the inside, not the outside, that will help you to walk in the paths of God; to pass over the hills and valleys of life; and at last to cross the river of death. No other book can do for you what the Bible can. Read it then; study it; and let it be your constant companion and guide.

(2) It helps to overcome difficulties. Once when I was travelling in North Africa, I had a very handsome and (as I thought) a very strong stick, which I used one day to beat aside some cactus plants that blocked my way. But crack!—and I had two sticks instead of one! It had broken in half. I have kept one piece as a curiosity to show what a stick ought not to be. But God's Word will never fail you like that. Think how Jesus used it when Satan tempted Him in the wilderness. Therefore, commit parts of it to memory; learn as much as you can of the Book of Proverbs, for instance, and you will find that all through your life it will help you to resist the tempter.

(3) A staff is used for protection. A policeman always carries one for this purpose, and perhaps you have done the same on a dark night along a lonely lane. Satan is called "the prince of darkness," and all through the New Testament sin and Satan are associated with the idea of darkness. Look up the word in a concordance, and you will see how often this is the case. The Bible is a means of defence against all dangers that beset your spiritual life. Psa. cxix. 11 says: "Thy Word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee." You know what an "ambush" is. A number of men hide in a secret place by the roadside, and when their enemies come along they suddenly spring out upon them. This the Boers often did. Read how Joshua captured the town of Ai by this means (Joshua viii. 12-19). That is how Jesus used the Word of God.

(4) A stick is sometimes a means of punishment. I hope none of you boys ever compel your father to use it thus—nor yet use it yourself upon the cat! But perhaps you have had it at school, if not at home. If so, I hope you have profited by the painful experience. But punishment in whatever form has a useful end in view, in order that we may become more diligent and obedient. "No chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness" (Heb. xii. 11). Well, Paul told his young disciple Timothy that Scripture "is profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" (2 Tim. iii. 16). There are parts in it that say, "Thou shalt not" do this or that, and we must take care to listen to such warnings, if we would avoid the worse punishment which sin must always bring.

(5) So you see these are some of the ways in which the Bible is helpful to us in life; but what about death (because we must think about that sometimes, too)? Read what David said in that beautiful Psalm (xxiii.), which I hope you have learned by heart: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me." Dear boys and girls, if you take the Bible as your help through life, there is no fear of it failing you when you come to die. Learn to love it while you are young. This is why we have our Searcher week by week, and I am so thankful to know what a blessing it has been to many of you. I pray God it may be as true as it was of Timothy, that "from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus" (2 Tim. iii. 15).

Sanctifying the Sabbath (Neh. xiii. 15-22).

The need for the weekly Rest-Day is engraven in our nature. We require the periodical rest for the body after the toil and labour of six days; for the mind, that it may become recuperated by a fresh train of interests; for the nervous system, suffering from overstrain; and above all for the spirit, that it may have time and opportunity for thinking of "the things that are above."

It is probable that the weekly Rest-Day, or some equivalent to it, has been recognized in every age, and among all nations that have advanced beyond the earliest stages of existence. We meet with the division of time into weeks everywhere (Gen. viii. 10). It is interesting to remember that at the time of the French Revolution, the Anarchists, in their feverish desire to expunge all ancient landmarks, tried to substitute a week of ten days for the week of seven; but after a short time it became obvious that human nature could not stand so severe a strain, and they reverted to the old method of computation.

It is on this primeval basis, the necessity of human nature, that I always base the observance of the one Rest-Day in seven; and as a son of God, it is my duty, so far as lies in my power, to preserve it for my fellow-men from the incursion of greed and pleasure-seeking. I must not cause needless work, lest I deprive men of that which my Father has given; and I must even interpose to save men from casting away or trampling under foot this precious gift.

These arguments apply to all men. All thoughtful men will admit their cogency, and when dealing with those who will not permit us to argue for the Rest-Day on religious grounds, because they do not admit the authority of the Bible, we may feel well able to maintain our position, because we have got down to the bed-rock of the nature of things.

Of course to us, there is the added weight of the Divine Word, which has fenced the Rest-Day around with new meaning, and new sanctions. In the Old Testament it is associated with the completion of Creation (Gen. ii. 1-4); in the New, with the completion of Redemption, when our Lord was raised from the dead (Matt. xxviii. 1; Acts xx. 7-12). Thus, apart from the Levitical Code as to our observance of the Rest-Day, we are bound so to observe the day that it will promote the most perfect rest of the whole nature, for ourselves and others.

It is not enough to rest the body; we must rest the mind, and we must not forget the higher ranges of our being, when the spirit needs fellowship and communion with God. To give time to the worship and thought of God, to copy His example by doing works of mercy, and to see that our dependents and servants have opportunities of doing the same—this is the observance of the Rest-Day which becomes us, who are the children of the Heavenly Father.

We have no record of any decision by the early Church as to the alteration of the Rest-Day from the seventh day to the first. Probably at first they ran concurrently, the Jews laying more stress on the one, the Gentiles on the other. There was evidently also considerable discussion as to the obligation of the Jewish Sabbath on the new converts (Rom. xiv. 5, 6; Col. ii. 16); but as the true relation of the Christian Church to the synagogue became more apparent, and especially after Jerusalem had fallen and the Temple was destroyed, the Church came more and more to observe as its Rest-Day, the day when the Lord arose from the dead. This was known as the Lord's Day (Rev. i. 10).

The action of Nehemiah, which was so resolute and strenuous, may well be imitated by us in insisting not only that the literal rest of the day shall not be broken by street cries and paper boys; but that the inner rest shall be maintained, and that all intruding voices of worldly care and business shall be rigorously shut out.

Paul's Journey to Jerusalem (Acts xxi. 3-12).

Golden Text (Acts xxi. 14).

THE last stage of Paul's third missionary tour. The elders of the Ephesian Church stood on the shore at Miletus, taking their last sorrowful look at the face of their beloved teacher, while Paul and his party set sail for Syria. Firmly convinced that the will of God for him at that time was first Jerusalem and afterwards Rome, neither persuasion nor prophecy from comrade or friend could move the Apostle from his set purpose. "What wilt Thou have me to do?" had been his question from the beginning, and, as each answer came, "Now then do it!" was his rule of action. The stronger the will the better the instrument, so long as the strong will is in the hand of the God of love.

I. The voyage from Miletus to Ptolemais.

1. Island of Coos, Temple of Æsculapius the mythical god of medicine.

2. Rhodes.—The isle of roses and wine. Noted for Colossus, a huge brass statue of Apollo erected astride the harbour, seventy cubits high, and admitting the largest ships of the time to sail in and out between the legs. Thrown down by an earthquake.

3. Patara.—Changed ships. "Each step." (Pro. xvi. 9; Ps. xxxvii. 23.) Passed Cyprus, with its memories (Acts xiii. 7).

4. Tyre.—Important seaport noted for a purple dye obtained from shell-fish. The Lord Jesus had been there (Matt. xv. 21). The Gospel carried there by His persecuted followers (Acts xi. 19). Then Saul's name carried terror with it (Acts ix. 13). V. 5 shows he had grown more like Jesus, for the children gathered round him. The week of waiting was profitably spent in ministry among these obscure disciples. Paul had to search for them, and they responded heartily.

5. Ptolemais, Accho of Jud. i. 31. Acre of modern days. The followers of Jesus were dear to His servant.

II.—A Rest at Cesarea.

Roman capital of Palestine. On main road between Tyre and Jerusalem (Acts ix. 30; xviii. 22). Philip the companion of the martyred Stephen lived there. His daughters had heard, doubtless of the fiery young persecutor who held the clothes of those who stoned their father's friend; and how he was now an ardent missionary of the Gospel. What a house-party, Philip and Saul of Tarsus, with Jesus between! Agabus (Acts xi. 28) had the gift of foretelling, but Paul had the commands. Like his Master, the Apostle's face was "stedfastly set to go to Jerusalem" (Luke ix. 51); and his friends protested, even Luke and Timothy, but like a soldier and a hero he suffered, but he never flinched. "Into the dark with Jesus" he stepped out alone on the will of the Lord. Rewarded. 1. Luke says, "We all ceased," and all hearts went with him. 2. "The Lord stood by him" (Acts xxiii. 11). That made up for all.

Lessons.

1. Paul's strong will was given over to the Lord. Was it obstinacy, or self-will? No! It was loyalty to his Captain. Obedience to the Holy Spirit's guidance. Confidence in the wisdom and love of God. "Take my will and make it Thine." The Lord can strengthen weak wills (2 Cor. xii. 9).

2. Eph. v. 16. The Apostle planned to go direct and quickly from Corinth to Syria (xx. 3). But the Lord guided him round by way of some disciples who needed teaching. He did not bemoan the delay, even at Tyre, but looked around for the work Jesus had for him to do there. "Show me my task for to-day."

3. Hallowed partings leave sweet memories. "God be with you" (good-bye). "I commend you to God" (adieu). "Mizpah" (Gen. xxxi. 49). Pray the words, and God will bless them.

4. "They returned home" without their teacher, but with stronger faith and firmer purpose for what he had taught them, to walk with God in the home life.

5. "Kneeled down on the shore and prayed." Not "to be seen of men," but not ashamed to be seen praying when needs be.

6. Paul said, "I am ready." What to do? (v. 13.) But he had been ready to do smaller things first. To be content when hungry, poorly clothed, homeless, called names, spoken ill of, tired (1 Cor. iv. 11; Phil. iv. 11, 12). Peter thought he was ready (Luke xxii. 33), but he had to learn to confess his Lord first. Did you ever think how many miles the Lord Jesus walked, too, "for love of me—for love of you" (Luke xiii, 33; John iv. 4)?

DRIVE ON! DRIVE ON!

Among famous Welsh preachers, the name of Christmas Evans will ever be remembered as that of one filled with zeal for the Gospel of Christ. For forty years he worked with untiring energy among the churches of the Welsh hills. Whatever the weather, he was to be seen, astride his pony, travelling hither and thither in the service of God; and though many ridiculed the preacher, he continued to the end, doing the work to which he had put his hand. When dying, Christmas Evans imagined himself still travelling over his native hills, and with his last breath exclaimed, "Drive on! drive on!" If God opens a life-path for any of us, a way in which He would have us go, let us, relying upon strength from above, do even as did the Apostle. Drive on! in any work to which God has called you, and let no one hinder you or turn you aside.

FOLLOWING THE CROSS.

At a place not far distant from Barmouth there are several sights to which the attention of visitors is always drawn. At the hotel of the district, tickets are issued to tourists for their guidance to the various centres of interest. The cards give directions for the benefit of the sightseers, and invite them to follow the paths where crosses are placed at short distances. As visitors walk through the woods and over the hills, they have but to glance around to know the way they should take, and in good time, by exactly following where the white crosses indicate, the cascade, the ruins, and other places of interest are reached. Though the disciples in the lesson urged Paul that he should not go up to Jerusalem (v. 4), the Apostle saw the cross of Christ pointing to Jerusalem as a goal.

THE CALL OF DUTY.

In the year 1825, when an Arctic expedition was being organized, Sir John Franklin was asked to take command. At that time his wife, whom Sir John had married two years earlier, was in very delicate health. She, however, urged her husband to leave her, as the country was in need of his services. When bidding farewell to her husband, she gave into his keeping a beautiful silk banner, which had been worked with her own thin hands; and asked the explorer to wave it over the desolate places he might visit, and lift it high as a signal of hope. Shortly after the departure of Sir John, his wife died of consumption, and the Arctic discoverer, in obeying the call of duty from his country, suffered severely in the loss of his life-partner. The disciples at Tyre, when they brought the Apostle on his way, kneeled down on the shore and prayed (v. 5).

OBSTRUCTIONS IN THE WAY OF DUTY.

On one occasion Mr. Gladstone was staying at Sandringham with the King. The Prince of Wales, as he was then, pointed out to the veteran statesman a certain tree which he intended to have removed, as it spoilt a particular vista, and laughingly suggested that his guest should undertake the task. Mr. Gladstone smilingly promised to think the matter over. On the following morning one of the gardeners, arriving at his work, hurried forward to discover the meaning of a series of thundering blows, which he heard in the distance. There stood Mr. Gladstone, coatless and waistcoatless, with his axe nearly through its appointed task. As the venerable statesman determined to demolish the tree that offended his Prince, so we should seek to overcome all that would obscure our vision of the Lord or keep us from following Him.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

FALKIRK.

AN esteemed correspondent writes of the recent mission of Dr. J. Q. A. Henry and Mr. T. Armon Jones at Falkirk:—

"I rejoiced that the Lord was using Dr. Henry not only in quickening the consciences of His people, but also in bringing souls into His kingdom. I have never witnessed such solemn and earnest determination to forsake the old way, and with God's help to walk in the new. The Holy Spirit was indeed working in the hearts of the people."

LINCOLN.

The mission just concluded at Lincoln also had an awakening effect. The first meeting, held on April 4, was an excellent beginning, and was followed by a torchlight demonstration, led by several bands, which attracted a large audience to the Central Hall for a second gathering, at which Mr. W. Monks presided, and many pledges were secured.

On the Lord's Day Dr. Henry spoke at the P.S.A. to a large and deeply-interested audience on "Pitching your Tent towards Sodom." In the evening the subject was "Dying like a Fool," and (says The Citizen) Dr. Henry was torrential in rhetoric, keen in logic. The impression Dr. Henry produces is very powerful, and at times the stillness of the auditorium is profound.

A large audience of ladies was addressed on the afternoon of the following day, several well-known ladies connected with the temperance movement also taking part. Mrs. Hodgett, President of the Women's Auxiliary, occupied the chair, and Dr. Henry gave a striking address on "Tragedies of the Heart and Home." At night Dr. Henry was again heard to great advantage on "The Great Red Dragon," his hearers being at times held spell-bound.

Throughout the week the gatherings grew in interest. The Lincoln Echo said:—"Dr. Henry, whose deliverances are marked with wonderful vigour, draws many thrilling and pathetic lessons which evidently reach the hearts of his hearers." One of the meetings of the series was that on the Wednesday evening, when Dr. Henry, in the course of an address, which was full of vivid description and solemn appeal, contended that the nation is being throttled by the greatest "trust" on earth, the liquor traffic. Strong drink is the supreme hindrance and the supreme curse of Great Britain. Every man in the country should fight it, for it is the nation's worst foe.

On Friday last many visitors made their way to Lincoln to hear the missioners, and there a crowded audience assembled. Dr. Henry's powerful words again had a telling effect, and Mr. Armon Jones sang with his accustomed tenderness. The concluding meetings of this successful campaign were held on the Lord's Day. At the afternoon service Dr. Henry gave an impressive address on "The Resurrection," and in the evening a memorable farewell meeting was held in the New Central Hall. The packed audience testified to the fact that both Dr. Henry and Mr. Armon Jones had won the affection of the people of Lincoln, and there is a unanimous feeling that every possible effort should be made to secure their services for a large compaign in the near future.

Obituary.

REV. A. SCHREIBER D.D.

THE death is announced of Rev. August Schreiber, D.D., of Barmen, in Westphalia, at the age of sixty-three. As Inspector of the Barmen Mission, he had a wide circle of friends. We hope in an early issue to give some account of his life and work.

REV. PREBENDARY KITTO.

A well-known figure in connection with Christian work in London is removed by the death of Rev. Prebendary J. F. Kitto, vicar of St. Martins-in-the-Felds, W.C. In 1867 he began, at Poplar, a long and useful career as an East London incumbent. In 1875 he was appointed to the rectory of Whitechapel, a parish which was not then the home of the alien to the extent to which it is to-day, and here Mr. Kitto did excellent work, manifesting Evangelical fervour and organizing ability. In 1881 he was moved to the rectory of Stepney. Prebendary Kitto was a cordial friend of the Church Missionary Society, and was greatly interested in the Church Pastoral Aid Society, but his chief work outside his parish went in two directions. He was for twenty-one years chairman of the Church of England Sunday School Institute in Serjeants' Inn, and was also closely connected with hospital work. In his first incumbency he became honorary secretary of the Poplar Hospital; at Whitechapel and Stepney he was naturally associated with the London Hospital; and as vicar of St. Martin's he played an important part in the work of the Charing Cross Hospital. He was also one of the original members of the council of the Hospital Sunday Fund.

REV. DR. MILBURN.

At the age of seventy Dr. William Henry Milburn, chaplain to the Senate of the United States, has passed to his rest. He has long been known as "the Blind Chaplain." When five years old he lost the sight of one eye totally, and of the other in great measure, becoming entirely blind later in life. He pursued his studies under great difficulties, but successfully cultivated a very retentive memory. In 1845 he was elected Chaplain to Congress, and again in 1853; he was elected Chaplain in 1885 to the House of Representatives, and in 1893 to act for the Senate. On more than one occasion he offered prayer in the Senate on behalf of Queen Victoria and the British Empire. Perhaps the most notable instance of his desire that the United States and this country should live in amity was given at the time of President Cleveland's message to Congress over the dispute between England and Venezuela. At the most critical time Dr. Milburn offered an impressive prayer invoking the Divine aid in the amicable settlement of "the dispute between brethren." He paid several visits to England, and met with much acceptance as a preacher and lecturer.

MR. JAMES BURGES.

On Monday, April 6, Mr. James Burges, of the Orphan Homes of Scotland, departed this life, aged fifty-four, to the deep sorrow of his immediate relatives and a wide circle of friends. Three days before, acting under medical advice, he underwent a serious operation, from which he did not rally, passing suddenly away. For twenty-four years he was associated with Mr. Quarrier in the work of the homes, twelve of which were spent in Canada at the Receiving Home there. He was married to Mr. Quarrier's second daughter, and she and her two boys have been left to mourn the loss of husband and father. He was a true helper in the work among the children, and was withal a most unobtrusive and unassuming worker.

His remains were laid to rest in the neat little cemetery near the Children's church, in the Orphan Homes Village. Prior to the interment a service was held in the church, at which all the children, numbering about 1,200 or so, were present, as well as the "fathers" and "mothers," besides a number of mourners from Glasgow and elsewhere. The service was conducted by Mr. Quarrier, and prayer was offered by Revs. John McLean, John Urquhart, and Pastor D. J. Findlay. At the close of the service the children moved out first and took their places on the sides of the avenue, along which four of the workers carried on their shoulders the coffin from the church to the grave. The scene was a most impressive one. J. C.

MRS. MARY ANN BROCK, GREENWICH.

Friends of this faithful worker will learn with regret she passed away on April 2, in her eightieth year. Converted to God in the year 1855, she shortly afterwards evinced a strong desire to be used by Him in any way for the salvation of souls, and was spared to work for Him forty-five years. In the year 1856 she commenced her work as Sunday School teacher, tract distributor, sick visitor, &c., and was gradually led into more public work. She preached the Gospel to the brickmakers and the match factory girls at Forest Gate and Bow Common, where many careless or unbelieving souls were led to Christ through her instrumentality.

Mrs. Brock was a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church for about forty-seven years. For many years in her prosperous days she not only worked, but gave of her substance to help the cause. Many hundreds of sailors in all parts of the world will miss their "mother" at the Wesleyan Seamen's Mission in East London, where for so many years she addressed them each Sunday, and also presided at their welcome tea. As the ships come sailing in, strong men will share the sorrow of her nearest friends, when they hear that she who led them to Christ, and who wrote many letters to cheer them when on the ocean, has gone to the land where there is no more sea.

The last years of her life were clouded by much trial and adversity, yet never once did her faith in God waver, and amid all her sorrow she was cheerful. She preached the Gospel and lectured in many towns for over forty years, and even at the advanced age of seventy-seven years she could move large congregations to both laughter and tears, for pathos and humour both entered into her mental constitution.

REV. DR. D. D. BANNERMAN.

A profound and painful impression was produced in St. Leonard's United Free Church, Perth, on Lord's Day morning of last week, by the announcement that the pastor, Rev. David Douglas Bannerman, D.D., had died at 10.30 that morning. Dr. Bannerman had been indisposed for about a month, suffering from neuralgia in the ribs, but it was thought that he was getting better, and that he would soon be able to go for a holiday; in fact, within three days of the end he was able to enjoy a drive.

Born at Ormiston in 1842, Dr. Bannerman was not only a son of the manse, but descended from a line of ministers most of whom during the last 200 years have been closely connected with Perthshire. His great-great-grandfather, ordained in 1703, was settled first in the parish of Inveravon, and afterwards in Forglen, where he died in 1749. Dr. Bannerman's grandfather was minister of Cargill, in the Presbytery of Dunkeld, and there his father, Rev. Dr. Bannerman, Professor of Apologetics and Pastoral Theology in the New College, Edinburgh, was born early in the present century. Professor Bannerman was licensed by the Presbytery of Perth in 1830, and three years later was settled at Ormiston. In 1839 he married the younger daughter of Lord Reston, one of the Senators of the College of Justice. He was appointed to the Professorship in 1849, and died in 1868.

Our brother who has just passed to his rest was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and University, where he was a distinguished student and took his Arts degree with honours. He afterwards went to the Theological Hall, was the first Cunningham Fellow of his college for his year, and travelled in the East in connection with the Fellowship. Settling in Dalkeith in 1869, Dr. Bannerman remained there for ten years. Besides performing the duties connected with his congregation, he took an active part in everything that concerned the well-being of the community, and for a number of years was chairman of the local school board. About the end of 1879 he accepted a call from the congregation of Free St. Leonard's, Perth, and his work there has been performed with that diligence and ardour which characterized his previous ministry.

An able and Evangelical preacher, Dr. Bannerman was thoughtful rather than eloquent. His sermons, which were characterized by clearness and precision, evinced a combination of power, thoroughness, and discernment. For many years he took a prominent position in the Free Church, in Presbytery, Synod, and Assembly, and at different times was Convener of the Assembly's Committees on Temperance, the Colleges, and the Jews.

Dr. Bannerman was widely known for his literary labours. Early in life he edited his father's lectures on the work of the Church of Christ, and these two volumes were for many years the standard on the subject of which they treat. In 1886 he was appointed Cunningham Lecturer, and in the following year published his lectures under the title of "The Scriptural Doctrine of the Church Historically and Exegetically Considered." Among his other works were a book on the Sacraments, being a paper read before the Presbyterian Council in America in 1880; a book on the worship of the Presbyterian Church, with special reference to liturgies; and a volume on Fast Days and Christian festivals.

In every movement that was calculated to stir the religious life of Perth the deceased worked hard. For many years he acted as secretary of the Perth Christian Conference. Deceased had the degree of D.D. conferred on him in 1890. He attained his semi-jubilee as a minister in June, 1894, and at the same time celebrated his silver wedding.

Irish Notes.

THE Cork Protestant Orphan Society has now 107 orphans under its care, and has closed the year with a balance on the right side of its accounts.

Rev. M. Hattersley, of Uganda, has had a very successful tour in some of the Midland counties, while he has advocated the claims of the Church Missionary Society. Mr. Hattersley's addresses were illustrated by photos taken by himself, and were well attended.

Judging by a report of Rev. Wm. Harpur's work as an open-air missionary in the south and west, a spirit of toleration appears to be growing in this country. At all events, Mr. Harpur and his helpers have addressed large and attentive audiences in the fairs and markets of Ireland during the past year, with many signs of encouraging success.

An interesting Sunday-school Conference has been held in Newry, under the auspices of the Presbytery, and was largely attended by the teachers of the town and the surrounding district. Addresses were delivered on various aspects of Sunday-school work by Rev. Professor Hamill, D.D., Rev. James Hunter, Rev. J. D. Osborne, and others; and in the discussion which followed several teachers took part.

The Presbyterian Orphan Society continues to carry on its beneficent work with zeal and success. It has at present on its roll the names of 2,870 children, of whom 2,534 are fatherless and 336 have lost both parents. The income from all sources last year was £34,506 7s. 5d., being twice the amount of its income for any one year since the society was formed. This fact alone speaks volumes for the popular esteem in which the society is held. The invested funds of the society amount to £99,270, and since the society was formed it has sheltered 14,081 children. In the Johnston Memorial Home, which is connected with the society, orphan girls receive training.

During the past week, a large number of philanthropic and religious organizations held their annual meetings in Belfast. These included the Workshops for the Industrial Blind, which now employ 128 blind workers; the Prison Gate Mission for Men, which helped 271 men during the year, all of whom, except 20, were discharged prisoners; the Midnight Mission, which has rescued several girls from a life of shame; the Society for Providing Nurses for the Sick Poor, whose nurses treated nearly 1,000 cases during the year, and paid over 30,000 visits; and the Royal Victoria Hospital, which is soon to remove to new and much more commodious premises.

About Books.

Rhymes for the Nursery. (1s. 6d. Brown, Langham & Co.) Here are some old friends, with illustrations of a correspondingly primitive order.

The dangers of undue devotion to amusement are well stated in Spirit and Sports, Church and Cheer, by E. W. Davies. (6d. net. A. H. Stockwell.)

The eight excellent sermons which make up The True Ritual, by Rev. B. J. Gibbon (1s. net. A. H. Stockwell), are characterised by freshness of treatment and deep spiritual tone.

Messrs. Novello & Co. have issued in octavo form Handel's sacred oratorio, The Messiah, edited, and with the pianoforte accompaniment largely rewritten, by Ebenezer Prout. (2s.)

Jottings and Hints for Lay Preachers. By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A. (1s. net. Melrose.) Helpful counsels based on practical experience. Many a lay preacher will be the better for a study of this little book.

Jeremiah's prayer (xiv. 7-9, R.V.) is carefully examined, analysed, and applied to present day circumstances in When Was God Not God (1s. James Clegg, Rochdale), by Rev. D. O. Davies.

Darton's Sunday Pleasure Book (second series) provides abundant occupation for young minds in the form of Bible questions, missing texts, texts and outlines to colour, and many other ways. (2s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co..)

As following up his work on "The Seven Deadly Sins," Professor James Stalker now gives us The Seven Cardinal Virtues, a little book full of thought admirably expressed. These works are among the best in the "Little Books on Religion" series. (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

With the near prospect of another season's open-air work, mission bands, &c., are on the lookout for suitable tracts emphasizing the spoken message. A useful series is Streams of Mercy, assorted four-page booklets, tinted paper, in packets of fifty. (6d. Drummond's Tract Depot.)

The personal tributes gathered together in Hugh Price Hughes as We Knew Him will be welcome as a small permanent memorial of a leader who has left a deep mark on the Christian effort of our generation. (1s. Horace Marshall & Son.)

Two interesting and helpful Bible studies on Prayer and The Holy Spirit (2½d. each, post free. Y.W.C.A. 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W.) deserve a hearty welcome in quiet homes, and from those who have the guiding of young believers in the pathway of growth in the Christian life.

A wide vista of Bible study is opened up by Rev. George Soltau in his little volume, Typical Characters of the Lord Jesus. The author covers a remarkable range of typical events and characters, and in his treatment of an interesting subject there is nothing fanciful, imaginative, or unreal. (1s. Partridge.)

Bound By a Chain, by Grace Pettman, is a Gospel temperance story of unusual power. The vivid picturing of the author, and her ready clear presentation of the Gospel as the one power to save, ensure that those who can be induced to start reading the book will finish it. (1s. 6d. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.)

"Grace Pettman" Stories. There is always an opening for good, healthy literature in cheap form, and we are glad to find these Penny Stories maintaining their high tone and useful purpose. Under False Pretences depicts with force the insidious methods adopted by Rome in penetrating Protestant Christian families. (Bateman.)

The Story of Jesus (2d. Eyre & Spottiswoode) is a little book in which the life, and works, and words, of Christ are presented in connected form, for the most part as in the Authorized Version. The Four Gospels are here consolidated, and the result is a story which the curious might read, and which Christians may study to distinct profit.

The twelve discourses contained in Rev. J. J. Knight's Sermons in Brief are earnest and evangelical; forcible in their appeal. Among the subjects expounded are "An Unfinished World," "The Temple without Christ," "The Upward Look," and "Life's Journey and its Interpretations." The treatment is always thoughtful and suggestive. (1s. Stockwell.)

Useful Cane Work. By R. M. Jacob. A capital manual for those wishful to become acquainted with an interesting handicraft, fast becoming popular, as a pleasant as well as profitable occupation for young people of both sexes. The author writes from intimate knowledge of the subject, gained by long experience. The work is copiously illustrated by well executed designs. (1s. 6d. net. Charles & Dible.)

Under the title, When Jesus was here among Men (2s. 6d. net. Fleming H. Revell Co.), Nellie Lathrop Helm has vividly illustrated in narrative form the home and public life of Palestine during our Lord's ministry. The style is simple and unpretentious.

The "helpful words to young people" contained in Young Life, by H. J. Christmas (1s. Partridge) appeared in the "Wellington Free Churchman" during the author's presidency of the Free Church Council. The short chapters contain advice well calculated to guide the young when they are most in need of help.

Published through the instrumentality of an admiring hearer, the Hon. John V. Farwell, the selection comprised in Heavenly Harmonies for Earthly Living (2s. net. James Robinson, Manchester) of the sermons preached at Pasadena, California, by Rev. Malcolm James McLeod, may well claim an audience on this side of the Atlantic. They are marked by keen-sighted analysis of human life and motives.

A second and enlarged edition of Mrs. E. A. Walker's bright volume of historical sketches, entitled Old England, has been issued. The authoress writes very agreeably; and in its new dress the book, which is soundly Protestant in character, should receive a fresh welcome, especially from young people. The illustrations are both plentiful and good. (3s. 6d. net. C. J. Thynne.)

The Undying Christ. Rev. J. W. Ewing, M.A., B.D. (1s. Stockwell.) This is the second volume of the Shilling Pulpit, and contains eight sermons, the first of which gives its title to the book. They will be welcomed by many, and will serve to indicate in some measure the secret of the author's growing popularity. They are characterized by certainty of doctrinal teaching, clearness of thought, and pleasing yet forceful expression.

The Book Wonderful; or, The Bible for the People, is a capital pamphlet by Mr. Avary H. Forbes, M.A. (4d. Marshall Bros.) Great and striking facts regarding the Scriptures are digested in a manner that should prove helpful to persons of an inquiring mind. Another pamphlet by the same author, Evolution of the Papacy (3d. F. W. Flood, 5, Ramsden Road, Balham, S.W.), is replete with information on a subject upon which there is deplorable ignorance at the present time.

Theories of the Person of Christ. By James Marchant. (2s. 6d. Stockwell.) For those who desire to study the Person of Christ from the apologetic standpoint, this will prove a useful book. In a very small compass, the author has given us the result of an extensive study of his theme. He defends with great force and skill the Christian conception of the Person of Christ as the only conception possible. The argument is strong and convincing. We commend the book to all thoughtful Christians.

Messrs. Headley Bros. have issued what they claim to be the most complete edition ever published of The Journal of John Woolman; being printed on thin paper, it is, moreover, a pocket volume in point of convenient size. Rev. R. J. Campbell, M.A., supplies an appreciative foreword; then follows the well-known introduction by John G. Whittier. An appendix includes "A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich," and a complete bibliography and index. The illustrations and facsimiles are of great interest. (Cloth 2s. net.)

Training the Church of the Future.—The chapters of this volume, by Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D., were primarily delivered as lectures to several theological seminaries in the United States. They set forth the great principles of Christian nurture, as they are related to the young people's movement of which Dr. Clark was the founder. In their present form they will appeal to a much wider circle of Christian workers, and the volume is one that should be in the hands of all who are entrusted with the care and training of the young life of the Church. Much helpful matter of present interest to Christian Endeavourers is given in the appendix. (3s. Funk & Wagnalls.)

Books by Pasteur Frank Thomas.—Two more works of sterling worth by Pasteur Frank Thomas, of Geneva (whose portrait we gave in our last issue). First comes a series of apologetic papers: Fictions ou Réalités (3fr. 50c.). It forms a sequel of the author's excellent volume, "Questions Vitales," and should be placed in the hands of doubters, and also be studied by those who meet them in discussion. Each chapter answers a question, among them being the following: "Is Religious Faith mere Folly?" "Did Christ Really Rise from the Dead?" "Can we still Believe in a Future Life?" We trust this book will have many readers. The second volume is En Avant! (2fr. 50c.), which contains brief meditations for every day in the year. The readings are terse and striking, and based on passages of Scripture. In many a home this book would supply a helpful note at the beginning of the day. (Geneva: J. H. Jeheber, 28, Rue du Marché; London: Religious Tract Society.)

Lives of Early Methodist Preachers. Here are thirty-one life-stories, abridged from the six-volume edition of a Wesleyan classic. They are records of men who underwent experiences that made them mighty Gospellers, and whose names should not be allowed to pass into oblivion. The work of condensation has been performed by Mrs. Frank Stephens. Care has been taken to retain all the most interesting facts, incidents, and anecdotes, together with particulars of the opposition which these founders of Methodism had to encounter, and some account of their method of preaching. Those who are led by this volume to read the six, with their wealth of detail, religious and adventurous, will read to best purpose; for the stories of our fathers in Christ have much to teach us. (3s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Sons.)

The Dictionaries which Messrs. Cassell have issued from time to time have done much to promote popular education among English-speaking people. The French Dictionary that has so long rendered good service has now come out in an improved form—A New French and English Dictionary, compiled from the Best Authorities in both Languages—Revised and Considerably Enlarged—by James Boïelle, B.A. (Univ. Gall.), Officier d'Académie, lately Examiner in French in the University of London, &c. (7s. 6d.) From the preface we learn that the editor was engaged on the revision for some four and a half years; and in view of the many thousands of new words and phrases, idioms and idiomatic expressions, proverbs and such-like forms that he has included, he reasonably claims to have virtually produced a new work. The lists of names are full in both divisions; and the tables of nouns of double gender, as well as of irregular and defective verbs, are arranged with an eye to practical usefulness. Special care has been taken to make the English-French side serviceable for French students, equally with the French-English side serviceable for English students.

The story of Lady Alicia Blackwood's animal friends, as told in My Dog Frizzie and Others, is interesting and well told. (4d. Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, Palestine House, Bodney Road, Hackney, N.E.)

A new volume, entitled Revival Addresses, by Dr. R. A. Torrey, Chicago, now conducting missions in Scotland, is in active preparation, and will be published by Messrs. James Nisbet and Co. about the end of April.

Handy Weapons from the Great Armoury. A selection of Scripture texts for easy reference in the inquiry-room, or in dealing with the ignorant or anxious. By Michael Honeyman. A useful booklet. (Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.)

God's Mark: Have I Missed It? by Mrs. Tracy, is a booklet which will have an extended circulation among Christian workers. It deals with sin and salvation in a manner that should prove helpful to many. (2d. net, Jarrolds.)

No. 4 of Bits for our Boys (1d. quarterly. B. McCall Barbour, 37, Chambers Street, Edinburgh) is as attractive as its predecessors. The matter is such as has been proved to appeal to schoolboys, and lead them to think of spiritual things. The appearance of the booklet is attractive, and the illustrations excellent.

We are frequently asked to name books dealing with stage plays, and it gives us pleasure to call attention to a new and enlarged edition of Should I go to the Theatre? By Arthur H. Stockwell. (9d. A. H. Stockwell.) The answer is, of course, a very decided negative; and the reasons given are such as will appeal to every true-minded person.

Organized Independency. With this title, Rev. J. B. Paton, M.A., D.D., gives to the world a paper which he read at the Autumnal Meeting of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, held at Wolverhampton in 1869. The pages present a possible basis between Presbyterians and Independents, and are calculated to prove helpful in deliberations upon the important proposals for reform which the late Dr. Joseph Parker submitted to the Union last year. (2d. J. Clarke & Co.)

Pearls of Prophecy, a booklet consisting of passages from the Old Testament, showing how Moses and the Prophets agree in pointing to Christ as an offering for sin. The central point of the booklet is Isaiah liii., in which all the principal offerings are to be found. Illustrations of the Mosaic sacrifices add to the usefulness and attractiveness of the little book, which, though designed for Jews, is likely to prove equally useful to others in making known God's way of salvation. (1d. each, or 7s. 6d. a hundred. Scripture Gift Mission.)

Those who are anxious to possess accurate information as to the political influence of the Jesuits in England and Scotland, during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, will look forward with more than ordinary interest to a volume which will be published shortly by George Routledge and Sons. It will bear the title of The Jesuits in Great Britain: A Historical Inquiry into their Political Influence. The author is Mr. Walter Walsh, whose "Secret History of the Oxford Movement" created such a profound sensation a few years ago.

Church of England.

Rev. F. Trevelyan Snow, the vicar-designate of Holy Trinity, Bordesley, Birmingham, will enter upon his new ministry on May 20.

The Bishop of Durham has opened a mission church erected at Preston-on-Tees in connection with the Holy Trinity Church, Stockton, at a cost of about £2,000.

The Bishop of Peterborough announces his intention of resuming his diocesan duties at once, as he has now fully recovered from the effects of his accident last year.

The annual conference of the Yorkshire Evangelical Union will be held at Leeds on June 11 and 12. Rev. D. Allison is president for the year. The opening sermon will be preached by the Rev. Prebendary Eardley Wilmot.

The treasurers of the fund for the restoration of Peel Church, in the Isle of Man, which suffered so severely in the recent gales, have now over £1,002 in hand and promised, and the contract for repair will be signed in a few days.

Dr. Perowne, late Bishop of Worcester, recently laid the foundation-stone of a new church, dedicated to the memory of Bishop Latimer, of Worcester, in the populous north-west district of Birmingham. This enterprise is the outcome of the liberality of an anonymous lady, who made the offer of the purchase of the site and building of the fabric, at a combined cost of £16,800. The erection of the church, the seats in which will be free and unappropriated, will meet a very great need; and in Rev. J. S. Thirtle, the new vicar, the parish will have set over it a man of distinct powers of organization and true Evangelical zeal. Mr. Thirtle a few years back did a good work as organizing secretary of the Worcester Diocesan Association of the C.E.T.S.

Congregational.

The Home Secretary of the London Missionary Society has received the last £500 towards the deficiency fund, promised anonymously by "Dernier Ressort."

On Lord's Day last Rev. Dr. Pierson preached to crowded congregations and addressed a large P.S.A. at Queen Street Church, Chester (Rev. D. Wynne Evans).

Rev. Arthur Pringle has concluded his ministry of nearly eight years at Caterham. At a farewell meeting his work was spoken of in warm terms, and allusion was made to the progress of the church under his ministry.

Rev. R. J. Campbell will begin his regular ministry at the City Temple on the first Sunday in May, and will continue it through May and part of June. He will then pay a long promised visit to the United States, and during his absence in July and August the City Temple will be closed for renovation and repairs.

The recognition service in connection with the settlement of Rev. John Barlow, as pastor of Streatham Hill Congregational Church, S.W., took place recently, under the presidency of Mr. W. B. Doubleday. The meeting was well attended and full of interest. Many ministers of neighbouring churches of all denominations were present. Addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, and H. Arnold Thomas, of Bristol.

Rev. W. Hardy Harwood, minister of Union Chapel, Islington, has been nominated by the General Committee of the Congregational Union for the secretariat of the Union, in succession to the late Rev. W. J. Woods, B.A. Mr. Harwood's name will be submitted to the annual business meeting of the Union in May. Mr. Harwood was for ten years the minister of Union Church, Sunderland, and in 1892 he succeeded the late Rev. Dr. Henry Allon at Islington.

The congregation of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, were informed by Rev. F. B. Meyer on Sunday that he intends, during his second pastorate, to preach through the Bible—giving his people a more systematic and thorough knowledge of the contents of Scripture. He said that this was the best answer he knew to the critics, and the readiest means of attracting and holding a congregation. He takes the New Testament on Sunday morning, the Old on Sunday evening, and the poetical and prophetical books on Thursday evening at 8.30.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the London Congregational Union, Rev. C. Silvester Horne, who is shortly to take up the work at Whitefield's Tabernacle, said that in going about London he could not but realize that the causes which exist to-day were due to self-sacrifice by the early Congregationalists. On their success we build to-day. Our forefathers laid down their lives or suffered imprisonment because of the testimony they believed to be dear. "I am persuaded," said Mr. Horne, "that only if there is a spirit of sacrifice can we hold what has been won."

Baptist.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon has resumed his ministry at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. He was welcomed home from his Canary Islands voyage by crowded congregations.

A good work is progressing at Westbourne Grove Chapel, W. (Pastor George Freeman). The church jubilee and pastor's fifth anniversary will be celebrated on May 2, 3, 4. A strong platform of speakers is arranged for.

Another baptism service was held at Crewkerne Chapel on Sunday, March 29, when six candidates were baptized by the pastor (Rev. G. Wainwright). This is the fourth baptism service since the pastor's settlement.

The fourth anniversary services of the church at Fareham were held recently, and proved very successful. The preacher was Rev. G. Roberts Hern, of Portsmouth. One result was a considerable addition to the building fund.

The farewell meeting of Rev. J. H. and Mrs. Weeks, who have just sailed for Congo, was held at Queen's Road Baptist Chapel, Wallington, and proved most interesting and inspiring. The missionaries go out as in a measure representing the Wallington Church.

Rev. A. H. Tolhurst has closed his ministry at Carey Hall, Leicester, on leaving for Bradford. A communion service marked the conclusion of an encouraging term of service, lasting eight and a-half years, during which a large chapel and schools have been built, and a church numbering over 250 members gathered.

At Sheffield Road Church, Barnsley, Rev. David Lindsay has delivered a searching series of Sunday evening addresses on "Why don't Men go to Church?" He has dealt with the matter in relation (1) to the world; (2) to the church; (3) to the ministry. A magnificent company of men gathered to hear the third address.

The church at East Hill, Wandsworth, welcomed their pastor, Rev. W. Townsend, on Sunday, April 5, after two months' absence caused by severe illness. The successful character of his work will tax his energies to the utmost and prove as much as he can safely undertake, therefore, under urgent medical advice Mr. Townsend has been compelled to forego all outside engagements for some months at least.

Pastor James Stephens took leave of his church and congregation at Highgate Road, N.W., on April 5, preparatory to a lengthened leave of absence after a ministry of twenty-five years. The church was filled to overflowing. At the Lord's Supper, at the close, there were nearly 600 communicating, and twenty new members were received into fellowship, the greater proportion on confession of faith. The number of members is nearly 800, and the branches of church work are flourishing. This is the result of an earnest Gospel ministry. The pastor leaves with the warm sympathy and love of his flock, and the earnest prayer that the resting time may be a health-restoring and soul-invigorating season.

Methodist.

The negotiations between the West London Mission and the new proprietors of St. James' Hall having broken down, arrangements have been made for the use of Exeter Hall for the Sunday services, on and after November 15.

A series of meetings in connection with the visit to the Plymouth District of the spring deputation of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society has just been concluded, and the members of the deputation report careful preparation on the part of the circuit officers, and, as a result, gratifying success.

Open-air "blackboard" services have been held in connection with the Liverpool Road Wesleyan Mission, N. A writer says: "We sent to Rev. T. Champness for some of his most striking pictures on drink and its effects. Blackboard and easel were obtained, and we got to work in the market-place. Crowds soon gathered. Men and women stood for one and a half hours, and then did not hurry away. The first week we had a crowd of some 200 people; seven signed the pledge, and eight signed last week. Several have been brought to the services at the chapel, and to the temperance social on Saturday night. Three persons have come to class."

The Mayor and Mayoress of Exeter (the latter a devoted Sunday-school teacher in the Wesleyan Mint School), invited all the officers and teachers of the fifteen Sunday-schools in the Exeter Circuit to a convention on Sunday-school work on April 1. Nearly 300 accepted the invitation. Mrs. Goddard, Tiverton, speaking from experience as a teacher, said "teachers must have an experimental knowledge of the truth they teach; that is, there must be heart knowledge; they must also know their facts, that is, there must be head knowledge; they must also manifest a personal interest in their scholars." Mrs. Goddard's address made a deep impression on the audience.

The Salvation Army.

The distribution of free soup and bread to destitute people found upon the streets between the hours of 2 a.m. and 4 a.m. continues at the Army's Metropolitan depots.

The Home Office inspector reports, with reference to Victoria House, the Army's licensed Home for Male Inebriates: "This retreat should prove a useful addition to our present armament, and deserves to be more generally known and appreciated."

Among the applicants for help at the London headquarters of the Women's Social Work during the last month were a Swiss Roman Catholic, a Danish, and two German women; and a Russian governess who had been deserted in Hamburg.

Fallen Asleep.

At Madras, Rev. J. C. M. HAWKINS, C.M.S. missionary at Palamcottah. He had spent the whole of his ministerial life in the South Indian Mission field. He was an earnest and zealous worker, and his loss will be keenly felt.—RARIVOSONA, a young Malagasy Christian. Rev. J. Sharman (L.M.S.) speaks of the attendance at the funeral as the largest he has even seen or heard of in Madagascar. Rarivosona, who was only twenty-four years of age, had been staying at the University of Montpelier in France, and died shortly after reaching his native land on his return.—Rev. ELIJAH JACOB, Congregationalist, of Stroud, aged ninety-one. He entered the ministry in 1843, and for nearly twenty years was pastor of Ebenezer Church, Swansea. Then for nearly thirty years he was pastor at Ebley, Glos., from which he retired in 1891.—Aged seventy-eight, Rev. EVAN GORDON, formerly minister of Duke Street Gaelic Church, Glasgow.—Mr. WILLIAM HOWIESON, missionary at Burnbank, in connection with Dunbeth Church, Coatbridge. — At Sunderland, April 4, Mr. JOSEPH J. SPRAGGON, a member of the Society of Friends and prominent worker in connection with the Y.M.C.A. and in Gospel temperance. Many will remember his kindly presence at Christian conventions at Southport, Keswick, and elsewhere.—Aged eighty-five, Rev. DANIEL SILVAN EVANS, the leading authority on the Welsh language. His chief contributions to the study of his native language were his English-Welsh Dictionary and the (unfinished) Welsh Dictionary. In 1893 he published a volume of sacred poems, some of which attained wide popularity.

Theatrical Employees at Tea.—By the kindness of Sir George and Lady Williams (for the twenty-third time) the theatrical employees to the number of over 500 were invited to a social gathering on Good Friday at Bishopsgate Chapel. Mr. H. W. Maynard presided, and gave a stirring address on the way of salvation. Rev. Herwood Allen, Mr. E. Vandepeer, Rev. T. C. Udall, and Mr. H. Ehrlich also took part in the meeting. The gathering was arranged by the committee of the Special Religious Services in Theatres, Halls, &c., 3, Bridewell Place, E.C.

Welsh Notes.

THE Monmouthshire Congregationalists held their annual meetings at Newport on March 26, Rev. Elwyn Thomas, who presided, dealt with the principles and prospects of Nonconformity, more especially with regard to their claim upon the young people of the Free Churches. The annual report spoke of progress in various directions. The growth of the denomination in Monmouthshire led the Union to divide the county into two districts, with a committee for each. The sermon was preached by Rev. Eynon Davies, London.

The Christian Endeavourers of Pontypridd, Glamorganshire, are making active preparations for the annual Convention of the Welsh Union, which is to take place on April 14, 15, and 16. The Town Hall has been taken for the meetings, and a large attendance is expected. The delegates alone number 200, while, owing to the town being situated in the centre of a most populous district, there is every probability of the meetings being exceptionally well attended.

The annual meeting of the Neath Young Men's Christian Association was held on March 26. Reports were submitted by the secretary and treasurer. An address was delivered by the Hon. and Rev. Talbot Rice, M.A., Vicar of Swansea, subject, "Temptation, and How it May be Overcome."

The English Congregational Union of South Wales held its annual meetings at Penarth on March 24 and 25. The statistical report showed that the Union consists of 140 churches possessing a membership of 13,282. The Sunday-school teachers number 1,607. These have 18,688 scholars under their tuition. The total amount collected during the year was £11,197. On Wednesday papers were read on "The Devotional Use of Scripture" and "Bible Worship." The Union sermons were preached by Revs. H. Elvet Lewis and R. F. Horton, D.D., of London.

Personalia.

Rev. J. F. T. HALLOWES, M.A. of Cambridge, has just returned from a four months' tour through India, extending over 4,000 miles. He will be glad to address churches on the spiritual needs of its vast populations and what is being done to relieve them.

Rev. EDWARD ISAAC, after twenty-two years' labour as pastor and evangelist in Australia and New Zealand, has arrived in London. He will be glad of opportunities to preach the Gospel. Letters may be addressed him, 44, Coolhurst Road, Crouch End, N.

Our readers will be sorry to hear that Dr. COLIN VALENTINE is still in very poor health. He is at present residing in San Remo. Dr. Valentine has done splendid work in Agra under the auspices of the Edinburgh Medical Mission. His training school for the "Sons of the Prophets" will tell for good upon the Punjab for many days to come, and it is earnestly hoped that the work he has had the joy of doing, will be continued by his successor and the mission he represented.

Christian Hostel for Ladies.—Amid the healthful surroundings of North London a new Hostel for women has been established at Womersley House, Crouch Hill—a lofty mansion standing in its own grounds. The Hostel is primarily intended for ladies, who by the force of circumstances would have been compelled to live alone, but here find congenial companionship. Some of them have taken an active part in the social betterment of the world, and are now taking a well earned rest; while others go daily to their posts in the city. In most respects this Hostel differs from anything of the kind in London, and those seeking such a Christian home might, with advantage, call and see it. Particulars may be obtained from Miss Darlow Sarjeant, as above.

THE NATIONAL BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY

Have several new cases before them, and need immediate help and sympathy. We beg the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, who have so generously aided us in the past, to extend their practical help on behalf of the following case:—

A Man, 60 years of age, formerly employed at the Woolwich Arsenal, has through his affliction been unable to work for 4 years. He and his wife are in great distress, as the woman, being very delicate, can only earn about 6s. a week—this, and 2s. 6d. per week from a son, is all they have to depend on.

Contributions to this deserving case will be thankfully received by the Hon. Sec., Rev. J. PULLEIN THOMPSON, The Vicarage, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.; or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

NIGHT SHELTER, REFUGE.

EIGHT CHILDREN'S COTTAGE HOMES.

Help is Much Needed.

Orders for Hosiery, Knitted Garments, and Plain Needlework are earnestly solicited, as well as Contributions in money towards the much needed funds.

Revival in Other Lands. We publish this week tidings of awakenings at home and abroad which will cheer and encourage the hearts of those who are waiting upon God for revival. The movement at Aintab in Asia Minor (p. 15) not only embraces all classes of Protestant society, but has taken special hold of the students in the Central Turkey College, while unprecedented interest in spiritual things has been aroused among the members of the Gregorian (or Orthodox Armenian) Church and the Mohammedans of the city. Mr. James Wharton tells (p. 21) of over two hundred conversions, within a few days, among the pupils in a girls' school and the students of a teachers' training college in the State of Alabama. A special interest attaches in both cases to the fact that many of those who have heard the voice of God, hope, in a few months, to go forth as instructors of youth, with boundless possibilities for Christian service.

Among Scottish Fishermen. At Findochty and Portessie, on the coast of Banffshire, a state of affairs is described (p. 21) such as few living persons have ever witnessed. Concern for their own spiritual condition and that of others, is causing the fishermen and other inhabitants to set aside their daily concerns, for the time being, that this may be attended to. The area is limited, but a great conflagration may be lighted by a torch. The tracing of the awakening back to its source in a godly ministry of the Word, proves anew how truly the faithful sower is entitled to rejoice with the reaper, in whose sheaves he has an equal interest. Ministers who have been labouring long and anxiously without much apparent result, may well take fresh heart, assured that the Word of the Lord shall not return unto Him void.

Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander From Aberdeen we learn (p. 20) that the tide of blessing is still rising in connection with the labours of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander. A specially satisfactory feature of the mission is the commendation of local pastors and other workers, who are able to estimate better even than the evangelists themselves the value of the movement in the city. Much prayer and long preparation have been crowned with the blessing of God. In addition to daily conversions, workers report a large number of cases of decision apart from the meetings. There is an unwonted interest in spiritual things among the indifferent; and men and women are disposed to listen and respond to any courteous approach made to them on spiritual matters.

Visions of 1859 and 1874. We rejoice with those into whose minds are coming visions of 1859 and 1874. There is no reason in Himself why God should not visit our own and other lands as He did a generation ago. Much intercession has been made, and a gracious answer is being granted. The reports which reach us show that evangelists in different directions are meeting with a growing responsiveness to the Gospel appeal. Let the Church of God unite to ask this one thing of the Lord, that He will cause the wave of blessing to grow in volume and sweep over the earth.

The Hands of the Potter. Those who wish to know still more of what the Bible and the Sunday-school have been to, and have done for, the toiling poor in these islands should turn to a recently-published volume, "When I was a Child. By an Old Potter." Even "Hell's Hole" in Burslem, with its brutality and drunkenness was cheered and sweetened by simple faith in the Divine Saviour:—

> To the children the one bright spot in the week of hard toil was the Sunday-school; to many of the adults the sole sustenance through want and suffering was the simple faith in God and the Bible. Religion, as all else in those days, took on a stern form; the Gospel was one of blood and fire.

That austere creed was that of the Primitive Methodists, in which communion the writer of the book was reared, and preached; and of whom he says:—

> They laid hold of the primal source of Divine power from the first, as the disciples did on the Day of Pentecost. They trusted neither in ecclesiasticism nor learning. These matters were incidental and secondary. Their supreme resource in all their work was found in the promise, "The Holy Ghost shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say."

And that Divine power is as free and full to-day as it was to those who leaned upon it then.

No Uncertain Sound. In dealing with the disorder which had crept into the church at Corinth, the Apostle Paul uttered a sentence which not only perfectly fitted the occasion, but which also supplies a suggestive principle for all teaching and speaking—"If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?" May not that word appropriately be applied to many utterances to-day? There can be no decisive action where uncertainty reigns. Many of the books lately poured out from the Press speak of Christian verities in a tentative manner. It is not denial that we have observed so much, but the lack of positive assertion. The truth is treated as if it were in solution and not yet crystallized. Men are never made strong in this way; as Thomas Carlyle put it: "Men live by believing something, not by doubting many things." There would have been no Church at all had the Apostles and the early Christians spoken of vital truths as they are frequently spoken of to-day. To be certain of God, to be certain of the truth of His Word, and then to speak with assurance—this makes a man invincible, and his message to possess a living force.

The King and the Vatican. Evangelical Christians in this country and in Italy are deeply concerned about the proposed visit of King Edward to the Pope. An article in the Tribuna, of April 3, points out that:—

> There is no English diplomatist accredited to the Holy See; and an attempt will probably be made by the Vatican to bridge over this difficulty by proposing that the King should start from the English College or the palace of Prince Massinio, who entertained him on his visit to the city as Prince of Wales.

The necessity for any subterfuge proves how carefully intimate relations have been guarded against by the English constitution; and the moral effect of any attempt to break down this barrier would be very much to be deplored. It is not possible for Edward VII. to take any step like this as a private gentleman. He cannot dissociate himself from his kingship. While statements and counter statements have appeared on the subject, there can be no doubt that pourparlers have been quietly in progress for some weeks; and Protestants of England do well to pray that not the slightest concession may be made to the machinations of the Papacy.

Prayers for the Dead. A singularly subtle attempt to advance the cause of Romanism in the Church of England has, it is hoped, been frustrated, though, as it were, at the eleventh hour. Some weeks ago, when The Record announced that Romish forms and fashions, including prayers for the dead, were embraced in the programme of a Communion Service to be held in St. Paul's Cathedral, in connection with the Army Guild of the Holy Standard, in commemoration of soldiers who died in the war in South Africa, the statement was vigorously denied and the very suggestion officially repudiated. At length the truth came out; an attempt had actually been made to associate the national Cathedral with proceedings that could only be agreeable to Romanisers of the most advanced type. Among other things, a prayer was proposed in these terms:—

> Rest and peace eternal, Lord, in mercy give to them; let light perpetual lighten them.

In a word, the Communion Service was to be a Requiem Mass in everything but name!

A Change of Form. The next step was a revision of the programme. In place of one Romish form another was proposed, as follows:—

> Grant to us, O Lord, together with all Thy faithful departed, peace, light, and refreshment.

These again are words that have not been uttered in English Cathedral worship since the Reformation. However it may be interpreted in terms of casuistry, the petition was designed to render the service, in word as well as deed, one for the repose of the souls of the soldiers who died during the war. Other features, quite as distinctly Roman, constituted the programme one which should receive no countenance whatever from Christians who accept the Articles of Religion, including the well-known 31st, in which we read:—

> The sacrifice of masses, in the which it was commonly said that the priest did offer Christ for the quick and the dead, to have remission of pain or guilt, were blasphemous fables and dangerous deceits.

Protest Effectual. Denials notwithstanding, it now appears that a flagrant effort has been made to enact a thoroughly Popish performance in St. Paul's, which, in the words of a timely protest on the part of the Ladies' League for the Defence and Promotion of the Reformed Faith of the Church of England, "is, in a sense, our common cathedral, the scene of royal and national functions;" and, quite reasonably, it is argued that, "any new departure there, gives all a right to speak." It is gratifying to learn that the Chaplain-General of the Forces, Dr. Taylor Smith, who was abroad when the service was first determined on, has withdrawn his consent to the proceedings, and, in token of disapproval of what has been done, has resigned his position of president to the Army Guild. It is now the turn of the Cathedral authorities to speak—and act. Surely they will draw the line at a Requiem Mass!

A Simple Precaution. A few weeks ago, in making a selection for a living in Bethnal Green, in the gift of the Corporation of the City of London, the officials very wisely required the candidates to sign a declaration that they were not members of the English Church Union, and that in their ritual they would "conform to the Lambeth opinion." Perhaps naturally, the High Church organs are indignant with the restrictions and the method of impressing them, and one of them denounces the course followed as "positively indecent." To the ordinary mind, however, it would seem that if both lay and ecclesiastical nominators more frequently required such guarantees, there would be less unpleasantness in regard to Romanizing practices and teaching on the part of many of those who have escaped what our contemporary terms "the indignity of being questioned."

The True House of God. Certain of the criticisms of Mr. Charles Booth, in his recent work on the religious influences in London, have naturally, and properly, as we think, elicited protests from a number of workers whose enterprise had been subjected to unfavourable comment. Mr. Booth complains, for example, of the Tabernacle in Shoreditch that though it is perfect in its way, its way is not that of being a house of God. "No feeling of sacredness attaches to it." We like the sturdiness of Mr. Cuff's reply to this criticism:—

> I could tell a tale of poor lost girls, miserable drunkards, and every type and kind of working-men being saved in the Tabernacle, and how they have become devoted Christians and good citizens. They are with us in hundreds to this day. Whether the Tabernacle is the house of God or something else, we have seen the wonders of Divine grace in all forms of its operation within its sacred walls.

What reply can any make to this statement? We are well aware that certain natures are profoundly impressed by what is called the "sacredness" of a building; but the true sacredness of any place is attached, not to its materials, but to its worshippers. The open air was to Jacob "the house of God and the gate of heaven," because there he had seen God. And any place is a house of God wherein God and men commune.

The Sanctifying of Ordinary Things. To all who entertain sentiments similar to those expressed by Mr. Booth, we should like to commend a careful reading of the last chapter of the Book of Zechariah, in which the high water mark of the Old Testament is reached. The Jew who under Divine inspiration wrote that book had been brought up to regard certain things of the Lord's House as especially sacred and other things as merely secular. Yet, touched by the Spirit of God, he enunciates the great truth that "in that day there shall be upon the bells of the horses 'holiness to the Lord . . . and every pot in Jerusalem shall be holiness to the Lord.'" The bells of the horses were mere jingling ornaments, and may stand for the lighter things of life; the pots in the houses represent ordinary domestic life, and yet these were to take rank with the sacred vessels on the altar. It is to this that the Spirit of God is leading—the sanctity of all life. That life which is divided into sacred and secular falls very far short of God's ideal for us. All life is to be lifted up to one sacred level.

The Missionary Atmosphere. Rev. J. G. Greenhough, who is devoting a great deal of his time to pleading the cause of foreign missions, writes in the Missionary Herald a trenchant article on the cultivation of the missionary atmosphere. He speaks, with truth, of the moderate attendances at ordinary missionary meetings, where the subject is prominently referred to only once a year. It is unhappily the fact in too many churches that "Missionary Sunday" does not excite nearly so much interest as a Sunday-school anniversary, or even a concert; and this is largely due to the fact that the claims of foreign missions are advocated only occasionally. Mr. Greenhough well says that annual meetings cannot possibly create a true missionary atmosphere. "It always takes a great many days of pentecostal preparation to bring on a day of pentecost." We wish this were understood by all the churches. If it were, there would be a vigour of spiritual life which would manifest itself in all home work as well; for when the heart beats true to Christ, all His work becomes dear, since to Him there are no foreign parts—all souls being His heritage and the object of His love.

Missions and Moral Tone. Dr. Lefroy, Bishop of Lahore, in a singularly interesting paper on "The Moral Tone of India," takes a somewhat depressing view of the moral difficulties which stand in the way of successful mission work in our great dependency. In the presence of those numerous evils he finds, however, nothing to dishearten those who are engaged or interested in the work, but rather "the sure pledges of the victories which await our faith;" and he is able to say, in asking how far Christianity is really making headway and gaining ground in the struggle with unbelief and sin:—

> There have been moments, I am sure, for all of us when Christianity has seemed only to hold its ground; and we have scarcely realized the possibility of strong onward movement. . . . At such times, if we could clearly realize that, however great the shortcomings, however terrible the failings, there yet had been secured by the power of the Cross of Christ operating so long on our land, a definite advance to a standpoint of public morality and public conscience which really differentiate our home life to an almost conceivable degree from the conditions of life in countries where that power has not been felt—this would give us the very opening of encouragement and hope we need. The conviction that this in the most intensely true sense was really so, was borne on me with ever-deepening intensity during the year which I spent in Delhi.

Temperance "Circles." The idea of the prayer circle has been applied, with a little alteration, to temperance work by our friend, Mr. Fullerton, of Leicester. Circles of ten persons are formed, of which the "centre" is responsible for those in his circle, and at the annual meeting, or for any special object, a large force can immediately be commanded. It is a bright idea, and capable of accomplishing great good. It can also be extended in several directions, so as to form a veritable propaganda on behalf of sobriety. We understand that Mr. Fullerton will be glad to explain the working of his scheme to any church that cares to apply for details.

*Things as They Are in Southern India.

In her new book on Mission work in Southern India, Miss Wilson-Carmichael occupies a standpoint that is by no means usual or commonplace. Some write of what has been done in the Name of Christ in our great Eastern Dependency; but here we read of what has not been done. Some write on hopeful tendencies and prospects such as are born of faith, and assured in the unfailing promises of God; but here we read of persistent paganism and of wickedness in forms that cannot be described, of cruelties that have prevailed among India's millions from time immemorial. We are not to conclude that the Hindus are Christians because their land has come under British rule; nor that its population bows at the name of Jesus because native churches have grown up in many quarters. Those who have laboured under such misapprehensions as these, will assuredly be disillusionized by the perusal of Miss Wilson-Carmichael's remarkable volume.

The author is widely known as the adopted daughter of Mr. Robert Wilson, the much-respected chairman of the Keswick Convention. After labouring for a time in Japan, she went to Tinnevelly, where for several years she has been on the staff of the Church of England Zenana Society, and has worked in association with Rev. T. Walker, the highly-esteemed C.M.S. missionary. Her book is not a narrative, but a panorama; and its pages are delineations of life, vivid sketches of "things as they are." This is what Mr. Eugene Stock says of them in his commendatory preface:—

> I do not think the realities of Hindu life have ever been portrayed with greater vividness than in this book, and I know that the authoress' accuracy can be fully relied upon. The picture is drawn without prejudice, with all sympathy, with full recognition of what is good, and yet with an unswerving determination to tell the truth and let the facts be known—that is, so far as she dares to tell them. What she says is the truth, and nothing but the truth; but it is not the whole truth—that she could not tell. If she wrote it, it could not be printed. If it were printed, it could not be read. But if we read between the lines, we do just catch glimpses of what she calls "the Actual."

For the most part the book deals with Hindu life as blighted by the accursed Caste system. The depravity of men and women, not only sanctioned but cultivated in the name of religion; the sorrows and sufferings of girlhood, particularly through the child marriage custom—these form the terrible text of many sad but informing pages. The author has also something to say about the native Christians. From beginning to end she writes with a purpose; she not only wishes to reveal the "Actual" of Hinduism and Caste, but also to excite followers of Christ to prayer and self-denial for the evangelization of India. She asks those who are staying at home to consider whether God is calling them to witness for Him in lands where His glory is being given to another.

To read this book is a solemnizing exercise. The pages are loaded with facts, many of which will occasion surprise. In India there is "much land to be possessed," and this truth is driven home with awful force. The pictures, thirty-nine in number, and highly finished, are part of the message of the book; and that message is one for which we bespeak earnest prayer that by God's grace "the things of Christ" may soon reign throughout dark and needy India.

Questions Answered.

By Rev. A. T. PIERSON, D.D.

Arising out of his lectures at Exeter Hall, a large number of questions have been put to Dr. Pierson by interested listeners. The following answers will, no doubt, be a help to those who attended the lectures, as well as to many of our readers who had not that privilege. We hope to continue these replies to questions in subsequent issues, and confidently believe that they will be used of God to strengthen the faith of faltering ones, as well as furnish material for workers in their many-sided endeavours to win souls for Christ.—Ed.

SOME ten or twelve questions have to do with the supposed age of the earth, the length of the creative days, and the reconciliation between the teachings of science, particularly geology, and the Biblical

RECORD OF CREATION.

To all of these, a few suggestions must suffice.

The account in Genesis does not determine the Age of our planet. There may be any interval of time between Genesis i. 1 and 2. The first verse gives us the origin of the earth and heavens, but tells nothing about when "the Beginning" was; so also there may be an interval between the second and third verses. There is no time element introduced until the fifth verse: "the evening and the morning were the first day."

Even then the word "day" means simply a period of time bounded by darkness and light. The same word is used in Gen. ii. 4 of the whole creative week, and it cannot therefore be contended that the Hebrew word (yom) necessarily implies a day of twenty-four hours.

Many notable Christian geologists, who fully accepted the Divine record, have suggested a reverent theory, that Moses had a prophetic backward vision, as Isaiah and others had a forward vision; and that Moses saw, as in a panorama, six creative scenes. Out of darkness or obscurity in each case there comes a development of light, order, and beauty. These scenes may have each occupied a day; but he describes what he saw, and these backward visions constitute a parable of creation, to be interpreted afterward by the discoveries of science through the ages of history. This construction of Genesis avoids many perplexities.

Several other questions have to do with the Bible as the Word of God, and with the NATURE OF INSPIRATION.

The term, "verbal inspiration," is very obnoxious, but mostly to those who misunderstand it. As we use it, it means only that the inspiring Spirit guided, guarded, governed the language in which God's thought was conveyed to us by holy men, who not only thought but "spake, being borne along by the Holy Ghost." No intelligent disciple holds that every word of the Bible is in the same sense inspired. When Satan says, "Ye shall not surely die"; when Job and his friends discuss the problem of evil; when Joseph's Egyptian policy is outlined; when the man blind from birth argues with the Pharisees; when, in fine, the Bible embodies a narrative of human events or a record of human utterances in which God is not represented as either acting or speaking through man, all that inspiration covers is the essential accuracy of the narrative. But when God directs a course which is pursued, or guides an utterance, the sanction of His authority is given, and the lowest degree of inspiration must secure Divine infallibility.

Any theory of inspiration may be held which does not impair the authority of the Bible as the Book of God. As in Belshazzar's startling vision, the hand may be the hand of a man, and the writing still be the writing of God. How God used man to convey His own message accurately, and yet allowed full play for the peculiarities of the individual modes of thought and feeling, and even styles of expression, it is not necessary for us to know; suffice it to say that He did. But any theory of inspiration that puts the Bible on a level with other books, even the best, and makes it to be inspired only as all good literature is, robs it of all supreme authority, and leaves us with no final court of arbitration in the conflict of human opinions and the fallible utterances of human reason and conscience.

One correspondent asks if we can assign any sufficient

REASONS FOR OBSCURITY IN PROPHECY.

Why should prediction of future events ever be couched in enigmatic language? Compare John xi. 47-53, for answer and illustration. Caiaphas prophetically announced the death of one man for the sins of the people, and its necessity to prevent the whole nation perishing. "From that day, therefore, they took counsel that they might put Jesus to death." This forecast encouraged and prompted them to accomplish the prediction, so that they justified themselves in a diabolical scheme to destroy Jesus, because their own high priest had prophesied that one man's death was to be the means of saving the whole nation, and even gathering together the scattered remnants of God's people.

Had events been clearly announced, two results might follow. On the one hand, men would be impelled to combine to fulfil them by their own active effort, which would tend to discredit the fulfilment as of God; or, on the other hand, in a hostile spirit, to conspire to defeat the prediction, which would have the effect to array men against prophecy, and stimulate resistance to God. Therefore prophecy was often and generally expressed in enigmatic forms, so that it could be fully understood only when fulfilled. This avoided both attempts to accomplish and to frustrate, and made the fulfilment clearly superhuman and supernatural—a historic marvel.

In answer to other questions, we desire to give expression to some

GREAT PRINCIPLES OF BIBLE STUDY.

The written Word and living Word are inseparably bound up together. To disturb the foundations of faith in the written Word is, just so far, to imperil the basis of faith in the living Word. Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Hence it is idle to affirm that the Church needs not to be alarmed if the Holy Scriptures seem in peril, since whatever comes we have still left to us Christ! It may be true in a measure that, after there is an experimental, heart-knowledge of Christ as a Saviour, one's views of the inspired Scriptures might totally change and yet the heart hold fast to Jesus as Saviour. But there are two great facts to be borne in mind: (1) Our own preparation for faith in Christ was through confidence in the Biblical narrative; and (2) our hope of bringing others to know Him depends on their acceptance of the Word of God. The written Word introduces the believer to the living Word. Historically it has always been true that, in direct proportion to the reverence in which the Bible has been held, has been the success of the pulpit in leading sinners to Christ. Let the confidence of men in the Bible be destroyed or impaired, and, correspondingly, faith in Jesus as the Christ and Son of God decays or declines.

The Churches and the People.

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

THE returns of the religious census for London have confirmed the anxieties that had previously found expression on the platform and in the Press as to the comparatively small numbers attending public worship.

They have provoked a good deal of discussion, but it is questionable whether even yet the subject has been approached in a really scientific spirit. Various writers have given their version of facts and their mode of explaining them, but they have for the most part been so dominated by their own eidola that it is at least open to doubt whether we have approached a true explanation of the phenomena; or indeed, have an accurate knowledge of the phenomena themselves. A very little reflection will suffice to show that these facts must have a very different interpretation, as we regard them in their own simplicity, or compare them with similar figures of former times. It has been quietly assumed that they indicate a declining interest in public worship; and, by a still more hasty inference, that this means a loss of faith in God and in the Gospel.

As a matter of fact, they do not touch either of these points. They do prove—and that is quite enough for any earnest Christian who desires to use them for some practical end—that all our churches combined have but a very slight hold upon the population of the Metropolis and our great cities—possibly on that of the country as a whole. We talk of Christian England, but so far as this outward and visible sign of allegiance to Christ—the mere act of attendance at public worship—it is absolutely wanting in the case of the vast majority.

A MODERATE VIEW.

It is hardly necessary, however interesting, that we should analyze the causes of this, and try to apportion the exact amount of blame due, to the churches on the one hand and the people outside on the other, for a state of things which is certainly to be deplored. A very heavy indictment has been presented against the churches, and some of its counts have been sustained by evidence which is, to say the least, plausible. But it must not be forgotten that the charges against them are based mainly upon their own conceptions of duty.

They have given the world a lofty ideal of character, and they have not lived up to it themselves. It is inevitable that, under the conditions, there should be pretenders and Pharisees—men who profess to be what they are not; others who make a gain of godliness; and others, again, who spoil all that might be noble and beautiful in their character by self-righteous pride. Even those who have reached the highest point in Christian attainment are not perfect; it may be better for the world that they should be keeping before them this high conception of virtue, and striving to reach it, than that they should be absolutely without these Christian aims, or without the self-reproach which attends their failure to reach them. The world is all the better for having this ideal kept continually before it. In truth, its representatives tacitly confess this when they complain most loudly of the failure of the Church to be true to its own leading. Other men may be selfish, careless spectators of injustice and wrong-doing, mere ciphers in the work of social reform; but for the churches to fail in any of these respects—to be silent when there is a demand for a bold condemnation of the wrongs, heartless where there are urgent appeals for sympathy and help, selfish when there is some special need for generous self-sacrifice—is to be guilty of an offence to be condemned alike of God and man. What better witness could we have as to the impression which Christianity has produced? Alas! numbers who profess it are not faithful to it. The ideal is there, and its nobility is confessed by those who reproach individual believers because they are vain or self-seeking, or worshippers of wealth and pleasure even as other men.

One plea may at least be urged for the churches of to-day. Whatever other fault they have, they are

NOT SLOTHFUL OR APATHETIC.

Instead of resenting the accusations so freely made against them, they are eager rather to discover what faults there are in their own conduct which have given occasion for these reproaches, and to remedy any defects which may thus be discovered. Perhaps they may seem more ready to confess the faults of their fathers, and to pride themselves on being ready to pursue a more excellent way. But even this is due to an honest belief in the progressive tendency of the age, and a desire that the Church should keep abreast of them.

THE DEMANDS OF THE AGE.

Never, I venture to say, was there a more ardent desire to meet the reasonable—and, I think it might be said, even the unreasonable—demands of the age. Old methods are reviewed, with a prejudice in favour of change rather than against it, and one is startled continually by the audacity of some of the proposals made by those from whom they are least expected. Many of them may be extremely unwise, but the eagerness to accept them is an indication that a slavish deference to the past will not be allowed to hinder the adaptation of new machinery to the urgent demands of the present. A spirit like this has peculiar dangers of its own. But the dangers are all the more to be dreaded because they are peculiarly subtle, insidious, and destructive. But the very presence of such a spirit is sufficient to vindicate the churches from a charge of indifference, or of insensibility, to

THE SPECIAL REQUIREMENTS OF THE HOUR.

But still the fact remains. The people are not within the pale of the Christian faith, if attendance at public worship is regarded as the test. On the whole, it is a sufficiently fair one by which to estimate the number of nominal adherents. There may be sincere Christians who do not believe in the obligation of public worship, but they are very few. The danger lies rather on the other side. There are attendants on worship who are not in the faith. This is really by far the gravest point of the situation. If the only evidence a man gives of his love to Christ and His Gospel is an attendance at public worship—if he is (to use Mr. Gladstone's expressive phrase) simply a "oncer"—his religion is of little value, except that it brings him within the range of gracious influences, which in some happy hour may reach his conscience and subdue his heart. The true servant of Christ must desire and seek far more than this.

It is probably natural that the churches should endeavour to meet the sneers of their critics at their supposed failure by pointing to the crowds they do actually gather. But in reality this is no answer at all. The question is the old one which the Lord addressed to the crowd who flocked to Jordan in the wake of John the Baptist—"What went ye out for to see?" If they understood that John was more than a prophet, and therefore followed him, it was a sign for good—a sign that the Kingdom of God was coming. But if it was mere curiosity, it meant little or nothing. It is just there that the danger of to-day lies. The service of the sanctuary has a very definite meaning. So far as it is an offering up of prayer and praise to God, there is no mistake. But preaching, too, has its own definite character and purpose. It is not a mere function, nor is it a piece of intellectual athletics in which the preacher gives proof of his own skill to dazzle his hearers. It is an endeavour to help men in the spiritual life, to convert such as are at enmity with God, to strengthen those who are already given to God's service.

Everything outside this is permissible only in so far as it centres to the one grand aim of the ministry of the Gospel. The Christian preacher is emphatically an ambassador from God. He has a distinct message which he cannot delay and which he dare not conceal, and the one that is

TO RECONCILE MAN TO GOD.

There are subjects which may be regarded as subsidiary, as, for example, the utter failure of all other systems to bring man near to God, and here there may be room for a study of comparative religion. But he is not a professor of religious science, and his main business is not to instruct men in the relative claims of different creeds and systems. Still less is he a leader of social reform, though it is his business to show how the new spiritual force which the Gospel introduces into men's hearts makes them the most intelligent and diligent workers in the world's broadest fields of duty and danger. The Church is not another name for the State; but if its ministers serve it wisely and well, it will raise up men who will purify and ennoble all the actions of Government and State.

AN APPOSITE EXHORTATION.

But here, as everywhere, its one motive power is love to Christ. The great work of the sanctuary is to bring men under the power of that love. To the churches of to-day, then, may well be addressed the exhortation given by the Apostle to the Church at Corinth: "Examine yourselves, whether you be in the faith." To-day the care of a church too often is whether it be in conformity with the true Catholic tradition, or whether it has the most attractive ritual. The one care of the Apostle for it was that it should be in the faith, and that faith was a simple trust in the power of the living Christ. It exists for the one purpose of developing this power, and its real and lasting success will be dependent on its fidelity to this idea. This question is something infinitely more than theological orthodoxy or ritual correctitude. Is there not a danger to-day lest in the eager zeal about too many things—here about a full understanding of the spirit of the age, there again about the full assertion of political right or the emphasis of our protest against some prevailing wrong, even the Church itself should and so be unfaithful to the trust that has been committed to it.

Let me not depreciate the importance of any service done in the cause of humanity for Christ's sake. But the one business of the Church as a Church is to bring men under the power of Christ Himself. To fail in that is to fail in everything. However important other kinds of service may be, this loyalty to Christ is paramount. What I sometimes fear is lest this essential point be forgotten. What our churches really need most is a more realizing faith in the power of the Gospel itself.

Some Difficulties of Belief.

DR. PIERSON AT EXETER HALL.

THE unique interest with which the series of lectures by Dr. Pierson has been followed was again demonstrated on Friday evening, when the closing discourse was given. Exeter Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity. Mr. Putterill announced that the Committee had invited Dr. Pierson to give another course of lectures in the autumn, and the proposal was receiving his prayerful consideration.

Dr. Pierson had decided to devote the evening to dealing with points arising out of the lectures not thoroughly comprehended by his hearers. As a result some 150 written questions had reached the lecturer. In his opening words he expressed the desire to deal with these in the light of 2 Pet. iii. 16, "In which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures, unto their own destruction." Here is a concession—many things in the Word of God are hard to be understood; also an admonition that if you are not learned in things of God, firmly established in Christ, you will be tempted to wrest these Scriptures out of their normal meaning to your own destruction.

Dr. Pierson's consideration of one of the details of the Creation, about which one of his hearers had been exercised, as well as some other points, will be found on page 11.

Some had asked, How could he justify a book that suggested there being in hell infants not a span long? To this Dr. Pierson replied that such a view of Scripture is not taken even by the most extreme Calvinist, quoting Toplady's reply to Wesley. Another question asked was, How can we believe in the Resurrection? The fact that Easter is celebrated the wide world over is one of the greatest proofs of the Resurrection. Some suggested that it was a mere apparition or a vision; but surely no apparition was ever known to eat, and drink, or speak such words of heavenly wisdom as fell from the lips of the risen Lord. In reply to the query as to whether sin ever entered heaven, Dr. Pierson remarked that the Bible does not say it did. The only definite intelligence is found in Jude vi.: "The angels kept not their first estate;" but it might be possible that the earth was their abode, and they left this habitation.

Another subject upon which light was sought was, Why did God permit sin? There is no strength gained except through conflict. Every time you overcome sin, its strength goes into you; and every time sin overcomes you, your strength goes into the sin.

With regard to recognition in heaven, Dr. Pierson said the number of letters received inquiring on this point was pathetic. Much light in this direction would come from a prayerful study of Luke ix. and xvi. On the subject of Hell, the speaker maintained that it is an injustice to God to regard hell as a mere creation of the arbitrary will of God. The Almighty is honoured when we conceive of hell as the outcome of the order of things. Every man has his own place in this world and in the next; and every man finds his own place, if not always in this world, certainly in the next.

As a final word, Dr. Pierson ventured to give one or two maxims for the guidance of those who are desirous of solving some of the problems of Scripture. (1) Be sure there is a difficulty. Many so-called difficulties are the result of misconceptions. (2) Moral evidence must be sustained by moral proofs. (3) If there is not candour in the heart, its absence will make a difficulty. (4) When you face a real difficulty, be sure and get right with God first; then find out if there is not a defect in your own vision. (5) Do not in any case allow what you do not know to disturb what you do know. (6) Above all, "keep thyself pure," for indulged sin blinds the eye of the judgment and intellect, and will lead men to wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction.

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, April 26. Job xx.

IT seems as though Zophar, and perhaps the other friends, had become incensed by Job's noble outburst, as he appealed to the Divine Goël, who should one day stand upon the earth for his vindication. There had been a heavenly expression on the sufferer's face or a tone of triumph in his voice that his friends thought were misplaced. What right had he to such consolations as those? Was it not clear that his sin had robbed him of his right to claim the Divine consolation to which his hope seemed likely to anchor?

The remainder of his address presents once more "the portion of a wicked man from God" (29). This description is being verified in myriads of cases around us. The daily papers tell us of men who take their lives, who drown their thoughts with strong drink, who suffer agonies of remorse and fear—what is this but the modern counterpart of Zophar's words? And if earth is so terrible, even when the realities of things are partially veiled, what will not the future be? Ah, there is deeper meaning than we have ever explored in our Lord's words about weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth. Let us by all means save men, "pulling them out of the fire."

MONDAY, April 27. Job xxi.

It has been suggested that, in the course of this address by Job, three verses represent the interruptions of his friends, who had now become vehement in thought and speech. In v. 16, Eliphaz interrupts; in v. 19, Bildad; in v. 22, Zophar; whilst an attempt at further interruption taking place, between vv. 26 and 27, leads to the answer, "Behold, I know your thoughts."

Zophar had argued, in the previous chapter, that the wicked receive in this world the penalty which is due to their sins, and that therefore all special suffering indicates special sinnership; but, on the other hand, Job shows that it is not true that the wicked invariably suffer. You cannot, he says, affirm anything as to the character of a man by remarking his earthly lot. The wicked live and become mighty in power (7); their children grow up before their eyes (8); their houses are safe from fear (9); they spend their days in prosperity, and die without protracted sufferings (13); so that they have more than heart can wish. (Notice that vv. 17, 18 are a series of questions. See R.V.). Even if it is said that their children suffer—what is that to the wicked, if their eyes do not see their own destruction (20, 21)?

And so the patriarch argues his way to the conclusion, that we cannot understand the dealings of God's Providence. Some die in their full strength, others in the bitterness of their soul; they lie down in the same ground, and the worm alike consumes them (23-26).

Job guessed what was passing in their thoughts. It was quite true that he, who had had a royal tent, had now no seat but a dunghill; but that proved nothing against him. The wicked had their portion in this life, and afterwards were led forth to judgment; but he who had received his evil things would hereafter shine forth as the sun: Dives to torment, Lazarus to Abraham's bosom. Do not say, dear sufferer, that your terrible pain is the proof of God's anger, or of your sin. He prunes you that you may bring forth more fruit. He gives you an opportunity of glorifying Him in the fires.

TUESDAY, April 28. Job xxii.

In this, his last speech, Eliphaz shows that the distance between God and man is so great that it is absurd to think that He can have either gain or loss in the experiences which His Providence apportions to men. The final cause, therefore, of the goods or ills, which He metes out to them must lie in men themselves. Job's calamities, therefore, according to this reasoning, must arise from his guilt (1-4).

Hitherto he had only insinuated Job's guilt, now he deliberately charges him with specific crimes (5-9). He must have robbed his brethren, stripped the poor, withholden water and bread, been deaf to the cry of the oppressed; therefore snares and fear had fallen to his lot (10, 11). What if Job had dexterously concealed his evil ways, yet God was able to tear away the disguising veil, and see him as he was. Had He not dealt so with the antediluvian sinners, who were swept away as in a moment (12-20)?

Then in a most beautiful paragraph, Eliphaz, who was really eager to help his stricken friend, begins to plead with him to turn again to God. If only he would acquaint himself with Him, peace and good would come to him. If he would but return to El-Shaddai, and count his treasures as no more valuable than the dust, God Himself would build up the breaches of his life, and become his treasure. He would be able to look Him in the face, to pray with the certainty of being heard, and to be the means of lifting up and restoring downcast and troubled souls. Let us claim each of these clauses for ourselves, for if they were true in those far-away days, how much more for us, who are "made nigh by the blood of Jesus!"

WEDNESDAY, April 29. Job xxiii.

From his friends Job again turns to God. If only he could find Him, with what confidence would he argue his case in His presence. God, at least, would give heed to him (1-7). But, in the thick darkness, he cannot discover Him. If any who read these words have come also to this, let them take heart. Other feet have preceded theirs along this darksome track.

But though you cannot perceive God, He knows the way that you are taking. He knows what He is doing; He is achieving His perfect plan, and there can be no doubt as to the result—"Thou shalt come forth as gold" (10). Notice, throughout these storm-tossed utterances, how Job's outward and inward natures are in conflict. Sometimes the anguish of his physical sufferings seems to drown the voice of his soul; then again, the soul reasserts itself, and, in the energy of an almighty faith, rests on the faithfulness of God. The outward man perishes, but the inward is renewed day by day.

What precious consolation hides in these words! That which can bear the fire must pass through it. Gold can bear the sevenfold heat, and is therefore exposed to it (Ezek. xxii. 21). Your character can bear the test to which it is being subjected; dare to trust your Father. "Your Father knoweth:" and there is a limit and an end. Only be sure that your foot holds fast to His steps, and that you keep His way. Remember that it is He who performs what is appointed for you. He would not entrust such delicate work, even to an angel's hands; and there are many such things with Him. Many are the blessed purposes of His heart, and not one good thing shall fail. Only let your heart be soft and receptive (16).

THURSDAY, April 30. Job xxiv.

The point of this chapter is in the first verse, "Why is it, that they who know the Almighty, see not His days?" Evidently it is not part of God's plan to deal out the full measure of rewards and punishments in the little day of human life; but the days of the eternal years are at hand, when all earth's crookednesses will be made straight.

Job describes next the steps of what has been called "social evolution," but certainly they are steps downward. The city where man ends (12), and which is filled with human groans, is a far different place from the garden which the Lord God planted, and from the beautiful patriarchal life, of which Job was a product. The steps are clearly indicated, such as the encroachment of the rich on the poor, the removal of boundaries, the formation of a class sinking to poverty, the crowding of population into cities, with all the violence of city-crime, and finally the formation of a distinct criminal-class, whose whole existence is a warfare against the light, and their morning as thick darkness (1-17).

In vv. 18-21, Job quotes the opinions of his friends ironically: "You say that the sinner passes swiftly away as a ship floating with the stream." In vv. 22-25, he states the results of his own observation—that sinners die in ease and comfort, that there are no bands in their death, and their strength is firm.

We are forcibly reminded of the good Asaph. He was as puzzled as Job, till one day, when he was standing amid the throng of the Temple, he was made to understand things hidden from the intellect of the wise and prudent, and turned to God with full purpose of heart, saying, "Whom have I in Heaven but Thee?" (Psa. lxxiii.) When you are puzzled about God's ways, turn to God Himself!

FRIDAY, May 1. Job xxv.

Bildad again dwells on the immense distance which subsists between God and man. In the heavenly palace reverence and power are the atmosphere of His presence. Throughout the vast spaces of the universe, He makes peace (Col. i. 20). Myriads of angels wait to do His bidding, and no smallest spark of moral and intelligent existence escapes His ken. The worlds which have never been tainted with human sin are not clean in His holy eyes. How, then, can man be just with God?

That is the question of the ages. It exercised Luther in his cell; it has exercised the teeming myriads of China, India, and the East. It is the one question that the Apostle sets himself to answer in the Epistle to the Romans. There is no answer save that which is furnished in the cross and empty grave of the Redeemer. He was delivered to the death of the cross for our offences, and was raised again for our justification. Only in so far as we stand in Christ, can we be reckoned just or clean.

Let us look again at that wondrous plan! You and I, the children of a fallen, sinning race, not able to answer at the bar of a broken law for one of a thousand of our sins, may yet stand before those holy eyes, with unhesitating assurance. In the person of Jesus, the Eternal God has borne our sins, and discharged their penalty. He was made sin for us, and we are made the righteousness of God in Him. God's righteous Servant has justified the many, and us among them, so that now there is no condemnation; and we shall live before Him in unbroken peace, when moon and stars are no more.

SATURDAY, May 2. Job xxvi.

It is supposed by some that, in the original form of the poem, the first four verses of this chapter should be the opening verses of the next chapter. So that 5-14 of this chapter would be the continuation of Bildad's address. And the more one considers the suggestion, the more one is impressed in its favour, for in it the speaker carries forward those wonderful conceptions of the Divine nature and power, compared with which man had seemed so unworthy.

The souls of the dead tremble before Him (5); the place of lost souls is revealed (6); the earth is maintained in its orbit, hanging like a suspended ball over nothing by His power (7); the clouds veil His presence-chamber (9); the pillared mountains tremble before His earthquake (11); the proud waves of the deep are arrested by His hand (12); the stars obey His voice (13); and yet, compared with His Divine might, all is only as a whisper to a thunder-peal.

The universe is full of wonder. Every year adds some startling discovery of its marvellous secrets. Perhaps the most amazing has been the discovery and utilization of that ocean of ether, in which all created things lie; but how much greater is the Creator than the created, the Maker than the works of His hands! They shall perish; but He will remain. They shall wax old as a garment, and shall be changed; but He will be the same for ever, full of abounding fertility of pattern and omnipotence of achievement. "This God is our God for ever and ever. He will be our Guide even unto death."

Other Lands.

From Constantine.

THE hotel omnibus laden with luggage crosses El-Kantara Bridge. Eager faces are pressing against its glass panes, and a fair passenger exclaims, "Oh, how beautiful!" We pass a magnificent gorge, opening between two high rocks upon a view of the plain below.

This, then, is Constantine, the ancient Cirta, the city where a Carthaginian princess drank the cup of poison in order to escape the infamy of adorning the Romish conqueror's triumphal chariot. The city, built on a plateau of rocks which rises perpendicularly nearly 1,000 feet from the river Roummel, forms a natural fortress which under Turkish rule could only be approached from one side. The French have cut beautiful roads through and around the rocks, and a few years ago a patriotic citizen constructed a path along the cliffs of the gorge, which makes the beauty of its natural arches and fantastic foundations accessible to all tourists.

The same enterprising man had erected hot-water baths, which were to be opened for use on a Sunday. On the day previous to the contemplated inauguration, however, a violent rain came, and the bed of the Roummel rose in a few hours to an unusual height, sweeping away the whole construction. A new attempt is being made in the same direction.

Constantine, such as it looks, proud, defiant, strong, and impregnable, symbolises the strong hold of Mohammedanism in this land. Yet Constantine, notwithstanding its hard resistance, was conquered finally. Why should not Mohammedanism be also overcome? "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." Among a population of 50,000 the little mission band comprises eight Christian workers: Mr. and Mrs. James, Mr. L. Lochhead, Miss E. K. Lochhead, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Smith, Mlle. Guillermet, and Mons. and Mme. Bordet, the two latter working exclusively among the French and Italians.

Here, as in other cities of North Africa, God's messengers have to be prepared to meet and confront objections from Jews and Mohammedans on the one hand, and the veiled hostility of the Romish Church on the other. Lately there has been a manifest spirit of inquiry among the Roman Catholics, so much so that a French meeting has been arranged by the missionaries on Sunday afternoons, uniting the converts and inquirers in a Bible reading, which began with the Acts of the Apostles. Among those present the day we attended were two promising young Jews for whose spiritual growth and courage united prayer is being offered.

A Roman Catholic business man, at present much exercised about the truth, and seemingly anxious to find it, brought the other day a French book to Mr. Lochhead, entitled, "Protestantism Confounded by the Simple Argument of Authority," by R. P. Marie Antoine. The book, published in 1865, is now out of print, but still continues to alienate people from the Word of God. In it the writer says:—"The Bibles which are so profusely spread by the Protestants are not the Bibles of God; but one ought to call them Bibles of the demon, because they are the most subtle poison he can use for destroying souls. Everybody knows that; but one will never know it enough, and we can never repudiate with enough indignation these miserable emissaries of error who slip in everywhere with this poison."

On another page the writer (who as a priest is bound never to repeat what he hears in the confessional!), tells with much gusto the story of a man who "confessed" how he burned a Bible in the presence of the colporteur who gave it to him, and then threatened the latter with a thrashing.

Again, he refers to two accusations on the part of Protestants, which through their very contradiction, he says, establish the innocence of the Church of Rome—(1) The Romish Church is always changing; (2) She never changes.

Both statements are true, for the Church of Rome never changes as to her aims, her intolerance and her enmity for the Word of God; but she changes her methods as it suits her purpose; and how much she has changed of late years is obvious from the fact that she does not dare exhibit her animosity against the Bible in the same venomous way now as she used to in years gone by. While hostile to progress, she nevertheless is always doing something new. At present the canonization of Joan of Arc is under contemplation at the Vatican. Some papers say that it will be a great loss to the prestige of the French heroïne. Now her memory is sacred to all. If she becomes a calendar-saint, she will lose the homage of the larger part of the French nation.

We closed our very pleasant visit to Constantine with a prayer-meeting at Mr. Lochhead's house, which is situated in the Arab quarter, and forms the centre of the work—most of the meetings, for Arabs, French, Italians, and Jews, taking place there. From a little mosque near by we heard the beating of the tom-tom accompanying the weird sounds of Arab singing. The members of a brotherhood, professing to be invulnerable and able to handle poisonous snakes, scorpions, &c., come together at certain times. Their worship consists in singing themselves into a frenzy, in uncovering the upper parts of their bodies and cutting themselves with knives. That evening something was wrong with them. The performance did not continue, and they separated sooner than usual. We believe that, while we were praying for the poor deluded souls, a breath of the Holy Ghost went forth from the quiet mission-home to silence their voices.

Cape Town Y.W.C.A.

AFTER some years of praying, working, and waiting, the new building for the Young Women's Christian Association of Cape Town will shortly become an accomplished fact. The sum of £6,132 has been given or promised, and £8,000 obtained on loan, enabling the trustees to sign contract with builders. Of the above sum, about £400 has been received from England, the rest has been raised locally from a community which has no large leisured class in residence.

Situate at the main entrance and first port of call for South Africa, we feel our friends in England hardly realise the claim the Cape Town Association has upon them, in view of the large number of young women coming from the home country. Good provision will be made in the new building to accommodate new arrivals and passers through, numbers of whom come direct from ship to the institution.

The importance of this section of the work has been painfully impressed upon the executive since the pulling down of the old building and during the erection of the new premises. The dangers attendant upon young women having to seek lodgings in a strange and cosmopolitan city, such as Cape Town, are not laid to heart, except by those whose vocation brings them into the knowledge of existing conditions. Properly to equip and furnish our new building, a further sum of from £1,200 to £1,400 is required.

We have but mentioned one phase of the work as bearing the most direct claim upon the home land; but under the active and sympathetic guidance of our honorary secretaries, Miss Jessie Welch and Miss Gertrude Day, every section of Y.W.C.A. usefulness is faithfully carried out. Miss Welch is just now in England in the interests of the Association, and can be communicated with at the headquarters, Y.W.C.A., Hanover Square, W.

The Balaghat Mission.

I AM thankful to God to be able to report myself once more in India, in good health, and with my heart more than ever full of desire to spend and be spent for the glory of God, and the salvation of the Gonds and others in this remote part of our Indian Empire.

A brief inspection of the different stations and departments of the work has shown me that the hand of God is upon us for good, and there are evidences of blessing both present and to come. There is a dearth of inquirers from among the heathen outside, but our Famine Orphanage is beginning to turn out truly converted young men and women; and these, with the old converts and some others, are slowly but surely bringing an influence to bear upon the heathen friends among whom they take up their abode. This cannot fail, sooner or later, to bring a rich harvest of souls to the Master.

Preliminary arrangements have been made for the opening of the new mission station at Balaghat Town, about the end of May. A recent visit there confirmed the conviction that no time should be lost in making this advance, and also gave promise of blessing when the work should be begun.

Another satisfactory development is the sending out of

to preach the Gospel. Hitherto these workers have always accompanied European missionaries, but recently we have despatched two native brethren alone on an itinerancy, with every hope that they will justify our confidence. These friends started off with much joy and enthusiasm, and full of expectation that God would richly bless them.

We are building our first permanent house of worship at the oldest mission station. We have gathered a congregation and seen a number of converts in the old mud building, which has now collapsed. We feel that the work needs, and is worthy of something more substantial; we are therefore putting up a brick structure at the cost of about £35.

At Easter three or four couples of our grown-up orphans, lads and girls, are to be married and started in life. The lads have had three years' training on the mission farm, and the girls have been thoroughly instructed in domestic duties, and such outdoor work as is usually done by women in this country. Each young farmer receives a pair of plough bullocks, a cow, food and seed grain, and a few simple implements; his bride is set up with a supply of clothing, and necessary household brass utensils. The whole cost of such equipment for both bride and bridegroom is something less than £10.

May I ask the continued sympathy and prayers of the friends of the Mission, that all our needs, material and spiritual, may be supplied? The hon. secretary of the Mission is Miss Field, 10, Lancaster Road, West Norwood, London.

Young Men and South Africa.

IN view of the large numbers of young men who are now proceeding to South Africa, Rev. J. R. F. Pledger (North End Congregational Church, Port Elizabeth) writes to urge the importance of ministers of the district where they may be going being advised. Amid a cosmopolitan population such as most large African towns have, he says there are many temptations placed before the new arrival, temptations which friends in the "homeland" do not realize; and it often happens that before the person is known by the minister or Christian worker, he has formed associations from which it is extremely hard to break away.

The first few weeks may determine to a large extent what the young man is going to become, and it is absolutely necessary that from the first new arrivals should have a small circle of Christian friends to whom they can look for advice and Christian sympathy.

Revival in Asia Minor.

THE city of Aintab has witnessed a remarkable religious movement. Four or five months ago Rev. M. Papazian, of the Second Church, in consultation with the church officers, and as the result of observations in regard to the low spiritual standard of the church members, arrived at a conviction of the great need for a general church reform. The Week of Prayer in January marked a forward step in the effort, by bringing hearts and minds into a receptive attitude. Prayer-meetings were held each morning in the College, and all the three churches were open at night for the same purpose. The working of the Spirit was clearly seen in the readiness of the students to take part in the meetings.

The spirit of growth and development was witnessed in these daily prayer-meetings. They were no longer the observance of some long-established custom. They breathed life and power. On Friday evening some of the students were moved to attend the Second Church. They remained to the after-meeting. Some of them were deeply moved, feeling that it was not without a purpose that they were led there. They gave testimonies, and some prayed.

On Saturday morning, notice was given that there was to be a prayer meeting that afternoon in the College reading-room. That gathering saw the first shower, yet it was not the flood. There was a converted gambler from the city in the meeting, whose testimony made a deep impression. Prayer, testimony, and exhortation continued from one o'clock till half-past five.

Prayer-meetings became daily food, nay daily life. The new life made itself felt in the Second Church, where it found a congenial environment. The ground was well prepared, and some were converted almost before they were aware of it. Men who had ridiculed religion, who were hardened in years of sin and self-seeking; men who had come to church regularly and contributed to its current expenses from human motives, respectable men, church members, officials, men of high social standing, business men wrapped up in the one absorbing passion of amassing money—all stood up before the crowd, confessed their sins, and asked for mercy and pardon, promising to make, as far as was in their power, full restitution.

GAMBLERS AND DRUNKARDS CONVERTED.

Nor has the movement been confined to wealthy or respectable people. It is general along the whole line. Gamblers, drunkards, actors (the lowest type of people in this country) have come to church, at first from curiosity to see what was going on, not infrequently to ridicule and to cause riot; but before they left, some have been converted men, and have even become eloquent preachers to their fellows.

One wretched drunkard, who had never heard the name of Jesus, and was utterly given to all forms of sin—gambling, lying, stealing, drinking—himself a saloon keeper, born in a saloon, brought up in a saloon—stood up and told how that mighty power had taken hold of him, too. He had come a few days before to church for the first time in his life, with the intention of ridiculing, perhaps stealing. He and a companion returned next day, and were robbed of their tobacco bag. They retaliated by stealing a pair of shoes, each taking one. At supper time this man had lost all appetite, and his struggles to quiet his aroused conscience were of no avail. He knew his companion would never be willing to part with his share of the booty; but he took his own and hurried to the church just in time to find the injured party.

House-visiting has been from the first one of the main sources of power. In fact, it is difficult to tell how much would have been accomplished without this personal work. There is a band of earnest Christians who think it no sacrifice to give up their ease, comfort, amusement, and often their sleep, to spend their time in God's work, visiting families, and talking with groups of unconverted people.

In the College it is difficult to point out a single man who is absolutely unaffected by these wonderful manifestations of God's Spirit. Some of the leaders are busily engaged in personal work among individuals and families in the city.

The movement has not been without effect on the Mohammedan population. At first it caused only mocking and criticism, but as it grew in intensity, especially as cases of restitution multiplied, even they began to inquire what this all meant. A Protestant recently converted went to his employer, and opening a document said: "Sir, here is a false figure which gives me so many Turkish pounds, as unjust gain. I want to correct this." The bewildered Moslem looked in his face and cried: "Then I must go and correct my false accounts with others!" Several have been attending the meetings, and already there is a growing interest among them. They even held an inquiry-meeting, and asked for a Christian worker to instruct them in the truth. Not infrequently one is found among them not very far from the kingdom of God.

GOVERNMENT INTERFERENCE.

After two weeks the goverment limited the meetings to the usual evenings — Sunday, Tuesday, and Friday—and the usual length. With three evenings in the week left free, the neighbourhood work was increased, meetings being held in several houses at once. Similar work had previously been begun, and has been carried on by the Gregorians.

A marked and significant feature has been the rising above distinctions between Gregorians and Protestants. Many have come to understand that the question is one, not of community, but of spiritual life. Gregorian priests and leaders, as a result of two extended conferences with Protestant representatives, came to the conclusion that either these men were deluded, or else they had something of which they did know, and the known character of the men concerned compelled them to accept the latter. A number of Jews have expressed faith in Christ and a desire for baptism. The people of the city in general have been favourably impressed with the changed lives, and with the orderliness of the meetings. Those who have investigated have become convinced of the purely spiritual character of the movement.

An impulse has been given to outside evangelistic work. Delegations have gone to Kilis, Aleppo, Nezib, and Biredjik to tell of God's goodness and readiness to give a new life. There have been visitors from Oorfa, and letters have gone out to a still wider circle. Money, too, has been freely given for the travelling expenses of deputations, for a preacher at Farmouch, and for other home missionary work.

Throwing off the Roman Yoke.

PASTEUR J. P. DARDIER, director of the colportage work carried on in connection with the Evangelical Society of Geneva, writing from St. Etienne (Loire), speaks of the village of Malataverne (Haute Loire), the inhabitants of which seem to be on the point of freeing themselves of the yoke of Rome. A few weeks ago, a colporteur, who was travelling about the district, held a meeting there, at which about 150 were present. On another occasion, a Sunday, it is estimated that more than three hundred attended a meeting addressed by two colporteurs and another Christian (a reclaimed drunkard).

Continuing, M. Dardier writes: Yesterday we had two services, at the same times as the priest conducted the Roman Catholic service. The attendance was not so large, but we were struck by the attention and earnestness of the people. We were convinced, in talking to several men and women, that the Word of God is being read. The people, especially the women, seemed to be very intelligent and frank. A feature which encourages us greatly, because it is rare, is that they have, of their own accord, collected money wherewith to defray the expenses of those who visit them with the Gospel. This village is about thirty-five miles from St. Etienne, too far to permit of the good work being continued from that place. A good colporteur is wanted there, and the people would pay a part of his salary. I am hopeful that Christian sympathisers will provide the remainder. We pray for this!

The Bible Lands.

THE progress of Christian work in the Bible Lands must always have a fascinating interest for believers, and those who follow the operations of religious and educational agencies in those countries will assuredly be glad to know that the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society, with its ministry of succour and encouragement, continues its course with much usefulness.

At the annual meeting of the Society, held on Friday afternoon last, in the Parlour, Exeter Hall, Lord Kinnaird presided, and Rev. W. A. Essery, honorary secretary, gave a brief account of the year's labour, in which he showed that many churches and stations have received subsidies. The Evangelical cause in Greece continues to prosper, and despite political turmoil, missions in Macedonia and Bulgaria have gone forward. Christians in Asia Minor (the great field of the American Board) have rejoiced in the timely assistance given, and "a cry from Tarsus" has been responded to. A considerable sum has been devoted to the maintenance of "massacre orphans." Well-known causes in Syria and Palestine, in Egypt (most hopeful of all Bible lands), and Arabia, were touched upon by the speaker, who concluded with a reference to the coming Jubilee of the Society, and called for renewed effort in the conflict with Islam.

THE FIGHT WITH SUPERSTITION.

Rev. Dr. Xenophon Moschou (president of the Greek Evangelical Union, Smyrna) followed with some terse words regarding his organization, which had its origin in meetings held for Amenians, at which some Greeks were present. Although there are but five churches, many converts have been won. There has been but little spiritual work among the Greeks for centuries; true, the orthodox views of the Church are accepted, but the power of living faith is little known. Superstition holds sway even among the educated, and national pride resents the idea that a Greek may be a pupil instead of a teacher. Moreover, there is unrelenting persecution of those who undertake independent work, or become associated with it. For example, a youth who refused to bow before a picture was sent to an asylum as a lunatic, through the action of a high ecclesiastical authority. Despite opposition, however, the Union's influence is spreading.

The next speaker, Mrs. John Chapman, told with deep feeling the familiar story of the rise and progress of the British Syrian Mission. There are now fifty-four schools carried on by consecrated people, and valuable service is rendered to many societies by the training of workers. Mrs. Chapman referred to the glorious effects of teaching among the young, to the prosperity of the Y.W.C.A., and to the wonderful changes wrought among the Druses through preaching and Bible instruction.

Miss Procter, who followed, gave a telling account of her schools at Schwifat, where she now has, in all, 125 boarders and fifty day scholars. Russian efforts to draw the children away have proved unavailing, and the parents evince much interest in the schools.

THE FULFILMENT OF PROPHECY.

The concluding speaker was Rev. F. B. Meyer, who, recalling his visit to the East, testified to the effectiveness of Dr. Moschou's labours, and of the wonderful work of both American and British missionaries. Mr. Meyer spoke of the probable disintegration of the Turkish Empire as foreshadowing further fulfilment of prophecy, and preparing the way for the return of Israel to their own land. "Let us give back the Bible to the Bible lands, that over these Moslem-ridden countries there may shine forth the beautiful light of the Gospel."

"Public Morals."—Copies of this work, on a subject of peculiar social importance, edited by Mr. James Marchant (1s. net. Morgan & Scott) have been accepted by King Edward, and also by the Czar of Russia. From many quarters Mr. Marchant has received letters warmly recognizing his services in bringing so much energy and thought to the advocacy of a great cause.

S. Africa General Mission.

MAY I, through the medium of your paper, let the many Christian young men who are now coming to Durban, Natal, know that we would heartily welcome them to our meetings, and if on their arrival they would call upon us, we would do our best to get them work?

We have a very helpful fellowship meeting every Saturday evening at 7.30—a sort of rallying point, where we get to know each other, and from which a great volume of prayer goes up to the Throne of Grace.

Our open-air meeting opposite the Town Hall, on Sunday evenings at eight o'clock, is another rallying point, where we meet all sorts and conditions of men, many going to no place of worship. The absence of home restraint, and the breaking away from old ties is, alas, so often the cause of sad backsliding; and a hearty shake of the hand and a warm welcome, as well as a bright service, are a great help to strangers in a strange land.

I would mention that both joiners and bricklayers can find immediate and remunerative work. Surely there are some Christian men in England whose wages are small, and who find it hard to make ends meet—men who would be glad to find new fields, and during their spare time assist in the work of God.

There is a flourishing Y.W.C.A., situate in Aliwal Street, of which my wife is president. It has a high spiritual tone about it, and is a true home for Christian girls. A Nurses' Home in connection with it, is being opened. Nurses here earn about three guineas a week.

As regards our own Mission work, we have much for which to praise God. He has just given us a beautiful new Sailors' Rest, in answer to prayer, which is proving more than a success, and has already been the birthplace of precious souls. Work, too, among the heathen is looking up, and we hear at last of a work of conviction in the hearts of several after some years of hard work.

British Tongaland is opening up. We had the honour to be the first missionaries entering this country, and in a few weeks' time our first medical missionary, Dr. Hertslet, late of the Mildmay Hospital, will be going there with Mr. and Mrs. Gale.

At last our dear missionaries, after over three years' absence owing to the war, have returned to their stations in Swazieland, finding much to gladden as well as sadden. We are sending workers there next month.

We have just been able to re-open our hall in Johannesburg, the ministers in that town showing real and practical fellowship. From Pondo, Bomvana, and Tembuland we hear of "sounds of rain," and it seems as if God were about to work in all these districts. May He work mightily! Our well-known secretary, Mr. A. Mercer, 17, Homefield Road, Wimbledon, will be glad to give any further information.

We need the prayers of God's people very much, as we are passing through a great financial strain—surely a privilege, to enable us to prove the faithfulness of our God. We are much encouraged in the work among our troops at Pietermaritzburg under Mr. Fleming's care, as well as work at Cape Town, Wynberg, Middleburg, and Pretoria.

New Mission Steamer. — A new mission steamer for the use of the Missions to Seamen Chaplain on the Tees was launched at West Hartlepool last week, and was named the Good Hope by Mrs. Handley Moule, wife of the Bishop of Durham, This new steamer is the gift of two Yorkshire ladies, and replaces the less powerful steam launch, Day Star, which is being transferred to the Orwell for the service of the Missions to Seamen on that river, and in Harwich Harbour.

THE LATE

Rev. Aug. Schreiber, D.D.

IN our last issue we briefly announced the death of Rev. Dr. Schreiber, the widely-known and greatly beloved director of the Rhenish Missionary Society. The lamented scholar and worker fell asleep, in fulness of peace, after a short illness, on March 22, at the age of sixty-three. He has been taken in the midst of many duties, which he undertook in the fear of God, and the wise discharge of which assured to him a position of commanding influence among missionary workers in his own land and beyond.

Dr. Schreiber was an admirably equipped man. After completing his theological course in Germany, he visited Great Britain, spending some time in studies in England and Scotland. Having gone through a medical course, he offered himself for service in connection with the Rhenish Society. He was ordained in 1865, at the same time as another well-known worker, Johannsen; and in the following year proceeded to Sumatra, accompanied by his young wife. Stationed at Prausorat, he was surrounded by a Mohammedan population, and the work was a difficult one; but his labours were crowned with large success. He started a seminary for catechists, began the translation of the Scriptures for the Battas, and for years he presided over the work of the Society in Sumatra.

In 1873, he was obliged to return to the Fatherland, on account of the ill-health of his devoted wife. Thenceforth the Mission House at Barmen was the scene of his labours; and his intimate knowledge of Sumatra and its people proved of special service in the development of work in connection with that important portion of the Society's field. In 1889, having for some years shared the direction of the Mission with Inspector von Rohden, Dr. Schreiber assumed the cares and honours of Chief Inspector. As before, his life was bound up with the work of the Mission; and whether travelling in distant lands, visiting stations and workers, or directing from headquarters operations extending over a wide field, his industry and energy commanded universal admiration.

In the larger councils of the Foreign Mission cause, Dr. Schreiber was a familiar figure. He was a speaker at the London Conferences in 1878 and 1888, and in the New York Œcumenical Conference in 1900. The evangelization of Mohammedans had engaged his earnest thought, and on that subject he always spoke to excellent purpose. His Society (sometimes called the Barmen Foreign Missionary Society) is represented in various and distant fields, including Cape Colony, German South-west Africa, Ovamboland (west coast of Africa), Sumatra, Nias, South-east Borneo, South China, and German New Guinea. Under his direction operations abroad were extended and the interest at home deepened, with attendant increase of workers and income.

Until March 17, Dr. Schreiber appeared to be quite well. The following day, however, he was prostrate with pneumonia and inflammation of the lungs, and after four days of suffering he entered into rest. Those who knew him best, praise God for the testimony and toil of his life, in which great capabilities were combined with deep humility and a lovable disposition.

Dr. Schreiber was an acknowledged authority on foreign missionary matters — whether principles or polity, fields or methods. His many gifts and graces were supported by good health and a marvellous memory, so that he was largely consulted by inquirers regarding world-wide evangelistic enterprise.

"Wanted—Men!"

IN response to the plea for more missionaries, which appeared in The Christian a year ago under the above heading, I have received a great many letters. And something has been done. Three well-tried workers sailed for China last autumn. Others are hoping to go to the heathen.

One of these has been for some time in a missionary training home; and another is joining her there immediately. I am grateful to all who have helped, and for the prayers of God's people. The reports from those who have sailed are very cheering. They are under the care of well-known missionaries who heartily welcome them. At present no men have gone.

Once more I would venture to plead with ministers and others to look out suitable workers for the foreign mission field—and to see that they go! I must not enlarge upon the subject here, but I earnestly ask those who are interested to read chapters five and eight of the new edition of "Do Not Say" (3d. Marshall Brothers). The pamphlet has been much enlarged. New diagrams have been added, and also, amongst other things, a plea for "Would-be Missionaries." I want your readers to help me in making the plea known. The booklet can be obtained through any bookseller, or I will send twelve copies for 2s. 6d. post free.

I shall still be thankful to hear from responsible workers concerning any who are called of God and have the right spirit, but for whom the way into the mission-field is difficult; also from those who will help to support them. Since the publication of my letter, £169 18s. has been received. My own way has been strangely hedged in. I should personally be grateful for prayer.

Count Your Blessings.

My child, thou art mine,
By blessings divine,
Made heir with the Firstborn, His Son,
Accepted in Him,
And freed from your sin,
Rejoice in the victory won.

"Count your blessings" of love,
His gift from above,
And praise Him for graces bestowed,
For faith to believe,
And His promise receive
To free you from debt you once owed.

Shine brightly for Him,
Who redeemed you from sin,
Let His jewels be kept with all care;
Be pure and be lowly,
Seek help to be holy,
Let love be your watchword and prayer.

Rev.
James Paterson Gledstone.

SOME men live more in five years than other men do in fifty. James Paterson Gledstone is an instance of a man living at his utmost—not for five years, but ever since he has lived. In his crowded hour of life he has filled out the spacious promise of his youth, and has touched at all points the religious, social, and political life of the age in which his lot has fallen. The three adjectives, which here qualify the word "life," are used in no conventional sense, leaving still a wide margin of gracious purpose; these words are ample, because they have to describe an ample man, "furnished unto all good works."

Born at Haltwhistle, in Northumberland, the county that produced Dr. Parker, he was about eight years old when the doctor preached his first sermon. In early youth he moved to York, where James Parsons was preaching, as never mortal man did preach, with strange, thrilling, magnetic power. His words were sharp arrows of the mighty, piercing the soul, convicting the will, alarming the conscience, and yet pointing the way to pardon, peace, and eternal life. Young Gledstone was drawn to this great preacher, and soon yielded himself "a willing captive to his Lord." Joining the church, Mr. Parsons at once set "James," as he always called him, to work; and at the age of eighteen the youth was preaching to debtors in York Castle, and holding services with disreputable tramps in lodging-houses of the low kind which these unfortunates frequent.

In mission-halls and at street services, wherever he could, Mr. Gledstone wrestled, fought, persuaded, and preached, till some of his friends prophesied for him a short life and a tragic death. Happily they were not prophets. Mr. Parsons sent the young evangelist to Rotherham College, and here the youth came under the wise, far-seeing, and kindly governance of Dr. Falding. Zeal, as much of it as you like, but tempered with knowledge, was the doctor's inflexible rule. On Sundays you might set on fire the villages where you preached, but on weekdays you must do your classwork, and do it well. The principal believed in that old rhyme, cut in the wall of a schoolroom formerly belonging to Mr. Gledstone's first church, which I quote because of its sanctified commonsense:—

> Where grace and learning mutually shine,
> Rich is the blossom, and the fruit, divine.

I have vivid memories of the preaching class in Rotherham College. A man had to do his best, and it was a trying ordeal to preach before your peers, twenty or thirty critics ready to pounce upon the smallest slip in pronunciation or composition! Then the principal, erect in soul as in body, grave, dignified, with luminous eyes that looked you through! I have heard wise and tender criticisms from him which were a liberal education to listen to; I have heard him "slate" a careless, slipshod sermon with emphasis that was simply crushing. It was, however, remembered that there was one sermon even the students could not criticise. It affected the principal so that he dismissed the class with an appeal to the preacher, and the students, to live up to it. The preacher was Mr. Gledstone.

A year before his course in college terminated, Mr. Gledstone received an invitation to become the minister of Queen Street Congregational Chapel, Sheffield, one of the historic sanctuaries of the city. Founded in 1782, the church had been served by ministers of rare excellence. Dr. Pye Smith, the famous divine and scholar, James Montgomery, William Thorp of Bristol, George Bennett of the London Missionary Society, and other men of repute in their day, had been connected with this church. The bulk of its members was composed of men engaged in the staple trades of the city, either as masters or workmen. They were a shrewd, keen-witted set, who sampled their minister as they tested steel, and were refreshingly frank about the process. It may be added, the young minister was equally open, and this great quality of moral straightness on both sides led to the happiest possible relations between pastor and people. I quote the following words, written long ago:—

> Finally there came a youth of ruddy countenance, who had the heaven-sent gift of the sling and the stone; and the way the congregation sat bolt upright that Sunday was a scene to be remembered. . . . The boys were drawn to the preacher straight away, and had they been canvassed, a call would have been instantly given, and no questions asked. People might do worse than ask a boy's opinion about preachers.

REV. J. P. GLEDSTONE.

From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker Street, London, W.

From the very first Sunday he preached in the place, Mr. Gledstone's ministry was powerful and attractive. There were natural advantages falling to him that few men have. He had the voice of an exquisite singer, and a perfect enunciation; his appeals were rousing or tender; and the sermons possessed the supreme quality of converting purpose. There was a distinct message in every utterance, and souls were won for Christ in that dear old chapel, where so many of us first beheld the Lord. The opening heavens shone round about us, and we had visions of the King in His beauty.

There was, of course, the larger ministry outside, which Mr. Gledstone exercised. Before slumming as a fashion set in, he had penetrated "Cross Smithfield," at that time one of the darkest spots of Sheffield, and had started a mission to the submerged, now joined to the Settlement work at Croft Hall. On summer Sunday afternoons and nights he used to get crowds at Miss Harrison's field, after his ordinary services at Queen Street. During the week the church was a hive of industry, and here again were anticipated many of the more prominent forms of Christian activity, which, under new names, are exploited as present-day discoveries. I may not stop to name them, but they were there.

About 1866, trades-unionism had instituted a reign of terror in the town; and, in fighting this development, Mr. Gledstone took his part: so, too, in striving after civil and political purity his voice was heard. Later on, Mrs. Josephine Butler began her crusade against the unnameable C.D. Acts. The movement was new, and had not won its way to recognition; respectable ministers stood aloof from it; but it was characteristic of Mr. Gledstone that, at Mrs. Butler's first meeting in the town, he stood by her side. From that day to this he has fought a good fight for the cause of woman.

Church and Sunday-school and the Smithfield Mission grew steadily, but far away the greatest blessing of those days was the Saturday night prayer-meeting initiated by Mr. Gledstone. The meeting-room became the gathering place of all the congregations—Baptist, Independent, Methodist—in the town. Our spiritual horizon was widened by these meetings; and the vitalizing power of prayer was beyond all knowing of it, beautiful. Sectarian differences vanished as completely as if they had never existed, and the note of high and holy fellowship in our common Lord was struck. The prayers got enfibred into our very being, and the memory of them is among the most precious things of our life. The membership, not only of Queen Street, but of the other churches went up; in ways direct and indirect the work of God was revived. Out of this meeting four missionaries went to the foreign field, and five ministers gave themselves to work at home; while a host of able teachers and workers were raised up, who have been witnesses for Christ.

In 1872, there came the call to Crouch End, and Mr. Gledstone left Sheffield for the wider sphere in North London. During his three years ministry there the membership increased fifty per cent., and this period is marked by the place he took in denominational matters. He had an active share in forming the London Congregational Union, and read the first paper at its first meeting. In addition to a full ministry, he must needs preach to the crowds of pleasure seekers at the Alexandra Palace, and take his part in the Moody and Sankey revival, with the not unnatural result of a serious breakdown in health. He left Crouch End in 1875, carrying with him the warm, steadfast friendship of men like Dr. Hannay and Rev. J. Corbin. A year of rest in Derbyshire restored his health, and he then took up work against State Regulation of Vice, along with Mrs. Butler, Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., Sir James Stansfeld, and others. He formed the Congregational Committee, with Mr. Samuel Morley as chairman, and was its honorary secretary till the system was abolished in 1886.

In 1876 the United States was threatened with laws in reference to regulated vice, similar to those which had degraded so infamously our English statute book, and along with that indefatigable stalwart, Mr. H. J. Wilson, Mr. Gledstone went to the United States to organize resistance to the evil. The result of this crusade was the formation of a powerful party in the States, which works for righteousness, keeps a "high moral standard" before the people, and has made itself felt in the national councils. This American visit was memorable in many ways. Intercourse with Lloyd Garrison, leader of the Abolitionist Party, and Wendell Phillips, the famous anti-slavery orator, and others, had a powerful effect upon a man so likeminded with these worthies as Mr. Gledstone, and had a formative influence in fixing him firm in the great principles of that much abused but still happy phrase, "Liberty, equality, fraternity."

In the following year (1877) Mr. Gledstone became minister of Streatham Hill Church, and continued in that office till 1901. Here, after fifteen years' work, the membership was more than doubled, the income greatly increased, and the church turned into a centre of social and spiritual activity. A new Sunday-school was built, and mission-work among the poor was widely extended. It is manifestly not possible for a man of Mr. Gledstone's gifts to give to a church, or a party, what is meant for mankind. He has always regarded himself as the servant of all men for Christ's sake, has worked vigorously in temperance movements, and has from first to last been an unflinching opponent of militarism. Long and faithful service for the London Missionary Society led to his selection as Chairman of the Board of Directors in the Centenary Year. The way in which he filled its onerous duties won him unstinted praise. Missionaries have always found in him a keen sympathizer, and an enlightened, genial friend. It should also be recorded that "Self-Denial Week" owes its initiation and observance to him.

Of literary work done by him, a separate paper alone can adequately treat. His "Life of George Whitefield," first written when a young minister, has been declared to be "one of the finest pieces of religious biography extant." A new work on the same subject worthily sustains the reputation of its predecessor. Other work from Mr. Gledstone's prolific pen has enriched the pages of The Christian and other papers.

More than a passing mention should be made of Mrs. Gledstone, a lady who, from first to last, has shared her husband's arduous labours; and, in the most unobtrusive way, has stood loyally at his right hand. Not one of the talking sisterhood, but full of gracious and tender work for the Master, this "elect lady" reminds one of the saintly women who helped John Wesley, or of Persis, the beloved, who laboured much in the Lord. She began a large mothers' meeting in one of the most dismal Sheffield slums, and it is still carried on by friends who revere the memory of her work in that city. Aided by her husband, she has for twenty years been closely identified with the Aldershot Mission to Women and Girls, a mission which, with no flaring advertisement to catch the public eye, has been the means of leading over 500 women and girls from the way of endless shame back to decency, self-respect, and Christian living. Mrs. Gledstone has also assisted in establishing a large famine orphanage in India.

A closing word should touch upon Mr. Gledstone's phenomenal influence over young people. A north country Sunday-school is always an interesting sphere, but the school connected with Queen Street was unique in one particular. There was little or no drift. The scholars were held, and to pass from the school into the fellowship of the Church was a natural development no outside attraction hindered. The fearless but sympathetic message of the preacher turned many to righteousness, and in the cutlery city are "men and women in Christ Jesus," who to-day bless God for His servant who first led them into rest and work.

One quaint old Sheffielder used to say: "Mr. Gledstone would not go into heaven itself unless he could take his young people with him." It was the simple truth, and most of us remember how the sweet compelling love of Christ was made vivid to us, and brought into our life in class-room, vestry, and chapel. The young men and women of those days are now in middle life or past it, but the names of Revs. T. Grear (Bishopsgate, London), S. Yates (Spalding), Dr. Henry Coward, the famous musician, and others, mention of which space forbids, will be easily recognised as standing for righteousness and whole-hearted Christian service. Four others, the fruit of these earlier years, went to India as missionaries. One, after exceptionally lofty service, died at her post; two had to retire with shattered health; the fourth has tried to revive in a broken way the memory of those happy days, which in him, as in many others, "doth breed perpetual benediction."

The Gospel in the Peninsula.

At the annual meeting of the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society a large number of friends gathered to bid God-speed to Rev. J. M. Harden, B.D., who has been appointed Principal of the Training College for ministers shortly to be started in Oporto. Great interest has been aroused by this important step, which is likely very widely to influence the work of Peninsular Reformers. In the absence of Bishop Ingham, Mr. William McCall occupied the chair.

The report, which was read by Dr. Noyes, stated that all the stations had been maintained, and a more tolerant spirit was exhibited towards the Reformers, who were steadily making their influence felt. The Chairman said that till now there had been no regular organization for the training of students for the ministry, and hence there was great danger as to the continuity of the movement. But with the appointment of Principal Harden that defect would be remedied, and now the brave men who had so long stood up for what was right, and good, and true, would see some hope of their work being perpetuated.

A striking account of the crowded services in Seville, and the excellent educational work being done there, was given by Rev. J. Blackburn Brown. He feared that in England it was not always realized how much the Reformers have to contend with in Spain and Portugal. In many cases they were despised and hated. Sir Algernon Coote, Bart., pointed out that distinct advancement had been made in the religious life of Spain, where in 1800 there were 147,000 monks and nuns; but in 1900, although the population had increased fifty per cent., the number of ecclesiastics had decreased to 72,000. This is encouraging; but infidelity has crept in, and the people need the preaching of a living Saviour. The Reformers were faithfully doing this, and were worthy of support. Principal Harden said he felt his task was a difficult one; but the success of the effort rested with God.

The Dean of Norwich, in an eloquent and stirring address, referred to the Vatican movement for the distribution of the Gospels in Italian among Roman Catholics. This was one of the most encouraging movements, and, in the words of a resident in Rome, he thought, "If this goes on it will lift the door of Rome off its hinges." Addressing Principal Harden, the Dean urged him to keep before him in his future work three great realities—(1) the supremacy of truth, (2) the sweetness of individual sympathy, (3) the power of prayer.

A Protestant Pilgrimage.

The rich historical associations of London, particularly in connection with the careers of men and women who endured martyrdom rather than submit to the domination of Romish superstition and error, might well receive closer study. To visit the hallowed places where the fathers of Protestantism "endured, as seeing Him who is invisible," even to the death, is surely a stimulus to faith and zeal, and, in these days of militant sacerdotalism, should be a solemn reminder of present-day duty as well as of old-time loyalty.

With the thought of affording instruction in historical Protestantism, Mrs. L. H. Nott has organized a series of tours, the first of which was made on Thursday last. Starting from Charing Cross as a convenient centre, a stop was first made at St. Paul's Cathedral. Here the chief interest lay, not so much in Wren's building or in antiquarian lore regarding its predecessors, as in the site of Paul's Cross, where Latimer thundered forth with such fervent insistence in defence of Evangelical truth; where Bishop Tunstall, bent on preventing the dissemination of the printed Word in the language of the people, burned Tyndall's translation of the Bible in public; and where Queen Elizabeth listened to the preaching of the sermon which gave thanks to Almighty God for the defeat of the Spanish Armada.

Had time allowed—and on future occasions shorter stays will be made in order to permit of a greater number of places being visited—a call would have been made at St. Sepulchre's Church, but the thrilling story of its famous vicar, the martyr John Rogers, was recalled outside St. Bartholomew's, Smithfield. Led from Newgate Gaol to the stake, in front of the church entry, he was seen by his wife and children (a farewell interview with whom had been forbidden), "passing not as to his death," as a commentator declares, "but as to his wedding."

St. Bartholomew's itself, a striking Norman survival, but shorn of much of its original grandeur, has a curious record; parts passed into secular hands, and were used respectively as a fringe factory, a day school, and a forge. One section, indeed, remains a stable, but the others have been restored. Nevertheless, one turns from the chequered story of this ancient pile to ponder on the tragedies witnessed in the dark Marian days outside that old stone doorway, blackened as it is with the fires of Smithfield.

The tours are to be made, with various itineraries, twice a week during the spring and summer. Particulars may be obtained from Mr. W. Stanley Martin, 1, Imperial Buildings, Ludgate Circus, E.C.

Bible Carriage Work in Sussex.—On Easter Monday dedication services were held at Eastbourne for the purpose of consecrating to the service of God by united prayer the new Bible Carriage of the Edendale Book Mission. In the afternoon, Rev. W. T. Turpin, M.A., occupied the chair, and was supported by Rev. Sparshott (Church Association), Rev. J. Turner (Southdown College), and Rev. C. B. Cooper (Evangelical Alliance). In the evening, Rev. John Turner took the chair. Very encouraging addresses were given on each occasion by the ministers and the evangelist in charge of the car—Mr. W. Fuller. The report showed that upwards of £200 had been spent this year in the interests of Scripture circulation, and it was a matter for praise that the new carriage is going forth free of debt.

Irish Mission to the Jews.—At the annual meeting of this Mission, held a few days ago, Mr. T. Pakenham Law, K.C., presided. Mr. I. Julian Grande (director) gave an account of his work in different parts of Ireland, including that during the Exhibition last year in Cork. He said he found that the wall of partition between Jew and Gentile was gradually breaking down, and that many of the more cultured Jews were acknowledging the justice and perfection of Christ's teaching and the unity subsisting between the Old and the New Testaments. It was most difficult for a Jew to make an open profession of his faith. In many cases a real Christian has to avoid this step in order that he may still retain his means of livelihood. Though the difficulties in the way of a missionary sometimes seem insurmountable, he is buoyed up by hope, recognising that in the innermost consciences of his hearers a good work has been accomplished by his proclamation of the Gospel.

Fifty Years of Open-Air Preaching.

THE special report prepared in connection with the jubilee of the Open-Air Mission, now being celebrated, is not only in itself an interesting document; the retrospect enables us to contrast the general outlook in London in 1853 with what it is to-day. Just after the accession of the late Queen, it was estimated that not more than one in six Londoners attended public worship, and probably that estimate was too favourable. When Mr. Macgregor founded the Mission, nothing was more sorely needed than some method of awakening those to whom the Gospel was practically unknown. To preach in the open-air was but to adopt one of the most ancient methods of addressing an audience, while the method was one which had, through the blessing of God, so largely contributed to the success of the eighteenth century Revival.

In 1853, Mr. Macgregor had already proved himself to be a young barrister of many accomplishments, as ready with the pencil as with his pen. As a writer, his style was peculiarly clear, simple, and forcible; and he was already more anxious to turn his gifts to account in the cause of the Gospel than to advance his own interest. He placed a high value on the diffusion of Christian books and tracts, which he never failed to scatter during his canoe and yawl tours on foreign rivers and seas. He not only revived out-door preaching; all the earlier reports, and occasional papers, "written with clear and absolute selflessness, are from his pen; and it is seen that the young movement owed almost everything, under God, to his leadership, in which the qualities of sanctified wisdom, holy love for souls, and quenchless zeal in Christ's service, shine equally forth."

During the first year over a thousand services were held, and great numbers, who were quite outside the churches, were ready to listen to the Gospel message. He showed that the field was one which believers of varied talents might occupy. While ignorance and infidelity were as rampant as of old, millions were ready to hear, and there was free opportunity to speak. He specially trained himself for out-door preaching that he might be a match for the infidel and secularistic objectors who then probably abounded more than now in London.

At the outset Mr. Macgregor found a strong and sympathetic ally in Lord Shaftesbury.

It was a providential thing when John Macgregor and Gawin Kirkham became associated in this service. "God used their united efforts. The work grew. Its branches spread and flourished. Many resorts of evil were invaded; the perishing heard the joyful sound, and abandoned and hopeless ones were brought into life and liberty."

Gawin Kirkham was a Scripture-reader at Bermondsey when Mr. Macgregor found him. With the exception of the few years he passed at Mildmay Conference Hall under Mr. Pennefather—during which time Mr. John Kirk, now secretary of the Ragged School Union, conducted and advanced the work of the Open-Air Mission—Gawin Kirkham devoted the remainder of his life to this service. He seemed to have a sanctified genius which enabled him to excel in the work; he never showed signs of becoming confused or of losing his temper amid the most untoward surroundings. Mr. Frank Cockrem, the present indefatigable secretary, has succeeded in developing the work, the still further extension of which promises to be followed by the best results. Last year 951 races, fairs, fêtes, and other outdoor assemblies were attended. Thirty evangelistic tours were undertaken, among groups of villages. Special services held numbered 2,945. Nearly 1,100,000 Testaments, Gospels, tracts, books, cards, &c., were distributed. Conferences or lectures for the members of the Society, now numbering 917, are continually being arranged for, and there are sixteen auxiliaries. The work was exceptionally successful during the year 1902. "The tide of blessing which had followed us from some previous years rose higher and higher as the months rolled on, notwithstanding the very inclement summer, and it was the evangelists' joyful experience to conduct again and again prolonged missions and great campaigns, at which every single service was accompanied with saving results."

Christian workers and friends gathered from many quarters at Exeter Hall on Tuesday to commemorate the goodness of the Lord during these fifty years, and especially to join in heartfelt thanksgiving for the large measure of blessing with which the efforts put forth have been crowned. Three excellent meetings were held. The afternoon was specially devoted to descriptions of the work, given by helpers from different parts of the country. In the evening the jubilee report was presented, and a special thankoffering was taken with a view to a large extension of the work.

The Christian Temperance Campaign.

LOUTH.

LOUTH has been highly favoured with a two-days' visit from Rev. Dr. Henry and his colleague, Mr. Armon Jones. The Free Church Council, who arranged for the meetings, are deeply grateful to their Heavenly Father for the faithful heart-searching and instructive messages of Dr. Henry, who is not only a great and brilliant temperance advocate, but an able and eloquent expositor and preacher of the great truths of the Word of God.

The Council regrets very much that they did not see their way clear to engage the services of Dr. Henry and his colleague for a longer period of time. On the closing night it was abundantly evident that a marked impression had been made on the minds of a people charged with the prevalent spirit of indifferentism.

A number of pledges were taken, but the Mission was all too brief to reach the outside masses. In seeking the destruction of the gigantic evil that fills the world with misery, and renders many of our best and noblest religious and philanthropic efforts comparatively fruitless, Dr. Henry places God and His Gospel in the forefront, and makes it clear that only as men and women come under the regenerating power of God's Spirit, and the uplifting power of Divine grace, can there come true betterment and improved environment. "The time has come," he says, "when, in view of the dreadful evils of this blighting and remorselessly selfish traffic and the deep dishonour done to Almighty God, every minister and Christian worker in particular and people in general should rigidly abstain from the use of all intoxicating liquor, and by example and influence seek to dissuade others from the use of that which is by common consent the first and worst foe of the individual, the family, the Church, and the State. The moment has arrived when the churches must rid themselves of all complicity with the hellish traffic, for until the Churches realize their solemn responsibility in the matter, and do their duty, the drink question can never be effectually grappled with."

Never have we listened to such burning eloquence, convincing argument, and moving appeal, and our prayer to God is that He will abundantly bless His servant's fearless and faithful efforts to arouse the Christian conscience on this burning question, and federate the Churches in one gigantic effort to crush this foe of the Gospel and of humanity. The singing of Mr. Armon Jones was greatly appreciated. Hugh P. C. Ferguson, Council Sec.

HULL.

The mission which commenced on Lord's Day last at Hull speedily aroused public attention. In the morning Dr. Henry preached to a very large congregation in the Prospect Street Presbyterian Church (Rev. J. J. Mackay's) and had a most cordial hearing. His subject was "The Irrepressible Conflict between the Church and the Public House." The meeting in the afternoon, held in the Anlaby Road Circus, was attended by about a thousand people. In the course of a vivid descriptive article the Hull Daily Mail says:—"Dr. Henry looks like a man who would throw all his energy into whatever work his hand finds to do. He does not look robust, and yet one gets the impression that there is immense strength of will, determination, 'the will to do, the soul to dare.'

"Dr. Henry's speech this afternoon is for some time explanatory; then it becomes sermon-like, for the speaker takes four texts, and uses them to achieve one end. That end is to show men and women the Kingdom of God; to tell them what it means; to point out a way by which the Kingdom may be reached. But how can that Kingdom be realized when so great an obstruction as drink bars the way? Dr. Henry's indictment of drink is very vehement. As he proceeds, the quiet manner of his opening remarks is thrown aside, he warms to his work, his voice rises in pitch. He has much to say to men, but he lets it be understood that he has also a mission with the women. 'If there is a place anywhere,' he says, 'where a mission for women is needed, I should say it is here.'

"When Dr. Henry's address is finished, a hymn is announced. The audience will sit while the hymn is sung, and while they sing there they are asked to sign. Signing the pledge is to be accompanied by music. Large cards are handed round the rows of people, to which card pencils are attached. It is observed that a number of signatures are set down on the cards."

The night meeting was also held in the Circus. There was a large attendance, and Mr. T. R. Ferens, J.P., presided. The chairman spoke strongly against creating a vested interest in licences. Dr. Henry followed with an address full of vigour and earnestness. The Hull Daily News says:—"He does not spare himself: he is thorough; he gives his best, bringing every faculty into play; calling upon every ounce of strength that he possesses. The result is tremendous. He is, for the time being, a man on fire. He has forgotten himself in his message. He is possessed by it, he remembers nought else."

The message was primarily to the Churches, calling for unity and enthusiasm in the war with the powers of evil. Mr. Armon Jones again won all hearts. The Daily News adds: "He delighted the audience by his magnificent singing. His voice rang clear as a bell throughout the whole building." Many pledges were secured. The mission concludes to-morrow (Friday).

The Bedouin Mission.

MR. ARCHIBALD FORDER leaves England early in May on his return to Jerusalem and Arabia. He has held meetings in many parts of the country, and received much encouragement. One instance is deserving of mention, as being an example worthy of being copied. Mr. Forder spoke at a meeting of the Emmaus Mission at Halifax on Easter Tuesday, and the friends present agreed to be responsible for the building of the proposed caravansary at Jerusalem, giving their weekly offerings for that purpose until the whole sum shall have been paid. Mr. Forder is to get the estimate of cost when he returns, but it is not likely to be less than £300. One friend who was present at the meeting, but who desires to remain unknown, has since sent £30 towards the purchase of the site for the mission buildings.

Already some £800 has been received in promises and gifts, apart from the cost of the caravansary mentioned above, and it is hoped that the remaining £2,000 required will be sent in before Mr. Forder returns to Jerusalem. The office of the Mission is at 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

THE TORREY-ALEXANDER MISSION.

THIRD WEEK IN ABERDEEN.

(BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONER.)

THE expectations of God's people in Aberdeen are being abundantly realized. God is answering prayer, for the city is undoubtedly in the midst of a great spiritual awakening. It was like old times to see men, women, and young people coming boldly forward at the meetings on Sabbath of last week and confessing Christ before thousands. To avoid the overcrowding experienced the week before, women only were admitted in the afternoon, and men at night. In this way 6,000 different persons were reached, for on both occasions the hall was filled to overflowing.

At the close of the women's meeting, between twenty and thirty gave themselves to Christ, and many others were spoken with. The scene at the evening meeting was a striking one, when 3,000 men of every age and class gathered. In a very short time Mr. Alexander had them all joining heartily in some swinging choruses—"The Best Friend to have is Jesus," apparently taking their fancy most. As they were singing, "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" Mr. Alexander stopped and asked how many in the hall could say with assurance they had a mother in heaven whom they had promised to meet there, but they had not yet started on the way. Instantly fifty or sixty hands were raised. "Well then, men, don't you think you ought to get ready to-night?" And some of them did before the meeting closed.

Dr. Torrey spoke most impressively on "Sin," and the word was with great power. When the preacher first gave an invitation to those who had decided to give up sin and surrender to Christ, only a few rose; but on a second appeal being made after Mr. Alexander's solo about a score of men stood up. These afterwards came right to the front seats, and were joined by others, until over thirty had signified they had made the great decision. Besides this the workers were kept busy dealing with inquirers in every part of the building.

HOLIDAY CROWDS.

A number of circumstances have combined to lend variety, and intensify the interest in the meetings. Monday was spring holiday in some of the larger towns, and many friends took the opportunity to visit Aberdeen and attend the meetings. Glasgow sent a strong contingent, including Pastor D. J. Findlay, Mr. William Thomson, jun., and others. At the Bible Study meeting that afternoon, Mr. Findlay cheered the hearts of the local friends by bearing testimony to the excellent results of the campaign in Glasgow. He related several instances showing the far-reaching effects of the work, and declared it had been "in many respects the best mission in that city for a score-and-a-half years." Letters were read describing a most remarkable revival that has broken out in Findochty, a fishing village on the Moray firth, and is spreading to neighbouring places.

It was indeed encouraging to learn that God was working mightily in different parts of Scotland, and visions of 1859 and 1874 came up before the minds of many. All this led up most naturally to Dr. Torrey's subject, "A Real Revival," and it was felt that God had been speaking in a special and direct manner.

LARGE MINISTERS' MEETING.

On Tuesday afternoon the usual Bible study gave place to a special meeting for ministers, a large number of whom were in town that day from all parts of the surrounding district, attending the Synod meetings. About two hundred were present at the service, a good proportion being elderly men. This drew from Dr. Torrey the remark that, though he had often addressed similar gatherings he felt more timid than usual owing to the presence of so many "fathers" of the Church. Dr. Torrey spoke with great tact, directness, and power on "How to fulfil the Ministry," his own extensive experience as a pastor giving his words additional weight.

HINDRANCES.

Wednesday was observed as a day of humiliation and prayer. At the first meeting held at 10.30 a.m., there was a very good attendance. The address on "Hindrances" has been described by many as the most heart-searching word they ever listened to. At the close the greater part of the audience remained to pray with each other; and, forming themselves into little groups of twos and threes all over the hall, the unique but gladdening sight of twenty or thirty prayer meetings all going on at one time, in the same room, was witnessed. At noon, there was another large gathering for prayer, while the afternoon meeting was the best in point of attendance up to that stage of the mission.

A special service for children was held in the Music Hall on Friday afternoon. The young people gathered in overwhelming numbers, and, thanks to a large band of capable workers, excellent order was maintained, and wonderful attention was shown to the singing and address. At the close, about 600 adjourned to the Y.M.C.A. Hall, and were there dealt with personally. The workers report many cases of clear and intelligent acceptance of Christ on the part of the older boys and girls, and even in the case of the younger ones time will no doubt prove that many were brought to love and serve the Saviour through this meeting.

The evening meetings have been remarkable for the enormous crowds that have been attracted. On Tuesday, when Dr. Torrey spoke on "Hell," and on Wednesday when the subject was "Heaven," the throng seeking admission was so great that the doors had to be closed against hundreds, long before the advertised hour of meeting. Every night the audiences have numbered from 2,500 to 3,000, and on each occasion many have been enabled to make the great decision.

CASES OF CONVERSION.

A young man from Dundee came to visit some friends in Aberdeen. He was a Christian, and, naturally, had a desire to go to the mission meeting the first night he came; but did not like to hurry out immediately, in case it should appear discourteous. He then asked a young man, a son of the house, to accompany him, feeling that would help to tone down the seeming discourtesy, and after considerable persuasion prevailed on him to do so. During the meeting this son was convicted of sin, and at the close was led to faith in Christ. Next night he brought a fellow-worker with him, and he too was converted. The Dundee friend went home singing the "Glory Song" all the way—as well he might!—and wrote to Dr. Torrey relating the whole circumstances.

A PRAYING MOTHER.

The Christian Endeavour Societies of Peterhead and Frazerburgh organised an excursion on Wednesday, for the purpose of hearing the evangelists, and over 400 of the party attended the evening meeting. A day or two after, a minister who had accompanied them, wrote stating that one of the young women had been led to accept Christ as her Saviour in the meeting, and also a young man of the party. This fisherman had a Christian mother, and when he was leaving home she got her boy to promise to attend the meeting, and added that she would be praying for him. The man kept his promise and came to the Music Hall. All through the service he thought he heard his mother's voice saying, "Lord, save my boy! Lord, save my boy!" He could not get rid of the thought of his mother praying for him—his heart was softened and opened to the Word of God. That night he went home rejoicing in Christ.

At the commencement of the mission, a number of young ladies from a boarding-school came to the meetings, and one or two were brought to Christ. Since then a work of grace has been going on amongst them, and now no fewer than fourteen have been won for Christ.

IMPRESSION IN THE CITY.

A remarkable thing about the work is the large number of cases of decision outside the meetings. Many Christians state that they find an unwonted interest in religious things amongst those who ordinarily are indifferent; people are disposed to listen and respond to any approach made to them in a polite way on spiritual matters. Doubtless this is to a large extent the outcome of an increased zeal on the part of God's people for the salvation of the perishing, but this does not explain it entirely. God's Spirit is moving over the community.

A good deal of quiet reaping is done after the evening service is over. Long after the hall has been cleared, the workers may be found walking up and down the street with men and women anxiously seeking the light. One young man was spoken with at one of the after-meetings. The worker found him very anxious, and tried his best to lead him to Christ, but to no purpose. The meeting closed, and worker and inquirer went out together. They were joined by another Christian, and an hour soon passed as the ambassadors for Christ pleaded with the unsaved man to decide the all-important question. At length, despairing of getting him to settle the matter that night, they reluctantly bade him "good night." Just as they were turning away, he said, "I will decide to-night." Gladly the two friends turned, and in a short time had the joy of leading the anxious one to the Saviour. Next evening he was at the meeting again, with a smiling countenance that told of a deep joy within.

It is most gratifying to observe the hearty way many of the ministers have thrown themselves into the work of the mission. Not a meeting passes but a number of ministers are to be seen on the platform or scattered through the hall, and in the inquiry meetings they are always to be found hard at work seeking to point sinners to the Saviour. Mr. Alexander has got together 250 young girls and formed them into a "Sunbeam Choir." The "Sunbeams" are placed immediately behind the adult choir in the orchestra seats, and their sweet singing lends an additional charm to the musical part of the service.

GOOD NEWS FROM GLASGOW.

"I believe the Glasgow Mission is just beginning, if my class is a sample of what is going on!" So a teacher has just written to encourage the evangelists in Aberdeen. She goes on to say that the girls in her class have been impressed seriously by the words spoken by Dr. Torrey when he was in the city, and three have decided for Christ since. Eight have been led to offer themselves as ready for missionary work, if the Lord wants them to serve in the foreign field. "I'll go where you want me to go," has been ringing in the ears of many Christians who have come to realise the claim which God has upon their lives.

A very interesting incident has also been reported. There was a drinking-club which stood near where open-air services were held. A young man has just taken it to turn into a "Harbour Light," opened every night for the preaching of the Gospel. What moved him to this step? Reading that remarkable book, "Down in Water Street," he fell in love with the idea of helping drinkers out of their sin, and this is the result. Before the mission was held in Glasgow there were prayer-circles meeting in many homes, and a service has lately been held to return thanks to God for so many answers to prayer. Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander are continually receiving interesting proofs of how their work in Glasgow and in Edinburgh is bearing fruit.

Other Evangelists at Work.

Revival in Banffshire.

A work of grace is at present in progress along the Banffshire coast that exceeds and surpasses in interest and power and saving result anything that experienced workers of long standing have ever witnessed. In Findochty work is almost entirely suspended, the village hall in the forenoon of each day being crowded with all classes of people. "Commercials" visiting the place on business have been at their wit's end, the residents being so engrossed in salvation interests that ordinary mundane affairs look as if they are at a standstill. Whole families are being saved, and fathers, mothers, sons, and daughters are to be seen and heard making public confession of Christ in the meetings. Under the power of the Spirit of God, the second of the Acts is being repeated in the collective experience of believers. Their joy is so great that they seem like "men full of new wine."

The wave of blessing has swept into nearly every house in the village, and at some of the public services the sights to be witnessed baffle description. Though the preaching may not last long, the evening services sometimes last for six hours. Between the groans and cries of anxious souls, and the joyful hallelujahs of those who have found deliverance, interruptions are quite a frequent thing. "Grace is flowing like a river."

The awakening broke out first at Portessie, a neighbouring village, under the preaching of Rev. G. H. Ryves, Wesleyan minister there. Some young men who had been awakened in December last, when Mr. James Macfarlane was preaching in Findochty, went over to Portessie a few weeks ago and were saved, returning home to Findochty full of holy zeal and heaven-born enthusiasm.

Mr. Macfarlane returned for a mission at the same time, and thus, through a happy combination of circumstances, the blessed "forward movement," God planned, has been furthered. On Sabbaths every place of worship is full to the very door. All are sharing in the blessing. The Wesleyan Chapel, the Salvation Army Barracks, the Brethren's Hall, the Church, and the Public Hall are packed full at the same time, and anxiety manifests itself in every place. Many of the people have not had their clothes off for successive nights, and the evangelist and other helpers have had to content themselves with short allowances of sleep, sometimes not getting to bed till one or two o'clock in the morning, and being aroused again at six or seven in the morning to hear the story of some fresh conversion, or to render help to someone in soul anguish. Bands of people patrol the village singing songs of praise to Jesus until after midnight, and early in the day the volume of public praise again begins.

The movement is refreshing and particularly interesting in that men and organizations and human arrangements are nowhere. God seems to have set everything that man would devise to the side, and is Himself among the people as the Captain of their salvation. J. C.

Mr. James Wharton in America.

During a recent visit to Montgomery (Alabama), Mr. Wharton went by invitation to address a girls' school at 8.30 a.m., and so deep was the interest that he was detained for three hours dealing with anxious souls. At the close the principal said fifty had decided for Christ. Next day he spoke at the State Normal School, when the number who professed to undergo a spiritual change was over a hundred. Pressed to go again a few days later, he saw thirty more make the great decision. The majority of the students are fine young men and women, who in the course of a year or two will graduate, and go out in all directions as teachers, carrying their witness for Christ to others. Mr. Wharton hopes to arrive in England about the middle of May.

Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn's Meetings.

The People's Mission at Bedford received a visit from Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn on Easter Sunday and Monday. The services were well attended throughout, and the large hall, capable of holding over 800 people, was packed to such an extent on Sunday evening that many had to be turned away. The hall was filled again on Monday evening to hear the visitors give an address on "Christian Work among Infidels, Anarchists, and Formalists." The audiences were representative of all classes of the community, and they listened with intense eagerness to the powerful addresses. There was no "toning down" to meet people's tastes; the Gospel in its fulness was preached faithfully, and made large numbers inquire, "Where are we?" There was a complete absence of undue excitement; quietly the Spirit of God did His work, and did it with certainty. The most noise in connection with the meetings was when a poor slave to drink cried aloud for deliverance. Three Dutch evangelists were with our friends, and on Easter Monday morning the party held a brief service in the historic hall in which Bunyan preached, closing with a prayer that God would raise up more such men as the consecrated and inspired tinker.

Geo. Kendall, Superintendent.

The meetings at Portman Rooms, Baker Street, W., on Thursdays, continue to awaken increased interest, and many letters have been received expressive of gratitude for spiritual light and help received. Among others won for Christ was a Jew who is now testifying among his own people, despite much opposition. Mr. Booth-Clibborn has also addressed a gathering in connection with the Jewish meeting of St. Mary's, Whitechapel. There was a crowded hall, and the Word was with power. Both evangelists spoke at the P.S.A., Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, S.E., on Lord's Day last, Rev. F. B. Meyer presiding.

Rev. John McNeill at Kilsyth.

Rev. John McNeill's mission in Kilsyth, from the 5th to the 10th inst., proved very encouraging. The meetings were held in the Anderson U.F. Church (Rev. J. Weir), which was crowded to its utmost capacity each evening. The interest from the beginning was deep, and increased as the meetings went on. Since the days of William Burns, in the year 1839, no such widespread interest and impression on people's hearts has been seen as that created by Mr. McNeill. The local ministers, and others interested, agreed to continue the meetings, notwithstanding Mr. McNeill's departure to the neighbouring town of Kirkintilloch. A return visit will be looked forward to with great expectation and interest.

Mr. W. H. Jude in Lancashire.

The Victoria Hall, Bolton, one of the most magnificent buildings yet erected by the Wesleyans for their Central Missions, was filled with song on Good Friday, the missioner for the day being Mr. W. H. Jude, the preacher-musician. In the evening, more than 3,000 worshippers listened with devout attention to "The Shepherd's Evening Hymn," a pathetic story connected with Mr. Jude's Australian experience.

On the following night, Saturday, and Easter Sunday, Mr. Jude was greeted by large crowds at the Central Hall, Manchester, rousing the Lancashire folk to a high pitch of enthusiasm and religious fervour by his recital and singing of "The Crowning Day."

On Easter Monday, after hearing of many remarkable cases of blessing at his previous gatherings, Mr. Jude conducted a special service in the afternoon, and although held on a general holiday, the meeting was crowded to the doors. In the evening, among many other acceptable songs and solos, Gipsy Smith and Mr. Jude sang together "Saved by Grace," the audience being much affected both by the song and the unique circumstances. F. B.

Mr. Josiah Nix at Bedford, Lancs.

The ten-days' mission recently conducted by Mr. Josiah Nix has been wonderfully helpful. The whole neighbourhood was stirred, the Church quickened, and much good done. Mission workers paraded the streets every night, headed by the Tyldesley Temperance Brass Band, and the remarkable torchlight procession previous to the Friday midnight meeting will not soon be forgotten. Scores were brought in straight from the public-houses, and many not only signed the pledge, but entered the inquiry-room. Nearly 500 persons, including children, received spiritual help.

Mr. Henry Thorne in Croydon.

A very encouraging mission has just been conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne in the Horniman Hall (Y.M.C.A.), Croydon. The meetings opened on March 26, and should have been brought to a close on April 6, but it was thought desirable to continue the services over Easter Sunday. The interest grew day by day, and when Mr. Thorne gave the story of his life, "From the Stage to the Cross," many could not gain admittance. During the services many were led to the Saviour, young and old alike testifying to God's power to save. Mr. Thorne's visit will be long remembered. W. H. J.

Rev. J. Sprunt at Pewsey, Wilts.

Rev. James Sprunt has just concluded a fortnight's mission at Pewsey, Wilts. The meetings were held in the Forester's Hall, and were well supported by the members of all the Free Churches, Revs. H. Parrott (Primitive Methodist), Hatheway (Baptist), and H. J. Birtwistle (Wesleyan) taking part in the different services. Although this special effort was made at a rather awkward time, running right through the Easter holidays, the attendances were well sustained throughout. Mr. Sprunt's addresses have been mostly along the old lines known as "the three R.'s"—ruin by sin, redemption by the precious blood, and regeneration by the Holy Spirit. God has spoken through His servant to the help and blessing of both saved and unsaved. For the bright, clear, and spiritual testimony we are grateful to the Lord, and expect to see much fruit as the result. The solo singing of the missioner and the new hymns from the Evangelistic Hymn Book added greatly to the interest in the mission, while the splendid lantern lecture on "Bunyan and his Book" was both instructive and interesting. Alfred Whattey.

Mr. Chas. Cook's Work.

A thanksgiving meeting was held at Hyde Park Hall, W., on Saturday evening last for blessing seen at the Metropolitan Theatre during the winter season. Three generations in one family were represented. A man and wife and all the family were brought to Christ, and last Sunday a grandson, aged sixteen, was pointed to the Lord. A lady gave thanks for herself and sister; twenty-four years ago two other sisters were blessed in the same building. A soldier from the front, wearing three medals, gave thanks for himself and wife's conversion a fortnight ago. One note of praise was for a father, mother, and four others in the same family. At the closing service relatives gave thanks for sisters, brothers, and friends, and on Saturday evening these were present and joined in praise for the results of the past twenty-eight years' work.

Work in Maybole, N.B.

The Baptist Church in Maybole has been the scene of an interesting work of grace in connection with a fortnight's special mission recently brought to a close. The preachers were Rev. Joseph Kemp, from Charlotte Chapel, Edinburgh, and Mr. Peter McRostie, superintendent of Bethany Hall, Glasgow. On week nights the audiences were large, and on the two Sabbath nights the services were held in the Town Hall, which was crowded on both occasions. The ministry of the Word was in the power of God, and a great many young people were led to the Saviour. At a meeting for new converts, which was held since the mission closed, about fifty were present, and a happy evening was spent. The preaching of the evangelists was much appreciated by the Lord's people, and their bright, earnest ministry has left sweet memories in the minds of many. J. C.

Mr. William Forbes closed on Sunday last a ten days' mission at the Congregational Church, Great Wakering (Rev. W. Robertson). He also held services at Little Wakering Mission Hall.

A ten days' mission has just been held in the Methodist New Connexion Chapel, Scunthorpe, Lincs., conducted by Master Fritz Wood, the young Irish preacher, who drew large congregations together on the Sundays and week nights to hear the Gospel. The Lord was with him, and many were led to decision for Christ. J. W.

Services in connection with the Y.M.C.A. were held on Easter Sunday in the Hippodrome, Blackpool. Mr. A. K. Yapp (travelling secretary) was the speaker morning and afternoon, the latter being a meeting for "men only." In the evening a recital of "The Book of Job" was given by Mr. John Duxbery, of Manchester, to a large audience. L. J.

A mission of twenty-days' duration has been held at Long Itchington, by Mr. G. Bentley of the Ross Tent and Evangelistic Mission. The meetings were well attended, the audiences increasing as the time went on. A good number gave in their names as having received Christ, and believers were refreshed and blessed. At the close a testimony meeting was held, when several who had been brought to the Lord in missions conducted by Mr. Bentley in the neighbourhood, previous to this one, gave witness to the Lord's power to save and keep. For all this we praise His Holy Name. Albert Hall.

Rev. E. Davidson, Wesleyan Connexional evangelist, has just concluded a ten day's mission at Hinckley, which has been fraught with wonderful blessings. "The preacher was rich in teaching power and persuasiveness, and completely captivated his audiences. There were some splendid cases of conversion, and over 150 have passed through the inquiry-rooms. In house-to-house visitation, in button-holing and in systematic visiting of the public-houses our own people have done splendidly. A praise-meeting was held on the following Wednesday, conducted by Rev. D. Huddleston, and the testimony of the oldest members was, 'There has never been such a meeting in Hinckley before.'"

The Lord has brought about a great revival at Hopeman, Morayshire, by means of a three-weeks' mission in the Baptist Chapel. The building was crowded every night. Over one hundred persons have publicly confessed Christ, and many backsliders have been restored. The meetings were conducted for eleven days by Pastor A. Bremner (Inverness), and continued by Pastor C. W. Adams (Hopeman), assisted by many willing workers. Three points call for notice—(1) the large proportion of men in the meetings; (2) the simple application of the Word of God has been His power unto salvation; (3) the revival is the answer to a special season of prayer for a manifestation of power. A.

At the Baptist Tabernacle, Sittingbourne, on April 6, a very helpful mission was brought to a close by a lecture on, "Does the Stage Door Lead to Ruin?" given by Mr. Spencer Johnson, the singing evangelist, to a large and appreciative audience. The mission, which was conducted by Mr. William Olney and Mr. Johnson, assisted by the pastor, was the means of making a deep impression on many minds and hearts. Over a hundred persons decided for Christ. For several weeks preceding the mission the church had resorted to earnest prayer, and was in a state of expectancy on the arrival of the missioners. Among those who found the Saviour were many young people. John Doubleday.

Rev. Oswald Chambers, of Dunoon, has just concluded a fortnight's mission in the Madeira Street Baptist Church, Leith. Christians have been revived, and at almost every meeting souls have decided for Christ, some during the preaching, while others went into the inquiry-room. A great many children professed to trust in Jesus as their Saviour, at two services which were held for them. Mr. Chambers also conducted a meeting for men only on the Sabbath afternoon, and his Bible readings in the afternoons were seasons of spiritual refreshment. We are looking for further manifestations of the power of God, as many more are under conviction. Christians outside our own church received blessing. To God be the glory! A. C.

During the last four weeks Mr. A. Y. McGregor has conducted one of the most encouraging missions ever held in Methil, N.B. At first the attendances were small, but they gradually increased, the Sabbath evening meetings being attended by at least 800 persons. An interesting feature in the meetings has been the hearty support of all denominations, and the willingness with which the different churches were placed at Mr. McGregor's disposal. He has proved himself an earnest, hard-working and spiritual worker, and some very distinct cases of blessing have been the result of the mission. Workers have been much refreshed and their enthusiasm quickened. Mr. McGregor's Gospel solos have been greatly enjoyed, and we thank God for the new converts and the times of revival.

Matthew Taylor.

Mr. Charles Mellor, "converted athlete," has just concluded a mission in the New Tabernacle, Hyde, Lancs. Earnest addresses were also given at open-air services nightly, prior to the indoor services. By this means, men were induced to enter the hall who seldom or ever enter any place of worship, and some stayed to pray. The great Day will doubtless reveal a glorious harvest of souls won to Christ by our brother's messages of Gospel truth. Mr. Mellor's testimony has also been blessed to many of God's children. On Good Friday a Christian Convention was held, and open-air services also. Crowds were drawn to hear the words of Life. Messrs. James Gore, A. J. Reed, R. Jones, and Pastors J. Lees and Lomas, took part. Great power and blessing rested upon the people, and souls were won. The Church has deep cause for thankfulness to God for the blessing derived from Mr. Mellor's visit.

J. B. Lomas, Pastor.

Irish Notes.

The Protestant Orphan Society for the counties of Antrim and Down has received a bequest of about £10,000 from the executors of the late Mrs. Dunseath.

The Presbyterian Orphan Society, which had previously over two thousand children under its care, has just added 262 other children to its list, a number which gives it a premier place among the orphan associations of the world.

It is stated that should the present Land Bill for Ireland become law it will involve a loss of at least £30,000 a year to the Church of Ireland in the reduction of interest alone, not to mention the loss it is certain to incur by the buying out of the landlords.

Miss Lee, of Limerick, who has been working for some years at Foochow, China, but who has been home on furlough, has returned to China. While at home she succeeded in raising £400 towards the rebuilding of the heathen girls' boarding school on a more sanitary site in Foochow.

Both the Irish Presbyterian Colleges have just closed their sessions for the year. At the Londonderry College, the address was by Professor Leebody, who very severely criticized the University Commissions Report; and at the Belfast College the address was by Rev. Professor Hamill, D.D., who took as his topic "Christ and Scripture." Each college has had a successful year.

The Cork Indigent Roomkeepers' Society, which has been in operation for many years, continues to do an excellent work amongst the poor Protestants in that city. During last year, the total sum voted in grants and loans to needy persons amounted to £260 15s. The relief committee met fifty-one times, and ministered to the wants of 170 persons. In a city like Cork, where Roman Catholicism is strong and active, it is almost impossible to over-estimate the value of such a society.

The Methodist Foreign Missionary anniversaries have just been held at about 200 centres in Ireland. Nine English ministers—namely, Revs. A. S. Sharp, E. W. Redfern, H. Guard Price, Joseph Passmore, T. E. North, Dennis Kemp, John H. Greeves, Charles Feneley, and S. H. Gregory, all of whom, with one exception, had been on the foreign field—formed the deputation, and with these were associated ten Irish ministers. An increasing interest in these missions is being taken in this country, and the contributions last year totalled £4,663, an advance on the previous year of £350.

The annual meetings in connection with the London Missionary Society have been held in Belfast and neighbourhood. The deputation consisted of Revs. J. A. Joyce, of North India, Dr. Macfarlane, of New Guinea, W. G. Robertson, of Central Africa, E. A. Wareham, of South India, and Miss Spence, of Benares. The meetings were well attended, and deeply interesting information with regard to missions was given at them. The annual meetings with reference to Wesleyan missions have also just been held throughout Ireland. About two hundred centres were visited by the members of the deputation, and a deep interest in the missionary cause was stirred up.

The Y.M.C.A.

The Finnish Associations are commencing special work among railway employés. Already branches have been successfully set on foot at Helsingfors and Tammersfors, while four others are in course of formation.

At the annual meeting of the Great Yarmouth Association, which was held on March 2, addresses were delivered by Revs. T. Phillips, W. Thorpe Goodrich, and Dr. Shaun. There was a large attendance. The report showed an increase of membership, renewed activity in spiritual work, and increased prosperity in the Seaside Holiday Home of the association.

A new boys' hall for the work of the junior department of the Hackney Association has been opened. It will accommodate 250 boys, and will be used for Bible classes, lectures, and social gatherings. A feature of the year's work was the series of evangelistic services held by the association at the Hackney Empire on Sunday evenings, with an average attendance of 3,000 persons.

Sixty-one general and railroad associations in New York State, reporting upon Bible study, show 4,339 different students in Bible classes during the three closing months of 1902, an increase of twenty-nine per cent. over last year. There has been a large increase in the weekly attendance at religious meetings during the same period, 8,725 men being reported in comparison with 5,688 last year.

The annual report of the Stafford Rooms Association, W., is worthy, in its spiritual tone, of the past record of this well-known centre. The various evangelistic efforts are maintained with fervour. Of the open-air work it is said:—"God has graciously prospered His own Word, which has gone forth by His grace with convicting power, and not a few have been brought to know the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour and Friend."

Mrs. Esther Herman has given 10,000 dols. to a young men's Hebrew Association in New York. A cheque for the amount was transmitted in a letter, stating that the donor was led to make this gift owing to the benefit received by one of her sons through attending the evening classes of the Y.M.C.A. The advantages impressed her so favourably that she hoped to see similar facilities extended to Hebrew young men throughout the country.

The Islington and Highbury branch has a unique record, being the oldest existing association in the world. The best traditions of the work have always been kept well to the front, and every agency has been subservient to the primary object of winning young men to the faith. The 55th year, just closed, has witnessed the putting forth of many efforts upon which rich blessing has rested. The principal gathering of the week continues to be the Sunday afternoon Bible class, which has proved a means of spiritual help to a large number of young men.

In connection with the twentieth anniversary of the Berlin Association an interesting gathering was presided over by Herr von Rothkirch. Among those who gave addresses, Lieut.-Colonel Von Hassell spoke of the varied and far-reaching branches of the work, including the new Soldiers' Home, which give help and sympathy to toilers of every class. The chairman glanced at the religious life of the Association, and urged the importance of constant prayer, which ought to be regarded as the foundation of all endeavour. During an interval Countess A. von Bernstorff received the friends and supporters of the work in the library and reading-rooms. Count Bernstorff also took part in the proceedings.

The Young Men's Christian Association International Committee, in making a review of the educational work done by the associations throughout North America, finds at the beginning of the second term of the year, nearly 30,000 men enrolled in the evening classes. A considerable percentage of these are foreign-speaking young men. In one western town the classes contain men speaking seventeen different languages. English is one of the chief classes, and the literary societies, mock congresses, classes in physics, political economy, &c., including "Collegeville," a novel system by which the organization and government of a town is studied in a popular way, are attended largely by foreign-speaking young men. Minneapolis has a class of fifty men who do not speak English at all. Most of these are Scandinavians. A group of seven Bohemians joined the Newark (Ohio) Association to study English. New Britain, Conn., has a class of eighteen, mostly Germans. A course of reading following a selected list of books bearing upon American citizenship and its principles is used. The Canadian Associations have courses of lectures on the history of Canada and the British constitution. The Army branches in Porto Rico and the Philippines have been fitting men for advance in the Army and for the Civil Service.

Foreign Mission Week.

A BIG FAMILY.

Hymn: Sacred Songs and Solos. No. 3.

LAST week Uncle Tom had a chat with you about the Bible as a staff. As this is Foreign Mission Week, perhaps it will interest you to take a trip round the world (rather a hurried one!) to see what the Children's Special Service Mission is doing for children far away, and how it is helping them to know and love the Bible.

One branch of the work of this Mission is the Children's Scripture Union, to which, doubtless, some of you belong. There are now over six hundred thousand children and young people, in different parts of the world, who have joined together in this Union to read a short portion of God's Word every day. That is a big family, is it not? There are coloured children and white children amongst its members; children with pigtails, children whose swarthy complexion tells the land of their birth; children living in China, Japan, India, Africa, Madagascar, France, Germany, Spain, Arabia, and many other places. If this big family could be brought together, there would be much confusion of tongue, for they would represent children speaking in thirty-one different languages! But they are all one in Christ Jesus.

In addition to the Bible-reading, open-air services are conducted abroad during the summer months, as in England; special missionaries have been selected to regularly visit boys' and girls' schools and colleges, and to conduct missions. These workers send home very interesting reports, and tell of the eagerness with which the children flock to the services. Of course, they are not always good, any more than you are! I read that some boys in Gibraltar disturbed the meetings by and banging on the doors! So you see the children of other countries also find it difficult to be good and attentive. But those who are once really interested in the services come regularly, and, what is better, often succeed in persuading their noisy friends to attend, and find for themselves what a good time they have together.

Miss Smith, writing from Spain, tells of a drawing-room meeting she held, when every child had to find and write out a verse of Scripture, bringing some object to represent it. They had David's sling and stone, a lock of hair—"your hairs are all numbered," salt, lilies, needles, birds' nests, feathers, clay, with a verse about the Lord anointing the blind man's eyes. One little lad brought the "fatted calf" (a small toy cow being his object!) He had carefully written out his verse three times, and then was not satisfied, but wanted to do it again just before the service. A tiny girl represented the "bushel" to hide our light by bringing a candle with a cocoa tin turned wrong way up over it!

Sometimes the children who belong to the Scripture Union are God's little messengers without knowing it. A child in Orissa was persuaded to join the Union by her day-school teacher. She took her Scripture Card home with her, and her parents started reading the passages, and after a while they determined to love and serve God, because they had learned to know Him through the reading set.

About twenty years ago an English child of twelve years, who was a member of the Scripture Union, went out to Japan with her parents. On arriving, she thought she would like to start a branch there, which she did with the help of older friends. As the result of this there are to-day 11,000 members in Japan! In these and many other ways the good seed is being sown, and the work of the Children's Special Service Mission steadily increasing.

I must stop now, but I hope that the "big family" of whom I have been writing, and "Uncle Tom's" Searchers may be helped onward in their Christian life by the study of God's Word, and by listening to His messengers; then you will indeed all be able to say:—

I am so glad that our Father in heaven
Tells of His love in the Book He has giv'n;
Wonderful things in the Bible I see,
This is the dearest that Jesus loves me.

Children's Services in South India.

MR. E. ARROWSMITH, of the Children's Special Service Mission, held last month a most fruitful Children's Mission in Palamcottah. Although he was only there six days, he managed to hold three or four meetings a day for parents, students, the Y.M.C.A., and at the Sarah Tucker College, and each day there was a general meeting for all the children of the station in the large Tamil Church. On the first day it was clearly seen that the children were too crowded, so all the seats were removed and the young people squatted much more comfortably on the ground. The children listened most eagerly, and owing to the speaker's use of the simplest possible language, a great many of them were able to follow him in English.

The number attending the general services must have been between six and seven hundred daily, and who can tell the blessing to the church of the future if many of those who were present were converted? There is certainly a remarkable response among the boys of the High School, and in particular among the boarders, who number just over a hundred.

At the close of the mission they requested to be allowed to bid farewell to the missioner, and in doing so, told how the Spirit had convicted them of sin, expressing a desire to lead a new life. A similar spirit seems to pervade the girls of the boarding-school.

A special address, illustrated by objects, was given to the children in the Deaf and Dumb Institution, which is carried on by Miss Swainson, of the Church of England Zenana Mission. Mr. Arrowsmith gave two lantern lectures describing the origin of the Children's Special Service Mission and the services held on the beach. These were immensely enjoyed not only by the children, but also by the adults present. A keen interest was shown in the details of the lives of English children, their games and pleasures, and a message of loving greeting was sent by the children to Mr. Josiah Spiers, the founder of the Children's Special Service Mission. Mr. Arrowsmith left Tinnevelly for Ceylon, and the prayers of the Palamcottah children go with him in his work among the children of that island. L. P.

UNCLE TOM.

Murphy Memorial Hall.—The work at the Murphy Memorial Hall, in South London, continues to prosper. In 1866, Rev. G. M. Murphy became first pastor of the Borough Road Congregational Church, a name which soon gave place to the present one, Rev. George Fuller being his successor in the pastorate. The Lambeth Baths winter meetings are now held at the Hall; and a very pleasing feature of the work is the lantern service held at the close of the usual Sunday evening service. On Saturday afternoons large numbers of the poorest children in the district are gathered together and entertained. It is to be regretted that the new buildings should be burdened with a debt of £3,000.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

Sunday, April 26.

An Evening with Jewish Missions (Rom. ix. 1-5, 11, 22-29).

THE influence of the Jewish people on the world has been altogether extraordinary. It is not to be wondered at that the Court chaplain quoted their existence to Frederick the Great as the most conspicuous and convincing proof of the Divine Providence in history. Theirs was the adoption, by which they were specially selected as sons of God (Ex. iv. 22); and theirs the glory of the Shechinah, which filled their sacred shrine (Ex. xl. 34). Theirs were the covenants, old and new, by which God bound Himself to be their God, and to make them His people (Heb. viii. 6, 7, &c.); the giving of the law (Deut. iv. 13): the holy service of God in the Tabernacle, and perhaps in the world (Heb. ix. 1-6, and Deut. vii. 6; xiv. 1). Theirs also the promises (Acts ii. 39), the fathers (Acts iii. 13), and the Lord (Matt. i. 1-16).

In passing, notice that ascription by the Apostle to the Lord Jesus. Living so near the time of our Saviour, able to investigate for himself the whole story of His life, death, and resurrection, it is refreshing and confirmatory to hear him say so emphatically, "Who is over all, God blessed for ever."

The place of the Jewish race in the religious history of the world is very remarkable. The Scriptures of the Old and New Testament are attributable to them alone. The gift of inspiration was conferred on them in so marked a fashion that, in their case, it has a quality which is discernible nowhere else. They preserved the Scriptures with jealous care, though the sacred pages were filled with conclusive evidence against themselves. From them sprang the mother of Jesus, her beautiful womanhood nurtured to the highest grace and purity by their literature and genius. And as to His human life, our Lord owed much to His race and ancestry. The whole nation, from the days of Abraham, as His genealogy proves, was necessary to produce for the world the white flower of His matchless manhood.

Their rejection of their greatest Prophet and Teacher, regarded from their standpoint, is one of the saddest events of history. It was the act of a worldly priesthood working its will through a decadent and demoralized political life; and since then they have been wanderers on the face of the earth—children of the wandering foot—found in every land, at home in none.

Wherever they have gone, this remarkable people has manifested marvellous gifts, and easily gained the foremost positions in literature and art, in wealth and political power. We have only to mention the names of Beethoven and Mendelssohn, of Lessing and Disraeli, of Rothschild and Hirsch, among hosts of others. The foremost positions in the modern world are in the hands of Jews. When the grace of the living Christ has touched their hearts, the Jews have become marvellous preachers of the Gospel. Again we have only to mention men like Adolph Saphir, or the Herschels, who have laid the entire church of Christ under obligation.

There is no doubt that finally all Israel will be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. This is so clearly affirmed by the Prophets and reaffirmed by the Apostle Paul, that it is incontestable (Rom. xi. 25, 26).

In all probability, the nation, as a whole, will never be brought to the feet of Christ until that wonderful scene depicted by Zechariah (xiv.). The movement, known as the Zionist, which is endeavouring to purchase Palestine from the Sultan, may be a link in the fulfilment of prophecy. Evidently the land is being kept for the people, and the people for the land. Probably they will return to it in unbelief, but be led suddenly to recognise Jesus as their Brother. Saul's conversion is probably typical of the conversion of his entire people. It has always seemed to me also that the scene in the life of Joseph, where he made himself known to his brethren, is an exact picture of what will take place when the Lord says to his brethren, "I am Jesus, your Brother." Till then we must labour and pray as Paul did for individual conversions.

All these seem marvellous episodes, but so many wonderful discoveries are being made just now in the world of nature, that we may cease to feel that anything in the development of God's plan can be reckoned as difficult of belief (Zech. viii. 6).

A Book for the Sunday-School Library.

—Having read "In School and Playground" (by G. E. Morgan, M.A.), Rev. J. E. Flower writes: "The author knows how to talk to young folks. He thinks brightly, and is never dull of speech, while the core of every talk is a seed of the Living Word. The illustrations are frequent, vivid, and appropriate, drawn from common objects of personal observation."

Paul Arrested (Acts xxi. 30-39).

Golden Text.—1 Pet. iv. 16.

EIGHT years had passed since Paul left Jerusalem in company with three others bearing letters on Church government to the brethren in Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia (Acts xv. 22, 23). He had taught and preached at Antioch, confirmed the churches, and delivered "the decrees" in Asia Minor; carried the Gospel into Europe, organized churches in Philippi, Thessalonica, Corinth, and Ephesus, preached in other places, strengthened the hands of scattered disciples, and now returned bearing alms collected in Macedonia and Achaia for the "poor saints at Jerusalem."

At an official meeting presided over by the Apostle "James the Lord's brother," Paul gave an account of his labours among the Gentiles. The elders rejoiced in work done, but advised that, on entering Jerusalem, Paul should engage in a distinctly Jewish ceremony in order to allay certain prejudices among the believing Jews, which had been aroused by false reports concerning his teaching in other towns. It was while Paul was concluding his period of separation for the Nazarite vow in the temple that the mob, instigated by the Jews, who had been thwarted in their evil designs on him at Ephesus, "laid hands on him" in the Court of the Gentiles.

The Castle of Antonia at the N.W. side of the temple was garrisoned by Roman soldiers. It had "four towers from one of which the whole temple was overlooked, and connected by a double staircase," leading down to the Court of the Gentiles.

I. The mob doing the enemy's work.

II. The Roman soldiers doing military duty.

III. Paul suffering as a Christian.

I. The Mob. Some stirred to violence by ignorant excitement, but mostly Jews infuriated with cherished hatred, spite, and malice. There were spies among them (v. 29), false witnesses, clever manufacturers of false reports and lying slanders. Smooth-tongued accusers (xxiv. 5-8). Murderers (not afraid to kill an innocent man, but careful not to stain the temple-floor with his blood). Some who would not touch him themselves would incite others, yet were zealous for the sanctity of the temple, "the doors were shut" (Luke xiii. 1; Ex. xxi. 14; 1 Kings i. 50).

II. The Roman soldiers, on the watch. Prompt to quell tumult and arrest an offender. To prevent escape or violence the captain, a just and calm man of judgment, a heathen soldier, is used as a body-guard for the Lord's servant. The plan for Paul's work carried out from—Acts xxi. 13 "I am ready," Rome reached without cost to the Church, under safeguard of Roman soldiery. Truth proclaimed to Felix, Festus, Agrippa. Gospel proclaimed in Malta, before the Praetorian guard, and in the palace of Cæsar. (Phil. i. 13.) Epistles to the churches and two years work in Rome—to "I am ready," 2 Tim. iv. 6.

III. Paul suffering, but calm, self-possessed, courteous, brave, and zealous for his Master's service (v. 40). What was his secret of power? Psa. xxxi. 20. Isa. xxvi. 3, xxxii. 2, xli. 10-13, li. 16. "Fear not them," Luke xii. 4. What his memories? Once he made one of a similar crowd, Acts vii, 57-58, viii. 1, ix. 1. Of John xix. 15, Luke xxiii. 34. Little wonder he yearned over his nation. What his feelings? Self-abasement, chastened joy (Acts v. 41). Humble adoration and praise.

Lessons.

1. Which would grieve the Apostle most—the way he was treated, or his message received? The teacher is grieved at the heedlessness of the listeners, but what does the Saviour see? It was over those who heeded not the message of salvation he wept tears of sorrow (Luke xix. 41). The Lord Jesus yearns over the souls of children more than Paul did over his nation. The Apostle Mark saw a look of displeasure on the face of Jesus once—when? (Mark x. 13, 14, 16).

2. Better be suspected than guilty. The captain thought he had captured an ignorant brigand chief, but found a cultured, courteous gentleman, with a heart full of love to his enemies, so letting his "light shine before men" (Matt. v. 16).

3. Boys and girls are called to suffer as Christians, sometimes, but the Christ for whom they suffer is "a very present help in time of trouble" (Ps. xlvi. 1.)

"He knows, He loves, He cares"

(Heb. iv. 15, 16; John xiv. 18). So there will be love for oppression (no back answers), good for evil, and souls won for Jesus, even in bonds (Philemon 10).

BE NOT ASHAMED.

It is recorded that Rotherham, one of our old time naval heroes, was once advised not to wear his cocked hat in battle, because the gold lace was calculated to offer an easy mark to the enemy. "Let me alone," said he, "I have always fought in my cocked hat, and I always shall." When Nelson was warned, for the same reason, not to wear his stars in warfare, he replied: "In honour I gained them, and in honour I will die with them." In our daily lives we should never be ashamed of our profession, but let the world see our colours. Men around us, and even our enemies, should we have any, will think the more of us if, as Christians, we display a true pride in our religion. (See Golden Text.)

CALM AMID TURMOIL.

At one time when Calvin was in danger at Geneva, William Farel went to his aid. In a sermon Farel boldly attacked the Libertines, and as a result an outcry was raised against him. The Council at Geneva summoned the Reformer to answer the accusations of his enemies, and there were threats to throw him into the Rhone. "Just so," replied Farel, "just so did the priests and Papists clamour twenty years ago." Then the citizens who had not forgotten the benefactor's services and sufferings, rallied round him, and supported him when he appeared before the Council. In the end it was decided that Master Farel should be acknowledged a true pastor, as he had ever been, and it was declared that he had faithfully preached and discharged his office. Paul was strong in faith in the Lord, and though he was bound with two chains, and some cried one thing and some another, among the multitude, the Apostle remained calm and confident in God (vv. 33 and 34),

GOOD OUT OF EVIL.

When John Wesley was once preaching at Shepton, he was mocked by a mob and pelted with stones and dirt. Gaining his house, John Wesley was able to withstand the rioters until one of the ringleaders forced an entrance. A large stone just then struck the man on the forehead, and the blood spurted out like a stream. He cried out, "Oh, sir! What must I do?" Wesley replied, "Pray to God. He is able to deliver you from all danger." The man took the advice of the preacher and began praying in a manner he had never done before. In that way the riot was used of God for the good of the persecutor. In the case of the Apostle, the chief captain rendered him a good service by having him bound and led into safety.

SAFE BENEATH THE WINGS.

Mr. Kearton, who is an observer of birds in their natural haunts, is often astonished at the devotion displayed by a mother bird to its defenceless young. While on one occasion Mr. Kearton was watching a blackbird, rain began to fall. The mother instantly flew to the nest and outspreading her wings, completely covered her helpless offspring. In fact a photograph was taken at the time, and while the rain is seen to be pouring on to the back of the parent bird, the drops roll off on either side, leaving the little creatures quite dry within the nest. Paul, amid all the riot at Jerusalem, could, like the Psalmist, trust in the Lord and say, "Hide me under the shadow of Thy wings."

We also thank those friends who have so thoughtfully remembered our varied wants during the trying period lately experienced. Please do not forget our constant need of ornamental text cards, small greenery, and wool. We should also be glad of any available everlastings—they will not keep through the summer, so would be wasted if not used at once." Address, 110, Cannon Street, E.C.

Two Missionary Celebrations

THE annual meetings of the Missionary Pence Association, and of the Mission to Lepers, attracted large and deeply-interested audiences to the Lower Exeter Hall on Monday last, afternoon and evening.

The records of both organizations were of an encouraging nature. The Mission to Lepers occupied the afternoon, when Sir Andrew Wingate presided. The report presented by Mr. John Jackson stated that the spiritual side of the work has always been a source of great joy, and the past year has been no exception to the rule. From all directions the cheering news comes that God's blessing has been upon the work in a marked degree. Many of the lepers and their children have professed faith in Christ, and have been baptized in His Name. Many have died in the faith, leaving behind them the testimony that Christ was with them in the dark valley.

ADVANCES AND DEVELOPMENTS.

Several important buildings have been erected, and much-needed improvements carried out, both in India, Burma, China, and Japan. The asylums at Dhamtari and Sholapur are both receiving government grants, and high official praise is given to the institutions. A good work is likewise in progress in Sumatra. In the beginning of 1900 a heart-rending account was published regarding lepers in that island. It was pointed out that four lepers had been burned alive near to the station of Langbots, Lake Toba. The Basel Missionary Society almost immediately erected a small asylum, and the Mission to Lepers has assisted the institution ever since. In all, the Mission has sixty-five stations. The number of asylums and hospitals which it wholly maintains is thirty, and there are fifteen homes for the untainted children of leper parents. The total number of inmates cared for is 6,430.

THE POWER OF THE PENNY.

At the Missionary Pence Association's meeting, held in the evening, Sir William Godsell occupied the chair. It was shown by the secretary, Mr. W. Roger Jones, that many organisations in various parts of the world have been the recipients of timely aid. In ten years a sum nearly approaching £20,000 has been distributed, and gifts are likewise made of medical drugs, cameras, magic lanterns for evangelistic services, and of Christian literature.

PIONEER WORK.

The Association has always been specially interested in developing pioneer work. For some years past it has supported the only missionaries working in Central Brazil, and blessing has also attended the labours of Messrs. Lorrain and Savage among the Lushais and Abors on the Indo-Chinese border. These two friends have now been taken over by the Baptist Missionary Society. It was the testimony of the Government officials in Lushai to the usefulness of the work in these hills, which induced those in authority to allow work to be commenced among the Abors. The Association has also organised extensive efforts for clothing of famine orphans, and large supplies of garments have been distributed among the workers who have the responsibility for these little ones.

SYSTEMATIC GIVING.

The Chairman, who followed, made a telling appeal for systematic giving, and pointed out that while remarkable results have been attained in connection with the Association, chiefly through the instrumentality of poor people, it has yet to be seen how greatly the missionary cause will benefit when the "power of the penny" is adequately realized and regular giving is mere widely organized. Little beginnings have great endings, and the many dewdrops trickling together, make a broad stream to flow into the ocean of God's love.

Striking addresses followed from a number of missionaries. Rev. J. Heywood Horsburgh, representing China, referred to the vast field presented in that country, and made a strong appeal for more workers. Mr. Archibald Forder followed with a graphic account of work among the Arabs. He spoke, too, of seemingly "little things" used by God in saving his life on several occasions; so, too, God uses the "little penny" to aid the missionaries when they are in positions of extreme need. Mr. Forder added instances of the effective character of the Association's labours, and urged his hearers to take up the necessary work of collecting for foreign missions.

The meeting gained greatly in interest by the lantern lecture, which was subsequently given by Mr. John Jackson, who described, with much pathos, the various efforts put forth for the spiritual and social benefit of lepers in the East.

The London Education Bill.

THE chorus of disapproval with which the London Education Bill was received gathers force and intensity as the provisions of the measure come to be understood by the electorate of the Metropolis. It is significant that the policy of the Government finds but little favour in the house of its friends. But while numbers of Unionists and Conservatives ridicule the proposed system, Liberals are united in their condemnation of the Bill. The Nonconformist section of the Opposition painfully recognises in this action of the Legislature a direct home thrust at those liberties which they have long regarded as a precious and sacred heritage.

At a meeting of the Metropolitan Free Church Federation on Monday afternoon, the grotesque and unreasonable consequences of the Bill, should it become law, were set forth. Dr. Monro Gibson pointed out that the leading Tory newspapers condemned it, and The Times could not give it a comfortable benediction. The indignation of Nonconformists at the threatened destruction of the London School Board was voiced by Rev. F. B. Meyer, who very fittingly reminded the Council that, though all other sources failed them when the conflict came, they still had access to Him in whose Name the battle would be waged, since it was the true interests of His Kingdom that were at stake. A vigorous protest was also made by Rev. C. Silvester Horne; and after considerable discussion a plan of campaign was decided upon, whereby the borough councils of the metropolis would be urged to register a strong protest against the policy, in the interests of civil and religious freedom. The injustice to the teaching profession which the Bill portends, was the subject of strong comment by many of the speakers.

Oxford Notes.

THE detailed programme of the Oxford University Extension Lectures was issued this week. They commence on August 1, and last until the 24th. The list of speakers include many of the greatest University lecturers; whilst among the special preachers are the Bishop of Ripon and the Dean of Christ Church.

Mansfield College, Oxford, gives two graduates this week to the Congregational ministry. Mr. D. Ewart James, B.A., has received a unanimous invitation to the South Bar Church, Banbury, and Mr. G. Ernest Darlaston, B.A., has accepted the call to the Congregational Church, Sydenham, and hopes to commence his ministry at the Grove Church on Sunday, May 3.

At the Sunday afternoon service for men only, Rev. Arthur Wright, M.A., London Secretary of the White Cross League, gave a deeply-interesting address. The League, established twenty years ago, aims at social purity amongst men. Some of the finest work done by the Society is amongst the soldiers, especially at Shorncliffe, Aldershot, and Colchester. To-day in the University of Oxford fifty members of Colleges are members of the League.

Annual Charities' Register.—The pains taken by Mr. C. S. Loch and other officials of the Charity Organization Society in the compilation of "The Annual Charities' Register and Digest," merit cordial recognition by the Christian and philanthropic community. The information supplied is minute, exhaustive, and well arranged; and the scope of the introduction makes it a manual of the highest value to those whose privilege it is to be advisers of the poor, the needy, and the helpless. Obituary.

MR. W. M. SCOTT, BELFAST.

AMONG a wide circle of friends much regret is felt at the death of Mr. Wm. M. Scott, of Belfast, who has passed away, aged seventy-seven years. Mr. Scott was one of the founders of the Irish Temperance League, and was elected president of that organization a few years ago. He was also a leading member of Spa Mount Congregational Church, Belfast, and as a temperance advocate and a lay preacher met with much acceptance. He was a liberal supporter of every good cause, and by tongue and pen was an able defender of Evangelical Christianity.

MR. JOHN S. PELLY.

We regret to record the sudden death of Mr. John S. Pelly, manager of the cement works, Madras, and third son of Rev. C. H. Pelly, San Remo. Mr. Pelly was only twenty-eight. He was a bright and shining light for God in the parts of India where he was known. He acted as honorary treasurer of the Y.M.C.A., and was a Sunday-school teacher in Trinity Church, Madras. A deep interest in the advancement of the kingdom of God led him to be a liberal supporter of many Christian agencies. His interest in the Orphanage Home, Tondiapett, Madras, was great. When Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Morgan visited the Home in March, 1902, Mr. Pelly was present and welcomed them. His own aim in life was to glorify God. Now by his death he still more glorifies his Lord and Saviour Jesus.

G. J. I.

MR. JOSEPH TOLLER.

The death of Mr. Joseph Toller, of Kettering, at the age of ninety-four, removes an interesting link with the world of Midland Nonconformity of a century ago, and the senior member of one of the oldest Midland Nonconformist families. He was a son of Rev. Thomas Northcote Toller, who was educated at Daventry Academy with Dr. Priestley, began his ministry at Kettering at the end of the eighteenth century, and continued it till the forties of last century, when he was succeeded by his eldest son, who ministered at Kettering for another fifty years. Father and son thus occupied the Kettering pulpit without a break for more than a century, a record which is said to be unique in the history of the Nonconformist churches. Kettering has ever since the time of Dr. Doddridge been a stronghold of Nonconformity, and its "Fuller Chapel," the scene of the ministry of Andrew Fuller, like "Doddridge Chapel," Northampton, is still a place of pilgrimage among Midland Nonconformists.

MISS LOUISA LAYCOCK.

News of the death of Miss Louisa Laycock, who recently passed away in South Africa, came as a great shock to the many friends in England who are familiar with the work which she organized. For many years she was widely known as a diligent servant of the Master. One of the first occasions on which her consecrated zeal was displayed was when the construction of the Bradford Corporation waterworks commenced in the neighbourhood of Pately Bridge. Miss Laycock threw herself heartily into the work of visiting the gangs of navvies and others engaged upon these works, and, as opportunities presented themselves, she bore consistent testimony to the power of God to save.

It soon became apparent that the men were being deeply impressed, and a meeting place was desirable. The contractors were approached, and not only did they willingly erect a mission-hall, but undertook the cost of heating and lighting. Here for some years Miss Laycock was director, and under her superintendence the movement was instrumental under God in accomplishing great things. All sorts and conditions of men were drawn to the mission, and sympathetically and lovingly helped to find the Saviour. Miss Laycock was always equal to the self-sacrifice for which her labours often called. Frequently twenty-mile tramps over wild and dreary wastes of lonely moorland were undertaken in all kinds of weather, for the purpose of seeking the lost.

After the navvies had departed, a number of friends interested in the Keighley branch of the Railway Mission immediately approached her to continue a movement that was in danger of being dropped through lack of a suitable worker. Interest was quickly revived, and the hall was soon filled to overflowing with railway men and their wives. The strain of the continued activity was too much for the patient and devoted worker, and acting on the advice of doctors she decided to take a voyage and visit a cousin at the Cape. Her return was being eagerly anticipated; but this was not to be, and the summons to "go up higher" found the sufferer prepared to obey.

HON. ELIZABETH WALDEGRAVE.

A faithful servant of the Lord has entered into rest in the person of the Hon. Elizabeth Waldegrave. About twenty-seven years ago she was led to speak to some bluejackets, whose hearts the Lord opened. These told others, so that soon little meetings were held on shore or on board ship. Many came to the Lord, found the glorious salvation He gives, and became witnesses to others. Officers, too, came to the light and became servants of God, so that on many ships there were those who praised the Lord by their lips and their lives.

Besides this Miss Waldegrave held meetings for the police in London and for fishermen in Scotland, and for twenty years her devotion to the service of the Lord and the winning of souls never relaxed. But the strain of continuous labour began to tell. Insomnia became chronic and neurasthenia developed. The energetic servant of the Lord was unable to go out, except in a bath chair; but even then the winning of souls went on. Men were spoken to and invited to her lodgings at Southsea, and there, in her weakness, she was the means of many coming to the Lord. Not a few worldly ones came to those lodgings for a visit to her, and went out having received Christ.

Meanwhile weakness and suffering increased. For three years she was never able to leave her room. On her bed of pain she laboured to bring souls to Christ. Maids in the house and visitors came to the Lord. Even when the weakness and suffering were so great that she could scarcely receive anyone, she still yearned for souls; and three days before she left us, when scarcely able to speak, she whispered to me to write to one for whom she prayed daily, asking if she had come to the Lord. Two days before she went the accuser of the brethren came in mighty power, and the power of darkness seemed to prevail in that sick room. But the Lord heard prayer, the Light of the World shone, and peace reigned.

In spite of intense weakness she was able to say at intervals, "Chosen in Him;" "It is all right;" "What it will be to see Jesus;" "Praise the Lord;" "He doeth all things well;" "He knows how much I need chastening;" "It is so lovely, so beautiful;" "So good of the Lord;" "Who shall separate us from the love of God;" "In my flesh I shall see God;" "I want to go to Jesus;" "In one moment it will be all quite different;" "Jesus loves;" "Jesus lives;" "Blessed to go."

On April 16 she passed away so peacefully that we could not tell the moment. Two days later her body was laid to rest at Eastney Cemetery, carried by sailors. Around the grave stood, with the relatives and friends, leaders in Christian work, naval officers, and others who had been led to the Lord through her. The hymns sung were, "I heard the voice of Jesus," "Lord Jesus are we one with Thee," "The sands of time are sinking," and "Great Captain of Salvation." The Scriptures read were Eph. ii., 1 Cor. xv., Rev. vii. 9. It was pointed out that all our service is before "Him who sits on the throne, whose eyes are as a flame of fire;" and that, blessed be His name, the blood of the Lamb who is on the throne avails. We are washed and made white in that blood, and therefore before the throne, and serve Him day and night in His temple.

About Books.

THUMB INDEX BIBLES.

A device which has come into widespread favour for the ready use of the Bible, is what is known as the thumb cut index. By this means persons unfamiliar with the order of some of the less known books of Scripture can easily find their way, while the better informed may derive help in the rapid turning from passage to passage in private study or public work. Two editions of the Bible, printed at the Oxford University Press, may be had with this feature. First there is that in Emerald type, which is emphatically a handy book. (5s. 6d. net upwards). A smaller volume, in Ruby type (5s. net upwards), will fit smaller pockets. Particulars and prices in various styles of binding may be had from Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

MISSIONARY BOOKS.

A Century of Jewish Missions. By Rev. A. E. Thompson. (3s. 6d. net. Revell.) Mr. W. E. Blackstone writes an introduction to this book, the plan of which is good. We regret, however, to have observed a great looseness in the spelling of names of persons and places.

Many besides those who are actually engaged in the foreign field will be deeply interested in Mission Methods in Manchuria, by Rev. John Ross, D.D. Before the terrible Boxer massacres, Manchuria was being watched by all sections of the Christian Church with the same keen interest as Uganda, these two fields providing reports of ingathering from among the heathen which had scarcely been equalled in missionary annals. Too much cannot be made of the demand that the home churches should place their best men in the forefront of the battle; neither can those who go seek too earnestly to know the lines along which the work has been done which has been most fruitful in winning souls. The best worker will be a man truly filled with the Spirit, who has improved his God-given power to the highest degree, and who has acquired all the knowledge available for his equipment. To those who study in such a spirit, Dr. Ross's book will be a valuable acquisition. While very much of it is peculiarly applicable to the Chinese race, it is full of suggestion to those in other fields who realise that "God hath made of one blood all nations of men," and who have eyes to see the lost sinner behind skin of any hue. (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier.)

The name of John G. Paton is held in warm affection in Christian homes all over the world; and, if for no other reason, his son's book—Lomai of Lenakel: A Hero of the New Hebrides (6s. Hodder & Stoughton)—would be assured of a kindly welcome. But Rev. Frank H. L. Paton proves his personal right to a place in the front rank of missionary writers, by adding a fresh and profoundly interesting chapter to the story of the triumphs of the Gospel. We feel as if our feet were on apostolic ground, as we read of the marvellous degree in which the fruits of the Spirit were brought forth in those who shortly before were naked heathen. Although the story of these six years is modestly woven round the experience of one of the converts, the devotion and faithfulness of the young missionary and his wife can be read on every page. Only one with a full and clear vision of spiritual things could describe as is done here the progress in grace of Lomai, as he begins to wear clothing, gives up kava drinking, makes open confession of Christ, seeks baptism, and accepts office as teacher and elder. Informing and helpful side-lights are shed on the real causes of the depopulation of the islands, the training of native workers, and other topics of universal interest in missionary circles. No false glamour is cast over the missionary life; but a new illustration is given of the blessedness of walking in the path of the will of God, even though that lead through suffering and reproach.

Flora and Sylva: A Monthly Review for Lovers of Landscape, Woodland, Tree, and Flower. (2s. 6d. net. Offices, 17, Furnival Street, E.C.) A beautiful publication, noble in page, and amply illustrated, with plates and otherwise. Edited by W. Robinson, it will be welcome to the expert as well as acceptable to the amateur.

Hymn-Writers of the Nineteenth Century; with Selections and Biographical Notices. By G. A. Leask, M.A. (5s. Elliot Stock.) Those who love hymns will find stimulus in this book. The author gives particulars of some sixty writers, and about a hundred choice poems are associated with their names. The general arrangement, and the indexes, make this a welcome companion for most of the hymnals of church and home.

Christian Science—What it is, and whence it comes, by Rev. E. W. Moore, is a new booklet issued by the South Africa General Mission. It should have a large circulation, as meeting a pressing need of our times. Being small in size, the booklet is very suitable for enclosing in letters. (One penny. Arthur Mercer, 17, Homefield Road, Wimbledon, S.W.)

Torn from its Foundations: From Brazilian Forests to Inquisition Cells. By David Ker. (3s. 6d. Melrose.) What with hair-breadth escapes, and authenticated stories of the otherwise incredible, this is a live book. Needless to say, the author has travelled in many lands, and is a safe raconteur. The boy who reads this book will regret the inevitable finish.

In evangelistic work there are often occasions when something more than the usual tract is desirable for distribution. To meet the need of such cases, suitable publications have been issued from time to time by the Drummond Tract Depôt, Stirling. Among the most recent are a series of attractive Gospel booklets with floral covers, written by the late Bishop Ryle, Dr. Moule, and others (6d. per packet).

An exceedingly simple and at the same time useful manual for those who are called to the ministry of the Word is Hints on Making Sermons and Preaching. While it is designed for the use of lay preachers (and is written by One of Them), its perusal will afford profit and help to ministers also. To those who are training young teachers or speakers, the work will be found invaluable as a text or class book. (6d. M., 114, Newbridge Road, Bath.)

The Siege of York: A Story of the Days of Thomas Lord Fairfax. By Beatrice Marshall. (5s. Seeley & Co.) Here is such a book as we should expect from the author of "Old Blackfriars," and the filial biographer of that prolific writer of historical tales, Emma Marshall. Great events are described, and the life of the time is admirably depicted. The story is well written, and there are several highly finished illustrations.

In A Scots Thistle Leslie Keith introduces the reader to some interesting characters. The little daughter of a widower is living with an uncle in a Scotch village, a home which she is loath to leave, when her father in London eventually marries again, and desires her company in his fashionable West-End mansion. The contrasts of town and country life give colour to a highly refreshing and wholesome romance, and the book shows how that true happiness and contentment have their springs in simple and noble living. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

The Free Churchman's Guide to the Education Act, 1903. By Edmund C. Rawlings, solicitor of the Supreme Court, with a sketch of the History of Popular Education in England and Wales, by Rev. W. J. Townsend, D.D., president for 1902 of the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches. (2s. 6d. net. Thomas Law.) In his brief preface, Mr. Rawlings says the new Act "contains references to at least twenty-three other Acts of Parliament, and is a Macchiavellian masterpiece only worthy of the dark ages. It is another instance of the need of codification of British laws. It is monstrous to compel a subject wishing to ascertain the law on Education to refer to a bundle of Acts, little bits of which are here and there repealed, constituting a vast and intricate maze. It would have been quite easy for the old Acts to have been altogether repealed, and for the new Act to have been a complete unity." This book is full and plain.

Mr. F. A. Freer's deeply interesting biography, EDWARD WHITE: His Life and Work (6s. net. Elliot Stock), has reached its second edition, for which it has been carefully revised.

A PLAIN WORD ON AMUSEMENTS; or, The Place of the Social Element in our Churches. This is a faithful booklet by Rev. G. Anderson Miller, of Rochester Baptist Church. (1d. Robert Collins, 245, Maidstone Road, Rochester.)

Mr. J. E. May's official POCKET GUIDE TO MAY MEETINGS AND TO LONDON, for 1903, contains, in addition to an indexed list of the various gatherings, an illustrated guide to London, a coloured map, and many other useful features. It should secure wide popularity. (1d. 68, Fleet Street, E.C.)

Church of England.

Rev. Dr. Hughes-Games, Vicar of Holy Trinity, Hull, referring to increased responsibilities in West Hull, where, within the last eight years, a district of 6,000 souls has sprung up, states that a good site has been secured for a mission church.

Bishop Oluwole, one of the three native prelates of the Church in West Africa, is coming to England on a short visit. His ecclesiastical designation is "Assistant Bishop in Western Equatorial Africa," the diocesan being, of course, Bishop Tugwell.

The total sum contributed to the Dean of Peterborough's Fund for meeting the deficit in the C.M.S. accounts at the end of March, 1902, is £24,977 14s. 7d. Whatever may be the precise position of this year's accounts, the old deficit has been almost swept away.

The English Churchman announces that the sum of £10,000 has been left by the widow of the late Mr. Charles Hamilton Edmund Cowell for augmentation of poor livings in the diocese of Sodor and Man. A further sum of £500 has been bequeathed to the Manx Church Sustentation Fund by Major Stephen, late Mayor of Douglas.

The congregation of St. John's, Blackheath, have been voting on the question whether a surpliced choir should be substituted for the present one. The vicar, Rev. Canon Marshall, felt that "this was one of the matters about which the clergyman had no right to force his own views upon the people," and, consequently, issued voting papers, which resulted in twenty-six for and fifty-two against the suggested change.

Congregational.

With regard to the scheme drafted for reconstituting the Congregational Union of England and Wales and electing a council of 300 persons representative of the county unions, &c., it is proposed that the report shall be remitted to the county or district unions and the churches for consideration before anything definite is done.

Rev. J. Jameson, after five years of successful work, has resigned the position of missioner for the Yorkshire Congregational Union Special Missions. The report recently presented told of much good accomplished. The gatherings have been mighty in power. The winning of drunkards and Sabbath-breakers of the self-righteous and the indifferent, has proclaimed the work to be of the Holy Spirit. The resignation was accepted with great regret; several of the ministers and delegates spoke in high terms of the great blessing that has attended the missioner's efforts.

Baptist.

A new Baptist chapel has been opened at Morecambe. Rev. Chas. Williams took part in the services. Over £2,000 has been raised towards the £4,500 required to defray the cost of the building.

Rev. Arthur Robinson has accepted a unanimous call to the co-pastorate, with Rev. G. Roberts Hern, of Lake Road and London Road Churches, Portsmouth, and trusts to commence his ministry there in the early autumn.

The stone-laying ceremony of the new school chapel at Bognor took place on Wednesday week. Revs. T. Hancocks, W. D. Ross, and other friends took part. The total proceeds in gifts and promises amounted to £228.

The centenary of the Sunday-school at Rugby is to be celebrated on May 10. It is hoped to arrange a reunion of old scholars from all parts of the country. Particulars may be had from Mr. William Shaw, 33, Grosvenor Road, Rugby.

At the advanced age of eighty, Mr. Wickers, the esteemed church visitor at the East London Tabernacle, has resigned. He has been connected with the church since its foundation forty-four years ago. At a recent meeting of the congregation earnest testimony was borne to the good word so long carried on by Mr. Wickers.

Bournemouth and Lymington district of Baptist churches recently held the quarterly meeting at Ashley, near Lymington. There was a large attendance of delegates. Rev. G. D. Hooper (president) was chairman for the day. Mr. W. Haydon was chosen president for the ensuing year. In the evening, interesting, instructive, and highly important addresses were given by Revs. G. D. Hooper, W. G. Hailstone, and R. B. Morrison, and Mr. Haydon.

Rev. A. H. Tolhurst began his work in Bradford last Sunday as superintendent of the newly-formed Baptist Central Mission. The mission will be worked from two centres, Bethel Chapel, Infirmary Street, the home of social and benevolent work, and Westgate New Hall, the Old Westgate Baptist Chapel, which has been transformed into a modern hall. The district abounds in slums; there is a large Irish population, and a considerable number of Jews. The work is full of difficulties, but the committee hope to receive such support and encouragement as will enable them to do something towards Christianizing the masses that live in the congested streets.

Methodist.

Mr. W. P. Hartley has sent a contribution of £500 to Mr. E. C. Rawlings, president of the Primitive Methodist Council for London, to be utilized for church extension and for the reduction of burdensome debts. The grants to be made will be in proportion to the amounts contributed locally.

The annual census of membership in the Wesleyan Church shows that there are 468,072 full and accredited members, with some 34,200 on probation, and 91,043 young persons who are meeting in junior society classes. The net increase in full membership is 4,847, as against 8,423 reported last year.

The allocation of £20,000 from the Wesleyan Twentieth Century Fund for educational work has led to the erection of numerous new day and Sunday schools, and to the enlargement of existing premises in all parts of the Connexion. The Education Committee has dealt with no fewer than sixty cases, involving an actual expenditure of £112,233.

Arrangements are being made in various Wesleyan circuits for the observance of the Bi-Centenary of the birth of John Wesley, on June 17. Special services will be held at Epworth, his birthplace. It is expected that crowds of people will attend at that historic place. Rev. Charles H. Kelly is to preach and speak, and Rev. N. Curnock will also address the meetings. On the same day, services will be held at Wesley's Chapel, City Road, N.

Presbyterian.

Towards the £100,000 Twentieth Century Fund, which is being raised by the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, the churches in the southern province (including London) have raised £32,196, of which over £28,000 has been actually paid, while in the northern province (which includes Liverpool and Manchester) the sum of £52,822 has been promised and £47,163 paid.

The statistics prepared for presentation to the forthcoming Synod will show a membership of 79,620, against 78,024 in the previous year, an increase of 1,596. The income amounted to £298,527, against £380,852 in 1891, which included a bequest of £20,000. The congregations have risen to 332. The Sunday scholars number 84,807, an increase of 2,840. The church debts amount to £110,072. The sittings number 170,984, of which 65,269 are let.

Society of Friends.

Mr. and Mrs. G. Cadbury have presented to the Society of Friends their former residence Woodbrooke, Selly Oak, with a park of twelve acres, together with an endowment of £12,000 for management and upkeep, as a permanent settlement for training in religious work. Accommodation will be provided speedily for forty students. The building is to be partly remodelled and a lecture hall added. Dr. J. Rendel Harris, who will be the first lecturer, has presented a handsome library of books. The gift was made at a Conference of Friends on Saturday last.

The Salvation Army.

A Rescue Home has been opened in Strasburg.

A Home for discharged prisoners is being opened this month in Holland.

An estate of one thousand acres has been left as a legacy for the work of the Army in Australia.

A party of twenty-one emigrants are leaving the Army's "Darkest England" Colony at Hadleigh, Essex, this week for Canada. These men have all been taken from the ranks of the unemployed, and trained to farm or artisan labour on the colony.

Open-air work was commenced for the season at Howard Street Gospel Mission, S.W., on Good Friday. Among other features of the day was a Conference, held in the evening. Mr. E. Moffatt Soames writes:—"The day was one of rich blessing."

Mr. Richard Fifield (colporteur in charge) has issued a short statement of the work at Pirbright Chapel, Woking. Of the Sunday services, special evangelistic efforts, and the work among the young, encouraging mention is made, and the operations have evidently been a means of grace to many.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. J. Shepherdson, a prominent Newcastle Congregationalist. He acted for twenty-four years as treasurer of the Durham and Northumberland County Association, and was Sunday-school superintendent, deacon, and secretary of West Clayton Street Church.—Alderman William Highfield Jones, of Wolverhampton, a deacon of Snow Hill Congregational Church for nearly forty-eight years. He was the author of several works of local interest, including a history of Congregationalism in Wolverhampton and the district.—At Hackney, aged 82, Rev. Daniel Davis, a diligent pastor for over forty years in villages in the west and south-west of England.

Whitehead Convalescent Home.—The first annual report of the Belfast and Northern Counties Railway Convalescent Home, at Whitehead, shows that during the year forty-one people were in residence, and that the beds were occupied 691 times. The Home is beautifully situated, having a splendid view of Belfast Lough. It is also most comfortably furnished. It is to be regretted that, owing to the initial expenses being necessarily heavy, a small balance appears on the wrong side of the financial statement. Mrs. Kerr, Greenisland, is the superintendent.

Welsh Notes.

The Council of the South Wales Temperance Association at its last meeting at Porthcawl passed a resolution expressing its strong condemnation of the utterances of the Prime Minister in his reply to the deputation of licensed victuallers which recently appeared before him.

The Welsh Forward Movement still continues to make satisfactory progress. On April 2 a fine new hall was opened at Barry Dock, which is estimated to cost £4,000. Sitting accommodation is provided for 800 people. This is the second hall opened in the Barry district within the last few months.

The Free Church Council of Rhosllanerchrugog, in Denbighshire, have passed a resolution strongly protesting against the running of electric trams on the Lord's Day. The resolution declares that Sunday drinking would be facilitated by the running of the cars. Further, young people will be tempted to neglect the proper observance of the Sabbath, and the new departure, in the opinion of the committee, introduces into Wales a custom which the Welsh people deplore and resent.

The inhabitants of Llanfynydd, in Carmarthenshire, have decided to erect a memorial over the grave of Morgan Rhys, the well-known Welsh hymnologist. At least five of the best-known hymns in the Welsh language are from the pen of Morgan Rhys. One especially takes the same rank in the hymnology of the Principality as "Rock of Ages" does in the English tongue.

Personalia.

Dr. A. T. Pierson has deferred his sailing for America until May 16, on account of the China Inland Mission anniversary on May 12.

Dr. Baedeker is returning to England this week after two months' labours on the Continent. The centres visited by this veteran worker in the course of this tour comprise Flushing, St. Petersburg, Berlin, and Blankenburg.

Rev. J. C. Lawson, so well known in connection with his work on behalf of famine widows and orphans in Aligarh, N.W.P., India, is now on his way to England, and would be glad of opportunities to tell of the present state of the country and of his industrial settlement. Communications should be addressed, care of Foreign Missions Agency, 30, Norfolk Street, London, W.C.

Kilburn Hall.—On Easter Monday a season of refreshing and help from the Lord was experienced at Kilburn Hall. A goodly number came together for the afternoon meeting, which was presided over by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch. Sir Robert Anderson gave an address on Titus ii., in which some very practical and heart-searching truths were presented. Dr. McKilliam followed, basing his remarks on Phil. iii. 1-10. Very sweet and helpful were the lessons drawn from the life of the great apostle. At the evening meeting the hall was crowded. Mr. J. E. Taylor spoke on Philip the Evangelist—as a man of good report, of prayer, of faith, of wisdom, of obedience, full of the Holy Ghost, ready to do God's bidding, full of power. Dr. McKilliam followed on the life of faith in the believer, drawing some stimulating and instructive lessons from Hebrews xi. Rev. F. S. Webster spoke from 1 Kings x. A characteristic address from Mr. Ned Wright brought the meeting to a close, and many said as they left the hall, "This has been one of Kilburn's best." G. Andrews.

AMONG THE MANY CASES RECENTLY PUBLISHED, the following will especially appeal to our readers.

A young woman aged 30, was accidentally shot in the eyes when two years old by a sister, and since then has suffered great pain, owing to some of the shots being left at the back of the eyes. Her mother is dead, and her father, an old man of 80, is very infirm, and has two other children to support. Contributions to this peculiarly sad case will be gratefully received by Rev. J. Pullein-Thompson, Hon. Sec., The National Blind Relief Society, 27, Tite Street, S.W.; or at the Office of "The Christian."

Notes & Comments

 Messrs. Morgan & Scott receive, acknowledge in The Christian, and transmit, donations sent to them in aid of any accredited Societies and Missions. To avoid misapprehension, it is added that no charge of any kind is ever made on such donations.

To "the Man in the Street." Changes in the conditions of Christian work during the last half-century were vividly illustrated at the jubilee meetings of the Open-Air Mission. Much success and blessing do not, however, mean finality, but rather the opening out of wider possibilities for service. In addition to the splendid direct results attained, Prebendary Fox traced in the increased orderliness of holiday crowds an indirect outcome of such effort. Yet the Bishop of Durham expressed the opinion, in a letter, that all the progress made does not keep pace with the increase of population, and that the effective hold of the churches is less than ever it was. The enormous cost of buildings limits many promising organizations. The preacher of the Gospel in the open air has few expenses, while he reaches very many whom no invitation or placard would induce to enter church, chapel, or hall.

The Opportunity of Summer. During the coming summer unlimited opportunities for such service will be at the disposal of God's people; and we earnestly urge that the fact should be laid to heart as it never has been before. In theory Evangelical Christians recognize the duty and privilege, yet in the majority of cases the open-air service is treated as a mere adjunct to that within doors. Nor would it be too much to say that it is frequently relegated to less experienced leaders. There are greater difficulties to be met than in dealing with a seated congregation; but it has been abundantly proved that energy and ability may be expected to lead to more rapid progress than in any other direction.

Pro-Brewers in Parliament. The Battle of the Brewer was inaugurated for the present Session on Friday by a skirmish round the standard of Compensation, Mr. Butcher, M.P., heading the campaign with the usual specious but fallacious pleas for the poor publican. His Bill proposed to supply a fund, approximating to half-a-million per annum, for compensating licence-holders whose licences may have been suppressed for the public good. In opposition, Mr. Whittaker make a good point in unearthing "the very first Licensing Act, passed in 1495," which gave the justices power "to put away all houses" at any time when circumstances demanded it. He properly contended that this right of suppression was "the very bed-rock of our licensing system." The publican, he urged:—

ran a special risk, because there was a special profit attaching to the trade; and wanted the big profits of a risky trade with the security of consols!

The "band of marauders" (as Mr. Butcher called the advocates of Temperance) made a good fight, but were defeated by a Government majority of 133, and the Bill passed its second reading.

The Real Issue. Whether this particular Bill goes forward to a third reading remains to be seen; but it is demonstrated that the Government means to force on this demand for compensation at all hazards, and to restrict the discretionary powers of the licensing magistrates. Whatever the trade likes to do for its own protection mutually among its members, does not concern us, and certainly it is just that those who benefit by the suppression of others should contribute to their less fortunate brethren whose woes lie professedly so near their hearts. But Bung has never proved himself a philanthropist yet, and we doubt if he ever will—at any rate, so long as there is a chance of anyone else doing it for him. It will be a crying shame for the Government to mulct the nation—already groaning under the incubus of the brewery—by any such iniquitous measure as that brought forward by Mr. Butcher; and it behoves Temperance reformers of every shade to rally to the fight—for fight it is bound to be.

The Purification of London. At the annual meeting, last Friday, of the Central Y.M.C.A. (see p. 19), Archdeacon Madden put a very serious proposal before the members. With the thought fresh in his mind of what has been accomplished in Liverpool in the direction of social purity, he told them frankly that if the moral atmosphere of London is to be cleansed, the end will only be gained by Christian men like themselves giving the lie to the libel that they care only for their own souls. He and his friends had patrolled the streets at midnight until they were able to make a public statement that brought shame to the rulers of the city. What had been accomplished in Liverpool could be repeated in London, but it must be undertaken by Christian men. He called for a display of that Christian chivalry which would be willing to do this for Christ's sake. The standard of public opinion should be so raised that men not only dare not snatch a moment's pleasure from a woman's ruin, but dare not allow a woman to be spoken of slightingly.

Revival in Scotland. The fuller account which we are now able to give (see p. 23) of the revival in Banffshire will gladden the hearts of many readers. Conventional ideas of the length of meetings, and even of the mode of conducting them, were swept aside. Many have heard or read of such experiences, but few now living have seen whole companies of men and women neglecting all else in order to attend to spiritual things. The fire is spreading to other towns. An excursion train which was run to Aberdeen last week brought the movement into touch with the work of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander, in that city. The benefit was mutual, at least one of the visitors being converted at the meeting, and the friends who welcomed them being stimulated.

Praying for the Dead. The strong protest which has been entered against the proposed memorial communion at St. Paul's Cathedral, has led to the service being abandoned. Once again there has been evoked, on the part of Romanizers, an attempted justification of the practice of offering masses and prayers for the dead. The most specious plea is that the Jews in the time of Christ offered prayers for the dead, and that our Lord, by taking part in the services of the synagogue, placed His imprimatur upon the custom. But Dr. C. H. H. Wright in his work on the "Intermediate State" (Nisbet) has effectually disposed of this plea, by showing that it is entirely without historic foundation. The practice was not in vogue in our Lord's time, and it only came into practice in later decadent times. There is not a scrap of Scriptural authority for these masses and intercessions. They are purely Romish inventions; the outcome of corrupt doctrine. Prayers can avail nothing for any soul when its time of probation is over and it has gone to the judgment of God.

False Liberty. In his paper on "Hooliganism," read at Sion College last week, Sir Robert Anderson pointed out as one of the chief causes of the lawlessness which abounds amongst young people, the exercise of false liberty. Facts certainly bear out Sir Robert's contention. During recent years a licence has been permitted to youth of both sexes, the results of which we are reaping to-day. The children of respectable people, unhappily, are too frequently allowed to roam the streets until a late hour, while professional idlers are encountered everywhere. The old adage is true! "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do." Sir Robert Anderson proposes that power shall be given to the authorities to clear the streets of idlers. The better thing would be to seek for a revival of true home life. God meant the home life to be the great centre of attraction for children; but the ideal of the home to-day is very low, hence young people wander away and get into mischief. One of England's chief needs is the realization of the sanctity of home life. With this, many problems would solve themselves.

Somaliland. The disastrous reverse which has befallen the British forces in Somaliland indicates that the expedition on hand is no child's play. At the commencement of the campaign, competent officers who had served in the Soudan announced that we were in for a second Soudan war. The sad lessons of the past do not seem to have taught our Egyptian rulers wisdom. It is evident that the policy of full liberty for all under the British flag must be modified in the case of Moslem fanatics. The good of the greatest number should be the first consideration.

Are Missions a Failure? A scathing article on Indian Missions in the last number of the Hibbert Journal has produced a painful impression, and, as Dr. Adeney points out, its influence will be the reverse of helpful to missionary enthusiasm in quarters where already people have little love for the Great Commission.

The worth of the article, as a criticism, however, may be appreciated by a note from Rev. J. W. Horsley:—

Dr. Oldfield is an estimable colleague of mine on the Southwark Board of Guardians who had to be absent from his duties for part of last year owing to a trip to India. But I should hardly have thought that a visit of this duration enabled a very valuable opinion to be formed on the subject in a region of such size and with so many languages and religions.

Criticisms by passing travellers are necessarily unsafe. We have no objection, whatever, to honest criticism of missionary methods, but the hasty generalizations of travellers have frequently been discredited afterwards—not soon enough, however, to prevent a great deal of mischief being done. A chance visitor to a foreign country cannot understand the difficulties of its life and work, and his criticisms must not be taken too seriously. We have known cases in which missionaries have denied themselves for months in order to treat a visitor hospitably, and have only been rewarded afterwards by their guest proclaiming at home that missionaries live expensively and luxuriously!

Undesirable Aliens. Day by day the newspapers announce the arrival in this country of fresh batches of monks and nuns virtually expelled from France, and as they will be soon putting into practice here the methods which have rendered them so undesirable across the Channel, it is well to remember the Bishop of Nancy's terrible denunciation of their exploitation of the orphan workgirls in the Good Shepherd convent. The facts of the scandal need no repetition; after the judgment of the Court of Appeal, the contradiction by the Mother Superior may be taken for what it is worth. "I am inclined to believe," said the Bishop of Nancy, "that what is happening here is also happening in a great number of the houses belonging to this Order, perhaps in all of them." Perhaps in England too, and meanwhile we have no conventual inspection.

Positive and Negative Inspiration. Continuing his course of papers, Concerning the Holy Bible, Canon Vaughan states some further teaching of "our Holy Mother the Church" in regard to certain further important points bearing upon the Scriptures, and in so doing deals with the subject of inspiration, which he defines as—

A supernatural impulse of the Holy Spirit, by which the sacred writers are moved to commit certain truths to writing, and by which they are so illuminated and directed during the process that they cannot err, and write infallibly what God directs.

With this there can be no disagreement, as it at once lifts the Scriptures into a unique position; but a further statement in regard to negative inspiration is less satisfactory:—

The purely negative assistance of the Holy Spirit, safeguarding a man from propounding error and falsehood, is what every Pope enjoys when, as Supreme Teacher, he defines a doctrine concerning faith or morals to be held by the whole Church.

Does not every student know that several of the leading doctrines now held in the Roman fold have been condemned as heretical by one Pope, and afterwards defined as essential by a successor?

Access Only Through the Son. The Unitarians, at their Triennial Conference in Liverpool, bemoaned the fact that the life of their community gave occasion for "grave concern," because of diminished congregations, indifference, and scanty attendance at worship. One of the things specially insisted upon was the need for a more reverent spirit of worship, for more warmth, &c. By the side of this lamentation we have a sketch, in the Morning Leader, of a famous Unitarian service in London, in which the whole thing strikes the journalist as enwrapped with the chill breath of winter. Dr. Martineau admitted the coldness of their services, and sought to justify it. But coldness in worship can never be justified. The fact is that all who approach religion philosophically, and deal with it only with their minds, doom themselves to coldness. The life principle is lacking. God cannot be thus approached. There is only one way of access to Him. "In Christ Jesus we have access by one Spirit unto the Father," and where our Lord's mediation is ignored the avenue of approach to God is firmly closed. That "liberalism" in religion which thinks to make its own terms with God, stands before the world as a sorry failure.

Christ and the Miracles. Professor W. F. Adeney deals, in The Examiner, with the question of our Lord's miracles, and comments upon the fact that most of the modern books which profess to deal with "the Teaching of Jesus" omit nearly all reference to those "mighty works" which are such an outstanding feature of the Gospel history. This "discreet" (?) suppression of a great element in the Gospel, is due either to pronounced rationalism, which entirely rules over the supernatural, or to uncertainty and fear. But, as Professor Adeney points out afresh, the Christ of the Gospels cannot be isolated from His wonderful works, since they are an integral part of His ministry. Some of our Lord's most striking sayings sprang directly out of scenes in which mighty works were the chief feature, and to suppress the one is to mutilate the other. Experience proves that men who do not accept Him wholly, as He is revealed to us in the Bible, rarely accept Him at all in any saving sense.

The Supreme Miracle. The most amazing thing of all, however, is the way in which the Resurrection of our Lord is treated by some who profess to cling passionately to Him as Master. In two Easter utterances by men of reputation, the supreme miracle of the Resurrection is "spiritualized," so as to rob it of that plain meaning which the Church of Christ has always attached to it. And it is frankly stated that the "spiritual" view of the Resurrection leaves us with an undisturbed faith in Christ. We are amazed that any man can cheat himself into such a belief. If the vision of the Risen Christ was only subjective on the part of the disciples, what becomes of objective reality? And what of our Lord's prediction that He would rise again on the third day? And what of the empty tomb? No wonder that "letters from all parts have poured in" asking these questions. To the last question, what became of the body of Jesus, the writer replies, "Our answer is quite simple. We do not know, nor does anyone else. That is one of the secrets of history." And one of the great evidences of the Resurrection is calmly set aside with "we do not know"!! To what shifts are men driven when they break with the obvious truth of Divine Revelation!

The Man "Thoroughly Furnished." There is only one way in which a man can be "thoroughly furnished unto all good works," and specially the work of leading men into the truth; and that is the way of Scripture study under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. This was the Apostle Paul's exhortation to Timothy, to continue in the study of the Holy Scriptures. Nothing can take the place of this. There is, of necessity, a great place in teaching and preaching for the introduction of spiritual experience. The truth indeed ought always to be witnessed to by personal experience. Yet, as a recent writer has well said:—

No preacher can live by the constant iteration of a spiritual experience, however great and decisive. If he tries to do so, he becomes monotonous and unimpressive, even to himself.

This is just the great weakness of those forms of Christian teaching which depend chiefly upon experience. A work that is to endure, must be based upon the solid foundation of Divine truth as revealed in the Bible.

King Edward's Visit to the Pope.

THE one jarring note in King Edward's visit to Italy is his going to see the Pope. It has damped considerably the enthusiasm of the Italians for him. The subject gave rise to animated discussion in the Quirinal, and at Montecitario and Campidoglio. King Edward himself, I do not suppose, at all realizes the seriousness of what appears only a visit of courtesy to "a good old man;" neither, of course, does the English Government, nor the English people. Yet his visit is a tremendous embarrassment to King Victor Emmanuel III., to Italy's Government, and to Italy's people. If the King, the Government, and the Mayor of Rome refused to recognise the Pope at all during the recent Jubilee celebrations; if, on a former Jubilee occasion, Signor Crispi turned out of office Prince Ruspolo, then Mayor of Rome, because he acknowledged the Pope, and turned out of office, by Royal decree, every mayor throughout Italy who did the same, can it be imagined that it is nothing to Italy's King and Government and people that King Edward should go to the Vatican? The thing is incredible.

The visit is an affront, as has been well recognised in England, to King Victor Emmanuel III., whose friend and guest King Edward is. It is an affront to Italy, which is the steadfast friend of England. It is an affront to King Edward himself, for he has had to ask an audience. This is a piece of the Papal etiquette of this pretender to the throne of Italy. The great King of England to ask to be received by a man who personally is despised in Italy, and hated as the implacable enemy of the country! I think it brings indignity upon King Edward.

It is an affront to England as a nation, for whatever may have been ultimately arranged, the Pope at first refused to receive him if he came from the Quirinal, refused to see him if he came from the English Embassy—which is an Embassy to the Quirinal and not to the Vatican—and insisted that he should come to see him starting from the Irish Roman Catholic College, or from the Palace of Prince Massinio, which was the course pursued when King Edward, as Prince of Wales, visited the Vatican, under the Pontificate of Pio Nono. By many in England, and by many in Italy, the visit is regarded as out of harmony with King Edward's Coronation oath. View it from any standpoint, nothing can justify it. It is a gratuitous insult to all concerned who merit consideration, and it is a gratification only to those who are not more the enemies of Italy than they are of England.

Questions Answered.—II.

By Rev. A. T. PIERSON, D.D.

[Some questions of correspondents concern the connection or relation of God to sin and moral evil.]

SOME difficulties need only a proper understanding, being based on a misconception of Biblical terms or statements. For example: "I the Lord create evil." Isa. xlv. 7. This does not mean moral evil, but disaster, punishment; what is opposed, not to goodness, but to prosperity. Peace is the word used in opposition to evil: "I make peace," &c.

If a father gives a boy a command, and the boy disobeys, and the father finds the rod necessary, and cuts a birch stick for the purpose, he may make the rod of correction, but is not responsible for the disobedience! God is represented as a moral Governor, and as such is bound by His own nature to visit retribution on evil-doers. In this sense, He as truly creates evil as good—both punishment and reward are from Him as the two corresponding sanctions of His government. But the Word of God expressly teaches that no man is to charge the responsibility of his sin on God. Compare 1 Cor. x. 1-13 with James i. 13-14. God is not only never the tempter of man, but He is the succourer of the tempted. He makes a way to escape, that we may be able to bear the temptation. The moment we undertake to resist the devil, we have the whole Godhead on our side. God is the ally, not the adversary, of him who is in conflict with sin, and resolved not to yield.

DID SIN EVER ENTER HEAVEN?

The Bible nowhere teaches this. Much more of our current theology comes from Milton than from the Word of God. In Jude 6 we read of "angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation." This is about all the clear light we have upon the matter. Christ's words, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven," are a reference to the visible heaven, and to Satan's sudden defeat and casting down, as the falling of a lightning bolt from the clouds. He has no reference to heaven as God's dwelling-place.

As to the other question, how sin is to be kept out of heaven, the Bible is silent. We are told, however—Rev. xxi. 27—that "there shall in no wise enter into the New Jerusalem anything that defileth, worketh abomination, or maketh a lie"—that is, anything impure, idolatrous, or false. It is probable that our present discipline in learning to resist temptation is partially intended to make us strong hereafter, both by familiarity with the way of its approach, and by the formation of the habit of resistance. There is a vast difference between the innocence of Adam before sin, and a saint's holiness, which is reached through conflict with sin.

Moreover, the Bible distinctly teaches that Satan is to be cast into the lake of fire (Rev. xx. 10), which can mean nothing less than his final destruction as the foe of God and man. The tempter will thenceforth be no more permitted to exert his power over saints. Moreover, the evil that is in our hearts will no more be there as a constant snare and suggestion of wrong. Our sanctification will be perfected. Our eternal safety lies in our eternal identification with Christ as vitally united with Him.

HAS GOD ANY COMPLICITY WITH, OR RESPONSIBILITY FOR, MAN'S SIN?

For example, it is objected that in the Lord's Prayer we are taught to pray: "Lead us not into temptation." Does God lead anyone into temptation? Does not James say (i. 13): God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth He any man?

We may settle it at once, as already said, that nowhere in the Bible is God represented as the author of sin, in any sense. Even His hardening of Pharaoh's heart was only a judicial withdrawal of softening influences.

PROHIBITED TERRITORY.

But we are taught—(1) That there is a forbidden ground, where we are particularly exposed to sin, a territory where especially Satan controls and reigns. "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation" (Matt. xxvi. 41). The figure is that of prohibited territory, into which we must not venture; and where, if we do, God's protection is largely withdrawn from us; and, when we do so venture, God sometimes abandons us judicially to Satan's power, as He sent an evil spirit to possess Saul when he had defied His commands, and indulged daring disobedience.

The Book of Ruth illustrates this. Elimelech—whose name means "My God is King"—to avoid famine in Judea went to Moab, a forbidden territory, thus violating the command of his King. God's hand was withdrawn, and Satan was permitted to kill him, and afterward his two sons, who had even married Moabites; Naomi came back to the land of Judea, leaving Satan's territory, and then her prosperity returned.

I have long thought that we might understand that petition in the Lord's Prayer better by a different punctuation, and perhaps by supplying a sort of ellipsis, thus: AND LEAD ME—NOT INTO TEMPTATION—the place of severe testing, &c. "Lead me"—not judicially into severe trial of faith and loyalty to God. Read Romans i. 24, 26, 28: God "gave them over"—to uncleanness, to vile affections, to a reprobate mind—three successive abandonments. Psalm xvii. 4: "By the word of Thy lips I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer." There are paths where Satan specially treads. Compare Psalm xci., where the apposite thought is presented of a safe shelter in God, where the snare of the fowler is not spread, where the lion and adder—names of Satan—are trampled under foot. Compare also Isaiah xxxv. 8-10, where we are told of a territory—the Lord's Highway of Holiness—where we may walk safely, and where no lion or ravenous beast stalks in search of prey.

THE PLACE OF SAFETY.

It will be found very helpful to examine both Testaments with reference to the teaching on these two territories—that in which Satanic power is manifest and dominant, and that in which the saint finds comparative immunity from the shafts of the Destroyer. Egypt seems to be the type of the one, and Canaan of the other, with Caleb in his victory over the sons of Anak the type of the conquering saint.

By the way, we met recently in Rev. E. Paxton Hood's little book on "Milton," a beautiful suggestion:—"Man is subject to the temptation of two devils—the devil of sensuality and sense, the devil of intellectuality and spirit. The delineation of the one is in Comus, of the other in Satan. The latter is a rare subtle, abstracting spirit; the other is a universal, visible, and materialising one." (See "Milton," by E. P. Hood; p. 87.)

The Bible contains not less than a thousand separate suggestions about God's methods of escape from sin and the salutary discipline of conflict with evil. All highest virtue is developed out of difficulty. Patience, humility, and love outrank all other graces. Patience is the outcome of suffering endured as seeing Him who is invisible. Humility is the result of frequent suffering, through the humiliation of pride by failure, defeat, and rebuke. Love comes into its noblest growth through the suppression of selfish desires and indulgences. All these are painful processes, and some, like Theodore Parker, have taught that sin was necessary to the perfect character—"a fall forward." This is, of course, an extreme view; but it is the alchemy of grace that, out of such unpromising material as temptation, ultimate good should be wrought, in making us proof against sin.

WHEN THE DEVIL TEMPTED CHRIST IN THE WILDERNESS, WAS THERE, FOR THE TIME BEING, A POSSIBILITY OF CHRIST SINNING? WAS THE TEMPTATION A REAL INDUCEMENT FROM SATAN TO SIN?

"Christ was tempted in all points like as we are—apart from sin" (Heb. iv. 15)—that is, so far as was possible to any being in whom was no tendency to sin. The temptations of Christ addressed normal, natural, and innocent desires and aspirations, but suggested wrong ways of gratifying or indulging them.

This was exactly so in Adam's temptations in Eden. There were as yet in him no corrupt tendencies to appeal to; so Satan addressed natural desires, the appetite of the body for food, the appetite of the mind for knowledge, but he suggested disobedience as the method of indulgence. The Word of God nowhere affirms that Christ has been tempted at every point just as sinful man has been; but that, apart from sin, His temptations covered the whole range of our own. And the great point is that He so far suffered under Satanic assaults that He can sympathize with all who so suffer; and that, having triumphed over Satanic lies and wiles, He is able to succour every tempted soul. All we need is the assurance of sympathy and succour, and that assurance we have.

One seldom gives opportunity for questions, without the subject of predestination and election coming to the front. The old cavil constantly reappears, that the Bible teaches that there are

"INFANTS IN HELL NOT A SPAN LONG," &C.

Of course, the Bible says no such thing, nor does even any advocate of election that we know of. This was the retort of John Wesley, the Arminian, against Toplady, the Calvinist. Waxing hot in controversy, Wesley said to Toplady: "If your Calvinism is true, there are infants in hell not a span long!" To construe such a retort from a foe in argument, into a doctrine held by the party against whom the retort was hurled, is both unjust and foolish. It is a good example of the irony of history, and shows how completely, in course of time, facts get inverted and perverted, and it is difficult to get a correct version of them.

As to election generally, the best solution of that mystery that we know of is that which regards the substance of it as found in the fact of God's precedence in everything connected with salvation. He makes the first advances, to which the believer's acts and choices are only responses. God first loved us, first chose us, first called us. Our love is the answer to His, our choice of Him is the consequence of His choice of us, and our obedience is the answering conformity to His call. Moreover, He purposed all these advances before He made them, and there was never a time when He did not so purpose.

"The Christian."—Rev. J. Tolefree Parr writes:—"In earnestly commending The Christian, I feel I am furthering my work—the deepening of the spiritual life and quickening the passion for souls in believers. If only Christian people would read such a paper, I am sure they would be quickened and inspired."

The Church and the People.

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.

HAPPILY Canon Hensley Henson's presence in Wesley Chapel last week is not the portentous novelty that it would have been even ten years ago. But his speech is certainly a memorable sign of the times. We do not forget that it requires a good many swallows before we can fairly reckon that summer is come. But it is much to have a Church dignitary of the Canon's high reputation speaking the words of truth and soberness, of sanity and Christian charity, such as he addressed to the Wesleyan Methodists, and through them to the Christian Churches generally, on Wednesday night. They are the more remarkable because of the time at which they come. I will not enter here into the causes which have led to a more acute stage in the differences between the Establishment and the Free Churches at the present time. A good deal will have to be done before the effect of that unfortunate controversy is removed. But the sound of a voice so wise and gracious just now is peculiarly welcome. Here are his words:—

CANON HENSLEY HENSON'S EIRENICON.

All the workers of the great army of God ought to be habitually associated together, and he was optimist enough to believe that the cloud was lifting, and that the day was not far distant when Christian people of all the great Evangelical Churches would recognise the manifest and obvious duty of drawing together in common fellowship and work under Christ's banner.

To this I for one heartily say Amen, and I do it with all the more pleasure because of my remembrance of the position taken by the Canon himself in former times. The first time I ever met him was at a gathering in Sion College, when the then Bishop of Worcester, Dr. Perowne, read a paper singularly catholic in spirit and liberal in view on the vexed question of clerical orders. Canon Hensley Henson at that time was strong in his defence of the Anglican position. My own contribution to the debate was a simple reminder that the first Gentile Church was founded neither by Apostles nor by men bearing Apostolic commission, but by humble Christians having no official status, but possessed by loyalty to the Master for whom they had suffered the loss of all things. For His sake they had been driven out of Jerusalem, and yet such was their earnestness in preaching Him that the disciples were first called Christians at Antioch. Their position then seems to be precisely that which Canon Hensley Henson takes now.

UNDENOMINATIONALISM.

But here we can come upon the crucial question of undenominationalism. "Practically," says Canon Henson, "all distinctions of denominational doctrine were unimportant."

A broad assertion like this cannot be accepted without clear definition of this word "doctrine," even though qualified by the preceding adjective. In truth it is the very absence of this distinct definition which has made the term, "undenominational" the centre of much unhappy controversy. The "denominational distinction" which may be effaced is not that which separates the believer in Christ from the unbeliever, but simply that which divides the humble believers in Christ as Saviour and Lord from those who do not trust in His sacrifice or bow to His Divine authority. It really corresponds to the regimental distinction in an army. On the field of battle soldiers are forced to care more for the general standard of the army than for the flag of a particular regiment.

It is the same kind of feeling which Canon Hensley Henson, as I understand him, desires to see predominant among the Evangelical communities in this country. He will certainly find numbers of us who are prepared to subordinate everything else to the manifestation of this unity in Christ and for Christ. But it is fatuous or something worse to suppose that men who believe that they owe their all to Christ will be tolerant of any compromise of His claims upon their allegiance and service. The late Dr. Martineau, in a very remarkable but well-known passage, confesses how deeply he is in sympathy with the men who hold the opposite creed to his own, and then adds:—

In devotional literature and religious thought I find nothing of ours that does not pale before Augustine, Tauler, and Pascal. And in the poetry of the Church it is the Latin or the German, or the lines of Charles Wesley, or of Keble, that fasten on my memory and heart, and make all else seem poor and cold.

It has been argued from this very remarkable expression of Christian sentiment that intellectual differences should be regarded as of no importance, that among men agreeing in all the serious aims of the Christian life there are sure to be found great varieties of opinion, and that these ought not to prevent the union of men of spiritual thought and purpose. But the very conditions of the case forbid that in a Church of Christ there should be any compromise of His claims.

ONE IS OUR MASTER, EVEN CHRIST.

This is the one truth on which it seems to me peculiarly necessary to insist at the present crisis. There have been, and still are, so many discussions of what may be described as the metaphysics of theology, that the idea may well suggest itself to many minds that they all answer to the Apostle's description of "oppositions of science falsely so called." What is worse still, it may be supposed that the real test of Christian fellowship is intellectual rather than spiritual agreement. The point on which it seems necessary to insist, always and everywhere, is that love is the fulfilling of the law. Here is the line of difference between the Church of Christ and the world outside.

The lessons which we have to teach are twofold. First, that we, being many, in intellectual opinion, in Church government, and in our modes of action, are nevertheless parts of one and the same Church. Second, that that Church has one message which it is commissioned to give to the world, and that about it it can admit no compromise, no concealment, no toning down, no show of a charity which simply would be treason to the Master whom it serves.

OUR CATHOLIC CREED

is this: "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that, whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." We can never be content, under any conditions, to treat that as an open question. It is true, or it is a mere dream of excited imagination. Being true, it is the most wonderful truth the world can learn, and woe is unto us if we preach not this Gospel.

Of the effect of such preaching by a church acting on the spirit which Canon Henson commends on the masses who at present are indifferent and hostile, there need be no anxiety. At present they are addressed by churches which they regard as rivals, each struggling for predominance, and often speaking in contradictory voices. Of course, it is easy to show that their judgment is often unfair. Not the less is there so much to justify it that it is an unquestioned hindrance to our common work. To substitute for these varied and often conflicting appeals, the strong, emphatic testimony of the one Church proclaiming the same Saviour, would be to make a very decided advance in the great work of winning the people for Christ.

Open-Air Preaching.*

By Mr. JOHN GALT.

GET AT THE WORK IN HAND.

WE have heard of a speaker who once asked for permission to say a few words before he began to speak; we hope that he was not an open-air preacher, but we cannot forget that a good many of "that ilk" do something very similar at times, with the important difference, however, that they do not ask for permission.

It is a great pity to beat about the bush in the open air, for anything of that kind is sure to make an audience fidgetty and impatient. Besides, if a man has something of real importance to say he will usually find it sufficiently difficult to get enough time in which to say it. If he has not got something important to say, what on earth is he pretending to be an open-air preacher for? It is always well to get at the work in hand as quickly as possible. An audience is always disposed to be pleased with a speaker who goes straight to work, who gives the impression that he is going to say something, and that he is going to say it at once Having gone straight to the subject, let us continue to steadily

MAKE PROGRESS.

If our message is a message from God, and urgently important to our hearers, we shall do well to remember that the King's business requires haste, and that marking time is not marching on to war. Besides, the people like movement in an address just as they do in a fight, a race, a story, or a play. Of course, no one will be so foolish as to mistake rapidity of utterance for the progress we are thinking about; if it were, some of us would make progress enough. What is wanted is that each point shall be dealt with as effectively as possible in the least possible time; without hurry or panic, it is true, but at the same time without dawdling or lingering. When a point has been dealt with, sufficiently for the purpose in view, we should pass on, and refuse to be tempted to keep at it just because there is something more that could be said about it; to do so is like hitting an adversary when he is down, or like "killing dead snakes."

STOP WHEN FINISHED.

This will be found to be rather a difficult matter, especially to highly nervous people who feel very keenly the importance of what they are speaking about. It is a difficulty with many to know just when they have finished, but a little care and forethought will be sufficient to put that matter right. What is really necessary is to know beforehand what we really want to do; if we do know this, we shall soon find out when we have managed to do it, or, what is almost as important, when we are past hope of being able to do it. There are many good reasons why we should stop whenever we have finished—if we do not know of any, we have only to ask the man who is down to speak after us—but it will be enough for our present purpose to point out that if we do stop, as suggested, we shall leave our hearer face to face with the full force of all our effort.

* From Open-Air Preaching: What to Avoid and What to Do. (1s. Partridge.) This admirable little manual deserves to be widely read by those who are denied personal training for Christian work; and we cordially commend it also to the notice of those who are charged with the guidance of youthful helpers. An experienced servant of God has put on record in terse, luminous fashion the lessons which he and others have learned during years in which they have been richly owned of God.

The Drink Curse in India.—Writing on the traffic in Madras, Rev. K. R. Gopalah Aiyar, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, Vepery, says:—"The Hindus are as a nation total abstainers; but English education has made Indians to imitate the vices of the Europeans, and leave out their many virtues. England and the Continent send out to India, by almost every steamer, gallons of liquor to be consumed by the people of India. What a shame for the Christian England to manufacture and send out to the heathen India liquor! Are the people of England alive to their responsibilities? If they are, they ought to take immediate steps to stop the exportation of such traffic to India."

"Our Daily Bread."

SUNDAY, May 3. Job xxvii.

THERE are reasons for thinking that the former part of this chapter only belongs to Job, and that the latter, beginning perhaps at verse 8, is the missing speech of Zophar, who otherwise is dropped out altogether from this third cycle of speeches. One is almost driven to this, as otherwise Job takes up in this chapter a position and line of thought, which are altogether antagonistic to his former contention. There is no difficulty in supposing that some error has crept into the MSS. of this ancient book, and that some sentence like xx. 1, has been accidentally omitted.

In accordance with this view, Zophar sums up the case for the friends. Turning to them he asks, why their united attestations are to count for nothing with Job (12), and goes on to reiterate the former assertions of the inevitable calamity which must follow on the heels of sin (13, &c.).

A man may say, "Soul, eat, drink, and be merry." But how can the soul be satisfied with a barnful of grain? In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, when God awakes, He will destroy the fabric of worldly ambition (19-21).

Let us warn men of the unsubstantialness of all that can be gathered under these changing skies. Only those who are one with the unchanging Christ, as in old Roman walls the mortar becomes one with the stone, are beyond the blight of time.

MONDAY, May 4. Job xxviii.

Here is a most minute and graphic description of mining for precious metals, as it was known in the ancient world. Men make an end of darkness by their torches (3), and break open a shaft far away from human habitations (4). They hang in the descending cage, swinging to and fro, in the black darkness, winning their bread from the heart of the earth, bringing back to the surface sapphires as stones, and gold as dust (5, 6). The path of the miner, as he steals along the narrow passages, cut in the living rock, is hidden from the keen eye of the falcon, and is never trodden by the beast of prey (7-10). And the streams which would break in to drown the miner and arrest his work, have to be carefully bound up (11).

But even the miner cannot discover the hidden wisdom of God. However deep the shaft be driven into the earth, however minute the search, however lavish the price offered in exchange. All the priceless treasures of Golconda or Peru can never outweigh that hidden wisdom which God ordained before the worlds unto our glory, which was hidden from the eyes of the wise and prudent, but revealed to babes (1 Cor. ii. 6-16).

But God knoweth; yea, He has always known! Go back to the origin of things, before the winds were first let out of His treasuries, and the waters were meted out to fill the basin of the seas, before the first rain-shower fell, or the earliest murmur of thunder rolled over the world, then wisdom was with Him (compare 23-27 with Prov. viii. 22-31).

Next, we have a definition which shows that, in its true and deepest sense, wisdom is not intellectual, but moral. It consists in that reverential love which dare not sin against the gentle Spirit of God, and in that departure from evil which must result when the heart is drawn into the circle of God's love. Live with God, till you love what He loves, and dread to grieve Him (Prov. ii. 6).

TUESDAY, May 5. Job xxix.

How many men have uttered the opening words of this chapter. Looking back on a beautiful youth or early manhood, which has become overcast with dark and brooding clouds, they have said, "Oh that I were as in the months of old!" It seems as though we can never recover the lost ground. Yet there is the assurance that, under conditions of penitence, God will restore the years that the canker-worm has eaten.

Let us ask Him to put us back where we were, for this is what David meant when he said, "He restoreth my soul." Then God will watch over us for good (2). His lamp will shine upon our heads, and by His light we shall walk in darkness (3). Then His friendship will be in our tent, and His light and love will be the atmosphere of our daily conversation (4, 5). The graphic description which ensues of the life of a godly man is full of exquisite touches; and may well depict what will follow still, for the most part, when a man's ways please the Lord.

What a picture of that old-world life, when age was held in high respect, and character in yet higher! We have a glimpse of the assembly of the elders at the city-gate, and the respect paid to such a man as Job, when he entered the circle, and the young stopped speaking, and the older men stood up. We see the steps of the beneficence of those early days, when the noblest of the people counted it their perquisite to minister personally to the widow and the fatherless, to the needy and the blind. We are permitted to read the secret hope of such a man, anticipating that he would remain fresh and fruitful to the end, because he had spread his roots to the river (Psa. i. 3). It is a beautiful picture, and will be realised in those through whom God's rivers flow forth to the sandy wastes of the world (John vii. 37-39). Let us pray, Lord make our life like this!

WEDNESDAY, May 6. Job xxx.

How sad the descent for Job from the respect of former days to the contumely to which he was now exposed. Formerly old men arose to show him respect (xxix. 8), now his juniors and men of base and ignoble birth derided him.

In vv. 1-8, the low origin of his detractors is minutely described. In vv. 9-15 we seem to see them breaking in on the privacy of his grief, casting off decent restraint, gazing on his wounds, and chasing his honour as the wind.

In vv. 16-23 the sufferer turns again to God. Shall we say that he upbraids Him? Does the clay remonstrate too bitterly with its Fashioner? Is there an unwarrantable tone of desperation in this complaint? Ah, but you have not suffered as Job; with as little to explain God's dealings as He had; or perhaps you would not say so. Yet there is undeniably something inexpressibly sad in these complaints.

Amid all other griefs, the sense of an awful loneliness fell upon him. He had been so willing to help others, but now none helped him. Lover and friend stood afar off (24-31). Yes: this, too, may be the lot of some sad heart that glances down this page. Through the shadowed cypress path the steps tread solitarily, where a group, or at least one other, in other days went beside. But thou art not so alone as it seems. "Jesus Himself drew nigh and went with them, but their eyes were holden." God was never nearer to His child than in these sad hours.

THURSDAY, May 7. Job xxxi.

At this point Job rose to his feet, and lifting up his hands toward heaven, took in Oriental fashion a solemn oath—"the oath of clearing." Notice the recurring phrases, If I . . . if my . . . if mine. We may well go through these various points of solemn asseveration, and ask how far they are true of ourselves. Have we made a covenant with our eyes? (1.) It is only those who are pure of heart who can have any portion with God, or any heritage with El-Shaddai (2). Have we kept far from the vanity and deceitfulness of the world? (5.) Can we bear the test of God's scales in this matter? (6.) Have we been perfectly pure in our relations to other men and women? (9-12.) Have we been careful of our servants, listening to their cause, and not showing pride of place, since all are equal in His sight? (13-15.)

Have we responded to the need of the poor, sharing our morsel, warming them with our fleece, using our influence for rather than against them? (16-23.) Have we always recognised that God, and not gold, was our confidence? (24.) Have we kept ourselves from the idols of the market-place, as jealously as Job did from the worship of sun and moon, which was so rife in those far-off days (26-28)? Have we been pitiful to our enemies (29), generous in hospitality (32), frank and honest in confessing wrong (33), fearless of the multitude (34)?

Job was prepared to put his signature to every word that he had said, and if his enemy had any indictment against him, he would wear this also as a crown. Clearly his conscience did not condemn him, and yet even such as he acknowledged that he was far from perfect (ix. 20). And if he took up such an attitude, smiting on his breast, and saying, God be merciful to me the sinner, we may take an even lowlier place. There is no help for us, apart from the Redemption that is in Christ Jesus.

FRIDAY, May 8. Job xxxii.

We enter now upon another section of the poem. A new actor appears upon the scene. Elihu, a young man of the family of Ram, had been standing among the spectators on the ash-mound. The decorum of patriarchal life had hitherto compelled him to maintain silence; but now that a pause has come in the cycle of argument, he can no longer contain himself; the more so since he felt that the elder speakers had failed to reach the heart of Job's condition, or explain God's purpose in permitting him to be tried (3).

What a moment that is when we are aware that there is a spirit within us, and that the breath of the Almighty gives us understanding! At such times woe is to us, if we keep silence. It is incumbent on us to utter the words which are boiling over, on the fire of meditation. Let us wait before God for His messages. There is always a mighty difference between taking a class or preaching a sermon, and delivering a message. Only in the latter case can we count on the accompanying power and co-witness of the Holy Spirit.

After a bold introduction, the young speaker waited for a reply. But they did not answer. As he proceeded, such was his sense of God's presence, that he was lifted above the thought of his audience; and he was fearful lest, if he began to think of flattering words, his Maker would soon put him aside. Is not that the reason why many who once spoke as God's messengers are now castaways? May God keep us true to Himself, seeking the honour which is from Him (John v. 44).

SATURDAY, May 9. Job xxxiii.

Job had wished to have an umpire, one to lay his hands on both, and Elihu offers himself in that capacity. On the one hand he, like Job, was dependent on the Almighty for his life (4); and on the other, he was in God's stead, according to Job's wish (6, R.V. marg.).

Elihu next quotes Job's protestations that he was innocent; and shows, that if that were really so, it would put on God the charge of inconsiderateness and injustice. No, he says; there is another way of looking at the whole question. God often withdraws men from the activities of life, and puts them aside, that in the darkness of silence His Holy Spirit may uncover their ears, and seal their instruction (16).

In all of us there is so much self-will and pride (17), and if these were allowed to work out their natural result, there would be nothing to keep us from perishing in the pit (18). Therefore we are afflicted, that we may be kept back. We come face to face with eternity. The question then is, Will we yield our will and way to God, that the excellency of the power and glory may be of God?

What a blessing it is if, in the moment of our lowest depression, God sends us an interpreter, "one among a thousand"! (23). Elihu seems to refer to some son of consolation, like Barnabas. Under the teachings of such, the afflicted soul turns to God with the confession, I have sinned; then there is new tenderness, softness, a bringing back and enlightenment (30), a willingness to be taught (32).

Other Lands.

From Cherchel, Algeria.

CHERCHEL is a nice little sea-side town, with about 4,000 inhabitants, of whom half are French and half Arabs. It lies in a fertile district, and is interesting from its Roman ruins, dating from the time when, as the capital of a flourishing kingdom, it had a population of 150,000.

The journey from Algiers is not void of charm, especially the last part of it, which is done by the stage-coach. We happened to arrive sooner than expected, and consequently did not find our friends at the terminus of the diligence. Two sharp-eyed Arab boys quickly got possession of our luggage. "To the hotel, madame?" "No, the English ladies." "Oh, les demoiselles anglaises. We know them!" exclaimed the smaller of the two porters. "There is a conference at their house to-night, and I will be there." "And I also," added the other eagerly. On arriving we heard that the conference was a weekly meeting, accompanied by lantern-slides bearing upon Bible subjects, and attended by a good number of boys and even young men.

The following day, being a Sunday, we went in the morning to the microscopic "temple." We found Pasteur Sabatier, who has the smallest church and the largest parish in Algeria, a man of large sympathies and enlightened views. He has lived at Cherchel for over twenty years, and has been a friend to the ladies ever since they came to stay. His kind attitude and recognition of their noble aims made it easier for them to live down any prejudice that might have existed against them. They seem to live on a friendly footing with their French neighbours, and are welcomed as sunbeams in the homes of the Arabs.

About a hundred girls—the usual class—assembled that Sunday afternoon for Bible instruction. They come by a quiet back-lane to the garden gate, where they wait until it is opened. Then they flutter in like a swarm of singing birds, with happy countenances as if coming to a treat. They are taught in Arabic, and a little in French. Very amusing it was to see with what proud lifting up of the eyebrows some of the little mites would start a French hymn, as if to say: "Don't you see how clever we are?" What they learn of texts, tunes, and Bible-stories at the Mission they repeat to their parents at home, so unconsciously becoming Gospel-messengers to the older folks.

"SOWING GRUMBLE-SEED."

Wherever we went the women seemed delighted to see us. In one of the homes some descendants of a great Mahommedan saint, whose white tomb is outside the town, were pointed out to me as having been born in the house, and never having left it in their lives.

The story runs that Sidi Brahim, their ancestor, once had his house repaired. A passer by asked one of the workmen what the pay was. "Breakfast and supper," was the answer. "Oh, I would not work for mere food!" replied the other, and went his way. When lunch time came the "holy man," as usual, brought out four tiny plates of honey and four wee loaves of bread, and bid his workmen wash their hands and partake of the meal. All obeyed with the exception of the one who had been spoken to in the morning. He saw with scorn how they all ate until they were satisfied without the honey or the bread having diminished; then he rushed home to his wife, eating all up she had prepared of food, besides a store of dry figs, and yet feeling hungry still.

The frightened woman asked the cause of such a calamity befalling them. On hearing what had happened she tore her anklets off and thrust them into his hands, saying: "Run, run, and ask Sidi Brahim's forgiveness before this hunger spreads to me and the children and we are all ruined." Pardon was graciously granted, but the sower of the grumble-seed, because of refusing to ask forgiveness, became unfortunate, he and all his descendants after him. The four little plates in which the honey would not diminish were built into the outside wall of the house to witness the truth of the story, and two and a-half of them still remain.

Mohammedanism abounds with stories of this and of even more ludicrous nature. Women, who are not allowed to go to the mosques, pray in the tombs of the numerous saints, and in going off, they tie a string or a ribbon to the knocker or a window-bar to remind the saint of their visit.

Many of the poorer class of women suffer great distress, their husbands not providing for their support sufficiently. Some domestic industry might enable them to earn their living in their own homes. In cases of conversion this might effect a great change as to holding their own.

The two missionaries, Miss Reed and Miss Day, have just arrived in England. During their furlough they hope to stir up the interest of mission-friends in behalf of the Arab women.

Four Months in New England.

IN order to get the "helping for us in prayer," which the Apostle Paul so longed for (2 Cor. i. 10-11), let me try fittingly to tell you of my four months' evangelistic work in New England. Set apart by an afternoon of prayer by the dear brethren at Aldersgate Y.M.C.A., I left London at Christmas, and arrived in Boston, Mass., in the first week of the year. There Dr. A. C. Dixon, who seems chosen by God to be an evangelistic leader in America, had begun for a week or two noon meetings in Tremont Temple, and he called me immediately to his side.

We had met first as fellow-workers in Mr. D. L. Moody's World's Fair Campaign in Chicago in 1893, and have been since together in missions in his pastorate at Brooklyn, and now in Boston. The meetings were so encouraging, and their influence so far-reaching through New England, that Dr. Dixon felt justified in continuing them daily without a break for seventeen weeks; and thus I had, in the Lord's leading, the privilege of preaching daily for so long right at the heart of the City of Boston, coupled with afternoon and evening meetings in missions at Clarendon Street, Ruggles Street, and Dudley Street, and at towns in the vicinity—Malden, Haverhill, Brockton, and Manchester.

A CONVERTED EX-CONVICT.

Boston is old ground with me, and many friends of former visits gathered around, giving and, I trust, getting blessing; but I may be pardoned in referring more particularly to one remarkable case of conversion on Washington's birthday, a national holiday in the United States. The big auditorium of Tremont Temple was crowded, Dr. Dixon having arranged a special service with his great church choir to sing the "Hallelujah Chorus." An ex-convict, just out of prison, was passing along Tremont Street, and saw the crowds pouring into the Temple. He thought it was a "patriotic meeting," and found himself inside with the resolution just formed to go back to his life of crime after the Washington meeting. The preacher that day had had a burden on his soul, and he talked not of George Washington, but of the Lord Jesus Christ, the immediate Saviour from sin, from John iii. 16.

This other "penitent thief" looked on the Sufferer on that cross, and said in his soul again: "Lord, remember me." He left the meeting, not now to resume his old life of crime, but, with his sin all gone and the peace and pardon of God all come, to confess his newly-found Saviour among his astonished old companions in evil! That converted ex-convict has been asked already to devote himself to a Christian rescue work in the slums, but—hopeful symptom—hesitates, lest he be "the novice" Paul would not "have hands laid upon suddenly." But the Lord, as in the Apostle's own case, does sometimes lay His own hands on suddenly, and the ordained soul is off on the King's business with steady step on the King's highway, "straightway to preach Jesus in the synagogues that He is the Son of God."

Next week (D.V.) I start for a united mission in the churches in Sydney, Nova Scotia, whence I sail for home, returning to America in the beginning of June for three months at Warren Avenue Church, Boston, and the great Baptist Convention at Martha's Vineyard. My home work in City Temple, Glasgow, has, in my absence, been seen to with blessing by Rev. John Mitchell, of Sutton, Surrey, Mr. Steadman, of Edinburgh, and other friends, led by Mr. Archibald Bell, our missionary. Some of us "must" wander with the Gospel of God, with "continual sorrow in our heart" from absence from home; and very earnest prayer should be going up from the Church especially for all evangelists and foreign missionaries. The need is great, and the time short.

It is a period of great spiritual drought in New England, where Unitarianism and Universalism have blighted the fields of the great revivals under Jonathan Edwards, Whitefield, and Nettleton; and the report of showers of grace falling in Australia and Scotland makes us here feel our dry crackling lips all the more. But the promise holds good, because in it we hold on to, and are held on to, God. "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground" (Is. xliv. 3).

JOHN ROBERTSON.

561, Boylston Street, Boston, Mass., U.S.A.

Notes from Alexandria.

DEAR SIR,—THE CHRISTIAN ministers to me week by week, and keeps me in fellowship with beloved fellow-workers in the various departments of our Lord's vineyard. During the past month, we have all been steadily and harmoniously at work, as the Lord has opened the way. The girls' school, with an average attendance of between forty and fifty Moslem girls, has flourished under the guidance of Mrs. Dickins and Mrs. Upson.

I have visited Kafr El Dowar, the nearest market town outside Alexandria, where thousands of the Fellaheen assemble each Thursday; and decided to cut off the expense of the room there, although I intend, God willing, to continue my weekly visits as heretofore. Many Scripture portions and other books have been sold and distributed in this district. Each evening, except Saturday, the Gospel message has been delivered in the mission house to small but attentive congregations, the responsibility of the meeting resting alternately on Mr. A. T. Upson (who is shortly leaving for a well-earned furlough), and myself.

The Moharram-Bey Hospital has been regularly visited, and both the European and Arabic patients pointed to the Lamb of God. I hope to continue this work among the Mohammedan patients at least twice in the week. These visits are greatly appreciated also by the sisters in charge of the institution. I have two boys' schools open to me for Bible teaching in very needy districts of the city, of which opportunities I hope to avail myself as often as possible. The care of the soldiers of the Wesleyan denomination here also rests upon me. For all these departments I ask the believing prayers of God's people.

May I ask you to join us in hearty thanksgiving to our God for preserving us in this native quarter through seven years' service, and for His special care over us one night recently. We were awakened in the middle of the night, between twelve and one o'clock, by a cry of fire, and found one of the lower rooms of the house in which Mr. Upson's furniture was stored all ablaze. By prompt and energetic action the fire was got under—a few more minutes and I fear the house would have been burned down. The affair is a mystery, as the doors of the room were locked and the keys in our possession. We fear some enemy has done this by means of another key. But our Lord has delivered us. To Him be all the praise.—I remain, yours gratefully,

W. DICKINS.

School for Chiefs' Daughters,

KANDY, CEYLON.

AT the close of our Indian tour, with only one week left for Ceylon, we ran up the mountains to Nuwara Ellya, where Mrs. Ferguson, the wife of the editor of the Ceylon Observer, kindly entertained us, and asked some friends, interested in the spread of the Gospel, to meet us. Among those present was a missionary, Miss Helen P. Phillips, who by this time will have arrived in England for a much-needed rest.

On our return to Colombo we stopped at Kandy, the beautiful. Necessity demanded that we should leave early next morning. We were willing, however, to sacrifice the sights and objects of interest, including "Buddha's tooth," the aim of thousands of pilgrimages; but we would not give up visiting the "High School for Daughters of Kandyan Chieftains."

A few days before, we had met at Colombo Rev. Ireland Jones, who, with his wife of saintly memory, had been the means of supplying a need long felt in Ceylon. Through their effort, the Clarence Memorial School was opened in 1890 under the Church of England Zenana Society. Till then no attempt had been made to provide Christian or other education for such high-caste girls.

The Kandyan chiefs themselves are descendants of the old Kandy aristocracy, and have great influence in Ceylon; many of them have been educated at the C.M.S. College, Kandy, where their sons are also being taught. The idea of presenting their daughters with the same advantages met at first with little favour and many difficulties, for it was not the custom for these high-class little girls to leave home; and besides, many relatives thought education for women altogether unnecessary. God over-ruled these and other obstacles, and now there are nearly sixty pupils in the school.

Mr. Ireland Jones, in desiring us to see the institution for ourselves, expressed his gratitude for the generous interest evinced by the readers of The Christian from the first inception of the work. Every appeal had been responded to with kind contributions. Miss Denyer, a lady who, through bright "Sister Lucy," had been led out into mission-work in the land of spicy breezes, took us by a short cut to the school, an attractive building, but too small for its purpose. It being holiday time, most of the pupils had been taken to their homes, and Miss Bellerby, the principal, profiting by the little lull, had gone away for a little rest and change. Thirteen pupils spent their holidays at the school; from the oldest of them, a fine bright girl, we have just received a letter in which she says: "You will be interested to hear, I think, that I have passed my first teachers' examination, and now I am working hard to get through my second." She is the first Kandyan girl who has gone in for any public examination.

On another page she writes: "Miss Bellerby cannot have many more new girls, as there is no room for them. She is going to have the school enlarged; but I do not think it will be just yet, as she has not enough money. Some of us girls are trying to collect some. We feel as if we must do something to help, as we have been so happy here, and we do want many more girls to come, and to learn about the true God." To meet the demands for admission, an enlargement of the premises is necessary which would cost about £450. Christian friends are earnestly asked to help in this need, "for," says Miss Bellerby, "if we refuse taking in the children, they will be sent to a Buddhist school opened in opposition.

"The school has made a great difference in the early marriages. The parents are beginning to see the advantage of not marrying their daughters until they are about sixteen or seventeen—early enough, but this is much better than twelve or thirteen. Another branch of the work is being brought very strongly before us—the great need of a school for the little boys from three years old to about nine, when they could go to the C.M.S. College, Kandy. Only a few weeks ago a Kandyan chief asked me if I would take his grandson, a child of three years, and keep him until he was nine. We long to open the school, but should want another English lady, a good English teacher, to come and help us. A little bungalow quite close to us could be rented at £40 a year, and would do excellently for the wee boys. This is a grand field for missionary work, for to get hold of the young is more important than anything else. Who will pray, Send me?" W. M.

Cutting the Simplon Tunnel.

ATTENTION has been drawn to the Simplon Tunnel, with all its wonderful machinery and the marvellously ingenious and humane arrangements for prosecuting the vast and dangerous undertaking. Readers of The Christian will be glad to hear of Christian work that is being carried on among the men themselves.

Two visits to the scene of operations have amply convinced me of the reality and value of that work. As I watched the great diligences passing along the Napoleon road, from the little wooden villa where Signor Gervasi lives, I often wondered if they contained those whose hearts would rejoice if they knew that the poor men, whom they could not help seeing in numbers along the road, were being reached and blessed by the simple, fervid proclamation of the "Everlasting Gospel." It is not an easy place at which to break a journey, so, although there may be sympathy—and many a kind friend in England has given noble proof of the same—it is very lonely work for our brave young pastor. Influenza has not spared him this winter, even in his mountain gorge, and the sunless months, October to March, are trying to a son of glowing Calabria.
